VOLUME XXVII.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1337 OF 1911.
June 10, 1914.
Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice N. Chatterjea.
Musammat BIBI BAKHTUN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
Syed AHMAD ISHAQUE AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Document—Genuineness—Co-owner in possession—Intention to cheat co-owners, whether extinguishes title—Ouster—Adverse possession—Prescription.

When a document is held by a Court of Justice to be 'genuine', what is intended to be held, and in fact is held, is that the document was duly executed and that it is an operative document.

Mere mental determination of a co-owner holding possession to cheat his fellow-owners is insufficient in law for extinguishing the title of the other co-owners. His possession being in law possession of all the co-owners, it is not possible to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind, and nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about that result.

Therefore, where there is no ouster or equivalent of ouster, the title is not extinguished

Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A. C. 230; 106 L. T. 836; 81 L. J. P. C. 151, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Saran, dated 7th March 1911, reversing that of the Officiating Sub-Judge at Chapra, dated 31st August 1909.

Moulvi Khurshed Hussain, for the Appellant.

Babu D. L. Kastgir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs by this suit seek a declaration of their title and possession, not in respect of any specific piece of land and 16 annas in that piece of land, but in respect of 1-anna share of Mouza Bhikpur and that the plaintiffs may be declared entitled to get their names registered in respect thereof on expunction of the name of the defendant No. 1 and that their possession may be confirmed. There was an alternative prayer for possession, if it was thought that possession had been lost.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

From his decree an appeal was preferred and was heard by the District Judge of Saran, who has allowed the appeal and passed a decree in accordance with the plaintiffs' prayer.

Defendant No. 1 has appealed from this decree and there are two points raised by her. First, it is said that the document of the 28th May of 1850 was wrongly held to be genuine and, secondly, that, in any case, she is entitled to one-pie share.

To understand these contentions, reference must be made to the state of the family, which is indicated by the genealogical table set out at page 18 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment. From that it appears that there was a common ancestor named Mir Dargahi. He left three sons, Nasar Ali, Fida Hussain and Tasaduq Hussain. Nasar Ali married one Moida. He died in 1859 and his widow in 1880. Fida Hussain, the second son, died in 1855: Tasaduq Hussain, the third son, died in 1860, being survived by his widow Walihan, The defendant-appellant is a sister of Walihan, and it is common ground before us that apart from any dispositions of the property, she, as the sister of Walihan, would have succeeded to the share of Tasaduq. Mir Dargahi, the common ancestor, had three-annas share; and, in the events which happened, one-anna devolved on each of his three sons. It is the case of the plaintiffs that by an instrument of the 28th of May 1850, 2 annas 9 pies, being the one anna of each brother less one pie in each share, were transferred to Moida, the wife of Nasar Ali. This is the instrument which is attacked by defendant No. 1. In my opinion that attack fails, in view of the definite finding of the lower Appellate Court that the transaction was genuine. It was suggested before us that in holding the transaction to be genuine the learned Judge merely affirmed its due execution and, it was said, that was beside the point, because the execution was never put in issue. The other passages in the judgment of the learned Judge, however, as indeed the word 'genuine' itself, clearly show that what was intended to be held, and in fact was held, was that not merely had the document been duly executed, but that it was an operative document, whereby the transfer was validly made in favour of the transferee, Moida. So far, I think, the appeal fails.

But it still remains for me to deal with the one-pie share of Tasaduq which was admittedly not comprised in the transfer of the 28th of May 1850.

In relation to that, as I have already explained, the appellant, as the sister of Walihan, apart from any disposition would be a co-owner with the other persons indicated in the genealogical table who are parties to this litigation.

The learned District Judge appears to have held that this one-pie share of Bibi Bakhtun, the appellant, was extinguished by the law of limitation. But in so holding I think he has not correctly appreciated what that law is in relation to co-owners. It has been recently defined by the Privy Council in the case of Corea v. Appuhamy (1). It is true that is not a decision on the Indian Limitation Act, but it is an exposition of the principles by which all decisions on that Act must be influenced. Lord Macnaghten at page 236 deals with the question involved; and refering to one Iseris, who was a co-owner, who claimed to be 'sole heir', his Lordship said that the "Courts had held that Iseris had entered as 'sole heir', apparently because he had it in his mind from the first to cheat his sisters." And then he proceeds: "Is such a conclusion possible in law? His possession was in law possession of his co-owners. It was not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or some strong equivalent to ouster could bring about that result." There is no finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was an ouster or the equivalent of an ouster. Nor can I find in the judgment any fact which would justify us in remanding the case with a view to ascertaining whether there was an ouster or its equivalent. It appears to me at most to be a case of a co-owner holding possession with a mental determination to cheat his fellow-owner. That is insufficient for the purpose of extinguishing the title of the co-owner and depriving him of the rights that would otherwise exist. From this it follows that as there was no ouster or the equivalent, of an ouster, the title of the appellant Bibi Bakhtun, to this one-pie share has not been extinguished and so far as the judgment of the lower Appellate Court treats it as extinguished, it is erroneous in law.

We must, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court so far as it extends to this one-pie share of the appellant, and the utmost that can be declared in favour of the plaintiffs is a joint title and a right to joint possession with the defendant, Bibi Bakhtun.

The only question remains is as to costs. As there has been a partial success on each side, we think that the proper order is that each party should bear his or her own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed in part.

Hindu Law—Partition—Agreement to divide income only, whether estops division by metes and bounds—Plea of impartibility, how maintained—Agreement to divide conclusive as to status.

The plea of impartibility of a zemindari can succeed only if the parties prove that such a custom existed in the family before the family acquired the zemindari lands. A provision in a deed between the members of a family that only the income of the zemindari is to be divided does not estop them from claiming a division by metes and bounds: such an agreement is not binding on the other members of the family, as it is opposed to the ordinary incidents of joint property.

JUDGMENT.—The first ground taken in this Appeal No. 39 of 1912 is that the District Judge ought to have found the estate to be impartible. We think there are no grounds for so holding. It is alleged for the appellant that the estate was carved out of one of the old Dindigul Polliems which were resumed by Government at the beginning of the 19th century. In 1806 the assessment on the lands forming the estate, which include lands from one of the old Polliems as well as Government lands, was auctioned by Government, and was purchased by the ancestor of the parties who agreed to pay the highest rental. The family has continued in possession ever since, but did not obtain a sanad recognising the permanent character of the tenure until the year 1871. It is admitted that there was no custom of impartibility in the family before they acquired the estate, and it is difficult to see on what basis such a claim could be rested. It is, however, expressly negatived by the fact that in the year 1862 the four brothers who then represented the family partitioned the estate among themselves under Exhibit II (a).

The next question is whether, assuming the estate to have been partible and to have been partitioned, the 1st defendant is entitled to resist the claim for division by metes and bounds because of the provision in Exhibit II (a) that only the income of the semindari is to be divided. Such an agreement has been held not to be binding even on the members of the family who were parties to it. Subbaraya Tavker v. Rajaram Tavker (1). As pointed out in K. Venkataramanna v. K. Brammanna Sastrulu (2), an estate cannot be made subject to a condition which is repugnant to one of its ordinary legal incidents. This is also the principle underlying the provisions of section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act and is not opposed to any rule of Hindu Law. The decision in Kumara Tirumalai Naik v. Bangaru Tirumalai Sami Naik (3) has, in our opinion, no bearing on the present case, as in that case the property had been held to be impartible by the decree of a competent Court.

Under the partition Exhibit II (a), the four bothers divided the property into five shares two of which were assigned to the senior brother, who it was recited was looking after the affairs of the semindari. It is now argued for the respondents that the descendants of the senior brother are not entitled to retain these two shares out of five in the partition by metes and bounds to be now directed. We cannot agree with this contention. Exhibit II (a) was clearly intended to be a final division of the estate and expressly provided that thereafter there should be only a community of friendship between the parties and no community of property or interest and there are other recitals to the same effect. We cannot accept the contention that the extra share was given to the eldest brother merely as wages of management or that it was based on a mistaken notion that the estate was impartible. In our opinion Exhibit II (a) was a family arrangement which was binding on the parties and those claiming under them. Sivagnana Taver v. Periasami (4) and Moro Viswanath v. Ganesh Vithal (5).

The 1st defendant relies on an arrangement referred to in paragraph 8 of the plaint, according to which his father enjoyed two out of four shares in the income payable to one of the brothers, who died in 1893; and contends that under this arrangement he is entitled in partition to add to his share half the share which would have fallen to the deceased. This arrangement was not embodied in writing and is opposed to the provisions of the deed of partition, Exhibit II (a). There is no question of prescription among co-tenants and we think the 1st defendant is not entitled to enhance his share in this way. The decree will be modified accordingly. The 4th defendant will get 7/30ths, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, 7/30ths, plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 and 5th defendant 8/30ths and the family of 5th and 6th plaintiffs 8/30ths of the whole, omitting moveables mentioned in paragraph 2 of the preliminary decree. Each of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 will have separate shares.

As regards the memoranda of objections, we think that having regard to the allegations in paragraphs 15 and 26 of the plaint, the plaintiff is entitled to have an account taken of the properties, if any, acquired by the 1st defendant's father and the 1st defendant with the common income of the estate under his management after the partition of 1862.

As to issue 14, we are not prepared to differ from the District Judge.

Under Exhibit II (a) we think the management of the charity was assigned to the branch of the family represented by the 4th and 1st defendants. Item 2 of schedule E has been found to be charity property and it is governed by the same considerations. The plaintiff claims it as private property and his claim fails. As regards the 6th defendant's appeal (No. 89 of 1912) it is enough to say that his rights under Exhibits A and B are not affected by the decree. In the schedule A to the decree, for the four items mentioned as due to the 6th defendant's father, the debt due under Exhibit 17 (h), which is a renewal of Exhibits 17 to 17 (c), will be substituted. Otherwise the 6th defendant's appeal is dismissed with no order as to costs, otherwise the costs of all the other parties will come out of the estate throughout.

These appeals having been posted "to be spoken" to this day the Court made the following

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, dated the 5th of July 1911.

The plaintiff brought this suit for declaration of his title in a share in a certain Mousa Sankari and for the registration of his name in the Settlement Records in respect thereof. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable. It appears that many years ago the Rohini Ghatwals granted 25 villages as khorposh shikmi ghatwali tenures to the junior members of the family. In course of time these 25 villages were divided amongst the various junior members, and it is common ground that Barras Deo, the common ancestor of the parties, held an eight-annas share in the Mousa Sankari.

Subsequently Settlement proceedings were held under the provisions of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation (Regulation III of 1872). Barras Deo was then dead. The Record of Rights was published on the 13th of May 1904.

The entry so far as it relates to the eight-annas share of Mousa Sankari was taken before the Commissioner.

The dispute before the Commissioner was between Peary Deo, one of the descendants of Barras Deo, on the one hand and certain other members of the family on the other hand.

The Commissioner, by his order dated the 31st of October 1907, directed that the name of Peary Deo should be entered on the record as a khorposhdar and shikmi ghatwal of the eight-annas share of Mousa Sankari. According to the reasons given by the Commissioner, he came to this conclusion on the ground that "Peary Deo is the principal representative of the descendants of the third son of Parsi by that wife," that is, Barras Deo.

Peary having been recorded in respect of the eight-annas in Mousa Sankari, the plaintiff has brought this suit for declaration of his title and amendment of the Record of Rights.

The case has been argued before us solely on the question as to whether the present suit is maintainable, having regard to the provisions of Regulation III of 1872. Section 11 of the Regulation enacts that, except as provided by section 25A, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court regarding any matter decided by a Settlement Officer, but the decisions and orders of Settlement Officers shall have the force of a decree of Court. By section 12 Settlement Officers are given jurisdiction to inquire into, to decide, and to record "any other landed rights to which by law or custom of the country or any tribe any person may have a legal or equitable claim."

Section 14 provides that the Settlement Officer is to give notice that he is about to prepare a Record of Rights, so that all persons may bring forward their claims. The Settlement Officer is, however, directed by the section to inquire into, settle and record all rights or claims, even though such claims or rights are not urged before him.

In addition, there are the provisions contained in sub-sections (1) and (3) of section 25. These provisions, so far as it is necessary to state them for the present purpose, make the Record of Rights conclusive proof of the rights and customs therein recorded, and prohibit the record from being re-opened until a fresh Settlement is made without the previous sanction of the Local Government. On these sections, I think, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is absolutely excluded, except in cases specially provided for in section 25A of the Regulation. Now, in order that the plaintiff's case should fall within the provisions of section 25A, it is essential for the plaintiff to show that he is a zemindar or other proprietor. It is not suggested that the plaintiff is a zemindar. Is he then a proprietor? The Regulation itself contains no definition of a proprietor. But when we consider the nature of the interest claimed, I think that the plaintiff is not a proprietor.

The plaintiff's claim is to a share of a shikmi ghatwali khorposh grant. Rent in respect of this is payable to the ghatwals, and no land revenue is payable direct to the Government, nor is it suggested the land is free from the Government revenue.

Such an interest in land does not, in my opinion, come within the description of a right of "a zemindar or other proprietor."

I think, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is not maintainable. The only remedy the plaintiff has is to apply to the Government, under section 25 of the Regulation, to direct the revision of the Record of Rights. It would appear from the Commissioner's judgment that he decided in favour of Peary Deo on the ground that he was the "principal representative of the descendants" of Barras Deo. The contest before the Commissioner was between Peary on the one hand as the principal descendant of Barras Deo and other members of the family on the other hand. It is nowhere suggested in the judgment of the Commissioner that he meant to give Peary Deo, as the principal representative of the descendants, the whole of the eight annas in Mousa Sankari to the exclusion of other descendants of Barras Deo. However that may be, that will be a matter for the consideration of the Government, if the plaintiff applies to them to direct the revision of the record under section 25. So far as our duties are concerned, all that we can say is that the present suit cannot be maintained in a Civil Court.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The judgment will also govern Second Appeal No. 201 of 1912 which will also be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree, for the reasons indicated by my learned brother. The plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit without re-opening the Record of Rights. Under the provisions of the Regulation, therefore, the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to give him the relief for which he seeks.

JUDGMENT.—Section 16 (2) (b) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is clear against the right of a creditor to have any remedy against the insolvent or his estate or to commence any legal proceedings, except with the leave of the Court, after the insolvent has been adjudicated and his estate has vested in the Official Receiver. It is not alleged here that the first respondent obtained the leave of the Court. In these circumstances he had no right to present this application to the lower Court, and the appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the application being dismissed.

The objection is taken here for the first time. If it had been taken in the lower Court, the Official Receiver would perhaps have joined in the application. The appellant will pay the 1st respondent's costs throughout.

Contract to deliver goods in particular month—Non-delivery till last day of month—Breach of contract—Late shipment—Construction of contract—Party relying upon exception—Measure of damages.

The defendant agreed to deliver to the plaintiff a certain quantity of Rangoon rice in the month of June. The contract provided, inter alia, that no objection would be raised by the purchaser if the delivery of the goods was delayed owing to late shipment at Rangoon. The goods were not delivered on or before the 30th June.

Held, (1) that there was a breach of the contract;

(2) that the term 'shipment' in the agreement included not merely the loading of goods on board the ship but also the starting of the ship;

(3) that the parties intended by the late shipment provision nothing more than this, that the goods should be put on board in such time as to make it possible to have them delivered to the purchaser at Calcutta on the date specified, if the ship started on such a day as to arrive in Calcutta in time; but that if for any reason for which the vendor was not responsible the ship could not start in time and consequently arrived in Calcutta too late to make it possible for the vendor to deliver to the purchaser the goods on the appointed day, the vendor was not to be held liable in damages;

(4) that, hence, it was obligatory on the defendant to establish that the delay was attributable to circumstances for which he was not responsible;

As soon as a contract has been broken, the obligation of the purchaser to take delivery vanishes, he is not bound to take the goods when they are delivered late;

The right measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of delivery originally agreed upon by the parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for damages for breach of contract. The defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff on the 19th February 1909 to deliver 50 tons of Rangoon rice in June 1909 and another 50 tons in July 1909. The contract was in these terms: "We have this day sold to you the undermentioned goods of the following description and condition, namely, one-hundred tons of No. 1 small mill rice of average quality of the season at the time of delivery, at Rs. 3-6 only per Bazar Maund, Bazar Dustoor nett and empty gunnies being packing of the said rice at Rs. 25 per cent. bags. Terms cash before delivery. Deliverable fifty tons in June and 50 tons in July 1909." There was a further clause in the contract to the following effect: "It is hereby likewise agreed that no objection is to be raised by you in the case of the delivery of the goods being delayed by reason of the non-arrival in time of the steamer carrying the goods on account of the shallowness of water at Diamond Harbour, damage to the steam engine, accidents of the sea and other causes not under human control, as also owing to late shipment at Rangoon." The June consignment was not delivered on or before the 30th June. The result was that on the 30th June the plaintiff wrote to the defendant and tendered him the price for the consignment and intimated that if the defendant failed to deliver the rice in question within that date, he would be held liable for the difference of price. On the 6th July, the plaintiff again wrote to the defendant a letter in which he stated that the amount tendered had been refused, and that he consequently claimed damages to the extent of Rs. 510. On the 9th July the defendant replied to these letters. The position he took up was that under the terms and conditions of the contract, the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages for late delivery. The ground on which this defence was taken may be stated in his own words, namely, "that as the deliveries are subject to and controlled by the shipments during the months mentioned in the contract, there can be no question of any particular due date for delivery, and, therefore, no tender is possible on the part of the buyer." The defendant further intimated that the rice was on that date ready for delivery at Howrah Ghat. The plaintiff, however, took no notice of this letter and refused to accept delivery of the rice. As regards the July consignment, on the 30th July the plaintiff wrote again to the defendant and tendered the price thereof. He further stated that if the rice was not delivered in terms of the contract within 24 hours, that is, on or before the last day of July, the defendant would be held responsible for damages. The defendant in answer took up the position that under the terms of the contract the delivery was controlled by and made according to the shipments made at Rangoon during the month for which delivery was mentioned in the contract. On the 3rd August, the plaintiff claimed damages as on the previous occasion. On the next day, the defendant intimated to the plaintiff that the July shipment had arrived at port and was ready for delivery at Howrah Ghat. The plaintiff took no notice of this, and on the 27th September 1909 commenced the present action for damages for breach of contract.

The Court of first instance found that there had been a breach of the contract, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, and estimated the damges at the difference between the contract price and the market rate when the goods were to be delivered. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. He has held that there was no breach of contract and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages. He has further found that whatever the real meaning of the contract might be, the plaintiff should have accepted the goods on the dates on which they were offered to him, as the market price was then the same as on the dates on which the goods were agreed to be delivered.

On the present appeal by the plaintiff, it has been argued that the contract has been broken. To determine the validity of this contention, it is necessary to interpret the contract. It is plain that the goods were to be delivered on or before the 30th June and 31st July 1909 respectively. It is admitted that the goods were not so delivered; prima facie there was thus a breach of the contract. The defendant, however, relies upon the clause already mentioned, which states that no objection would be raised by the purchaser in the case of the delivery of the goods being delayed owing to late shipment at Rangoon. It is plain that as the defendant relies upon the exception, the burden is upon him to establish that the case is covered by the exception upon which he relies. If any authority is needed for this self-evident position, reference may be made to the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Frank Stewart Sandeman & Sons v. Tyzack and Branfoot Steamship Company Limited (1), where Lord Loreburn observed that the burden of proving that the case comes within the exception lies upon the person who sets it up. To make this clause fit in with his case, the defendant seeks to interpret it in the manner following. He argues that according to this claim, liberally construed, he was at liberty to delay the shipment at Rangoon to any day within the month on the last day of which the goods were to be delivered to the purchaser, and that it is immaterial whether the delay was due to avoidable reasons or to circumstances over which he had no control. This construction strikes one as, on the face of it, eminently unreasonable. There has been considerable discussion at the bar as to the meaning of the expression 'late shipment;' but one point is absolutely plain, namely, that the term 'shipment' includes not merely the loading of goods on board the ship but also the starting of the ship. It could never have been intended by the parties that one of them, the purchaser, would be placed absolutely at the mercy of the vendor who was to be at liberty capriciously to delay the shipment of the goods at Rangoon to the detriment of the purchaser. What they clearly intended was that the goods should be put on board in such time as to make it possible to have them delivered to the purchaser at Calcutta on the dates specified if the ship started on such a day as to arrive in Calcutta in time, but that if for any reason for which the vendor was not responsible the ship could not start in time and consequently arrived in Calcutta too late to make it possible for the vendor to deliver to the purchaser the goods on the appointed day, the vendor was not to be held liable in damages. In this view of the matter, it would be obligatory upon the defendant to establish that the delay is attributable to circumstances for which he is not responsible. This indeed is clear from the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Dunn v. Bucknall (2), where it is stated that if a party relies upon an exception to take his case out of the contract, he must prove that the circumstances are not attributable to his negligence. In the case before us, there is no evidence in the record to show that the defendant is not responsible for the delay which actually took place. Indeed, his case has never been that the delay was unavoidable. Before the suit was commenced, as soon as the claim for damages was made against him, he took up the position that under the terms of the contract he was entitled to delay shipment up to the last day of the month in which the goods were to be delivered. This clearly he was not entitled to do upon a reasonable interpretation of the contract. The defendant has clearly failed to bring his case within the exception, and we must accordingly hold that there was a breach of the contract.

The question next arises, whether the plaintiff is entitled to damages. On behalf of the defendant the view taken by the District Judge has been reiterated before us, namely, that inasmuch as the market price had not varied between the dates on which the contract was to be performed and the dates on which the goods were actually offered, the plaintiff was bound to accept them. There is obviously no foundation for this contention. As was pointed out in the case of Behn v. Burness (3), as soon as the contract has been broken, the obligation of the purchaser to take delivery of the goods vanishes; he is not bound to accept the goods when they are delivered late In these circumstances, there can be no question, as was pointed out in the case of Grenon v. Lachmi Narain Agurwala (4), that the right measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of delivery originally agreed upon by the parties. This was correctly accepted as the basis for the determination of damages by the Court of first instance.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—We do not express any opinion on the question whether the lower Courts were right in their view that Exhibits A and XIII do not recognise an irredeemable hereditary anubhavam tenure in the plaint lands themselves as vesting in the 1st defendant.

Assuming that the lower Courts were right in that view and that the 1st defendant had an anubhavam tenure in the lands, his alienation of the lands to the 2nd defendant in 1909 under Exhibit VII put an end to that anubhavam tenure [see Moore's Malabar Law, page 308, and Thoyyan Nair v. Zamorin of Calicut(1)], as the right to enjoy was given only to the 1st defendant and his heirs and as soon as they ceased to enjoy the lands, the right of enjoyment reverted to the grantor even without any express clause in the grant providing for re-entry. The case of Achutha Menon v. Sankaran Nair (2), no doubt, related to karankari tenure, but the reasoning by which it was held that on alienation by the tenant holding under such a tenure the land reverted to the landlord even without an express clause giving the latter a right of re-entry, applies also to anubhavam tenures.

For the above reasons, we dismiss this second appeal with costs.

We cannot go into the merits of this case as all the facts are not before us. Therefore, I limit my observations to the question whether the applicant was entitled to be heard before the District Judge.

I think he has made out his right of appeal to the District Judge, because although section 104, clause (h), excepts from appeal an order directing the arrest of a person in execution of a decree, we must also look at the other sections of the Code. Under section 42, the Court executing a decree sent to it has the same power in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself and the order in executing such decree is subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself. In the present case, the decree of the Small Cause Court was sent for execution to the Court of the Munsif. Now, there would have been an appeal from the order of the Munsif. Then, according to section 42, there would be an appeal from his order as a Court executing a decree. Further, under the provisions of section 145 of the Code, a surety is for the purposes of appeal to be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47 and an order under section 47 is an appealable decree.

Therefore I think that the Rule must be made absolute in so far as the order of the District Judge refusing to hear the appeal is hereby set aside and the matter must be reheard by him.

Pending the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court the petitioner will be released on the same security as before.

The applicant is entitled to his costs one gold mohur.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 189—Ryoti land—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Equitable estoppel, whether creates jurisdiction.

Where the jurisdiction of a Civil Court is barred by section 189 of the Madras Estates Land Act, the fact that the defendant is equitably estopped from raising such an objection cannot give jurisdiction.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kristna at Ellore, in Small Cause Suit No. 59 of 1913.

Messrs. P. Nagabhushanam and M. Purushotham Naidu, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—If the land is jerayati (ryoti) land, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred by section 189 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The Subordinate Judge states that the plaintiff admitted the land to be jerayati, and I must take it to be so.

If the Court had no jurisdiction, the fact that the defendant was equitably estopped from raising such an objection (even if this be so), will not give it jurisdiction.

The petition is dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, 2 (3)—'Certifying or recording', meaning of—Practice—Certifying of part-payments in application for execution—Limitation for certifying.

There is no definition of what certifying or recording under Order XXI, rule 2 (3), of the Code of Civil Procedure is, but the practice in this country is that the decree-holder certifies the part-payments in the application for execution and thereupon the Court, having recorded the whole of the petition, directs execution to issue for the balance.

There is no period of limitation fixed within which the decree-holder must certify, and, therefore, the decree-holder can certify the part-payments at any time and if the part-payment be within time to prevent the decree from being barred, an execution can issue for the balance.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule obtained by the judgment-debtor calling upon the decree-holders to show cause why the order directing execution to issue should not be set aside. The decree was obtained as long ago as the 5th April 1909 and the application for execution was made on the 17th December 1913. Between these two dates on three occasions, as found by the learned Judge of the Court below, the judgment-debtor made part-payments to the decree-holders, namely, on the 6th March 1911, 18th March 1912 and the 21st February 1913. Receipt of each of these payments was endorsed on the back of an office copy of the decree, and thereupon the decree-holders applied on the 17th December 1913 for execution for the balance remaining due under the decree. They stated in their application the fact that there had been part-payments made and asked the Court to issue execution for the balance. The judgment-debtor stated that he did not make any part-payment and that the entries on the back of the copy of the decree rendering such payments were not genuine. There can be no doubt that these part-payments were genuine transactions and the learned Judge came to a correct conclusion when he so decided. The only question is whether these part-payments have been properly recorded in the Court because under the terms of Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (3), Code of Civil Procedure, "a payment or adjustment of a decree, which has not been certified or recorded, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree." There is no definition of what certifying or recording is: but it is quite clear that the practice in this country is that the decree-holder certifies the part-payments in the application for execution and thereupon the Court having recorded the whole of the petition directs execution to issue for the balance. There is no doubt that that is the usual mode of proceeding and that it is not usual that a separate petition is filed merely certifying the part satisfaction of the decree. There is no period of limitation fixed within which the decree-holder must certify and, therefore, the decree-holder can certify the part-payments at any time and if the part-payment be within time to prevent the decree from being barred, then execution can issue for the balance. In this case the last part-payment was on the 21st February 1913 and the execution was applied for on the 17th December of the same year. That was obviously within time. The present Rule, therefore, fails and must be discharged with costs—one gold mohur.

Rule discharged.

Possession of lands for a long series of years without payment of rent in the absence of proof that rent has ever been realized in respect of the lands, leads to the inference that they are held under a rent-free title.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated the 28th February 1910, affirming that of the Munsif, third Court, at Comilla, dated the 22nd February 1909.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of his zemindari title to certain lands, for assessment of fair and equitable rent thereon and for recovery of three years' back rent. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that they held under a nishkar or rent-free title. The Courts below have concurrently held on the evidence that the defendants have been in possession for a long series of years without payment of rent and that the plaintiff has not proved that rent has ever been realised in respect of the lands in suit. The Courts below have inferred from this circumstance that the defendants hold under a rent-free title. This view is clearly right and is supported by the cases to which reference was made in the course of argument: Tareeneepersad Ghose v. Kaleechurn Ghose (1), Dhunput Singh v. Russomoyee Chowdhrain (2), Radhagobind Dass v. Prokash Chunder Dass (3). The appeal consequently fails and the decree of the Court below is affirmed with costs.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court has given the plaintiff a decree such as he claimed. The facts are shortly these: There is a taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1, in the register of the Revenue Authorities. From time to time, separate accounts were opened with the different share-holders of this taluq in respect of specified portions thereof, and ultimately a residuary taluq, which still bears No. 1, was left in the hands of the person who defaulted in the payment of the Government Revenue, the result being that the residuary estate was sold up and purchased by the plaintiff. The defendant denied the title of the plaintiff, and urged that the lands claimed by him did not appertain to taluq Gour Hari Singh, but to a different taluq. The Munsif, amongst others, raised the following issue: "Do the lands in suit appertain to taluq No. 1, Gour Hari Singh?" That issue was understood by that Officer as involving two questions, first, whether the lands claimed appertain to the main estate taluq Gour Hari Singh, as it stood at the time of the Permanent Settlement and, secondly, whether the said lands appertain to the residuary estate taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1, as it was purchased by the plaintiff at the revenue sale. The Munsif held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the lands appertain to the residuary estate, and he remarked that no evidence was adduced by the plaintiff to show that the said lands do not appertain to the separate shares but to the residuary estate which the plaintiff purchased. The Subordinate Judge in appeal thought that it was not necessary for the plaintiff, and indeed the plaintiff could not be in a position, to prove that the lands in question appertain to the residuary share of the taluq that plaintiff purchased and finding upon the amin's investigation that they appertain to taluq Gour Hari Singh, gave the plaintiff a decree. We think, however, that it was not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove in the circumstances mentioned that the lands in suit appertain to taluq Gour Hari Singh as it stood at the time of the Permanent Settlement, for there being separate accounts opened with various other individuals in respect of specified portions of the taluq and there being certain other specified portions of land left as the residuary taluq, and the plaintiff having purchased that residuary taluq it was his duty to prove that the lands in suit appertain to that taluq, that is to say, the residuary taluq, and it was not enough for him to prove that the land formed part of the entire taluq Gour Hari Singh. It will be observed that this was a suit in ejectment and the plaintiff must succeed upon the strength of his own title. Let us suppose for a moment that the lands in suit appertain to the shares in respect of which separate accounts were opened before the revenue sale took place. If the plaintiff succeeds, he would be recovering a decree for the lands which do not belong to him but to some other shares, though within the same taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1. In this view of the matter, it seems to us that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, as it stands at present, is defective and cannot, therefore, be supported. Referring, however, to the issue that was framed by the Munsif, it is quite possible that the plaintiff understood that issue as being confined to the question whether the lands in suit appertained to the whole taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1, and that it had no reference to the further question whether they appertain to the residuary share of the taluq, though it must be stated that the Munsif who tried the case understood it in a different sense. But as we have already stated, it is just possible that the plaintiff understood the issue as an issue confined to the situation of the land as within the whole taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1, and the absence of any proof on his part upon the other question may well be accounted for in that way. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the case should be sent back to the Court of first instance with a view to allow to the plaintiff an opportunity of proving, if he can, that the lands in suit appertain to the residuary share as Taluq Gour Hari Singh No. 1. The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence upon this matter. Costs will abide the result.

Case sent back.

GATTIPALLI GOPAUL CHETTI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Collector's certificate, whether confers title on possessor—Evidence, value of certificate.

A certificate issued by the Collector in respect of immoveable properties situated within the town of Madras is only evidence of revenue registry and affords no title or security as to ownership.

Appeal from the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 11th day of September 1912, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit 144 of 1910.

FACTS.—The houses in suit originally belonged to the father of Kuppammal, the 3rd defendant in the case, and on his death were inherited by her. She had a son R, who died leaving behind him his widow, Kamalammal. During his life-time, R obtained a certificate from the Collector of Madras in respect of one of the suit properties and was in enjoyment of rents and profits of the suit properties. He had also once created an equitable mortgage of the suit properties by deposit of the Collector's certificate and pledging also some jewels. Kuppammal had always lived in Pondicherry. On R's death his widow, Kamalammal, sold the suit properties to the plaintiffs for paying off the liabilities of R. The purchasers then filed the present suit in ejectment, claiming possession of the houses by virtue of the sale-deed in their favour. The defence was that Kamalammal had no title to convey, as the properties belonged to Kuppammal and that the plaintiffs got nothing by the purchase. The plaintiffs replied to this case by saying that though the title had been really in Kuppammal she had acquiesced in R putting himself forward as the ostensible owner of the suit properties and was in consequence estopped from denying the same, and hence their title under the sale was unassailable as they were bona fide purchasers for value after ascertaining that the widow had power to convey. Mr. Justice Wallis, who heard the case, held that the KUPPAMMAL v. GATTIPALLI GOPAUL CHETTI.

Collector's certificate conferred no title at all, but acting upon other evidence in the case held that Kamalammal, the widow, was the ostensible owner of the property with the consent of Kuppammal and that the plaintiffs had acted in good faith and had purchased the properties after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the widow had power to convey the same. He decreed the suit in plaintiffs' favour. The 3rd defendant then appealed.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant:—The Collector's certificate is no evidence of title. It is only evidence of revenue registry. The evidence did not warrant the conclusion of the learned Judge that the widow was an ostensible owner.

Messrs. Short Bewes & Co., for the Respondents:—In the town of Madras the Collector's certificate is the only evidence of title in respect of immoveable properties. The evidence fully warrants the finding of the learned Judge as to ostensible ownership.

JUDGMENT.

WHITE, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Wallis, J., giving the plaintiffs a decree in a suit in ejectment.

One Kamalammal, the widow of one Rangasami Chetti, on 2nd December 1909 purported to convey to the plaintiffs two houses, one house in Thambu Chetti Street and another house in Linghi Chetti Street (Exhibit C). It is not disputed that Rangasami Chetti's mother, one Kuppammal, was the owner of the houses and that his widow had no title to convey. The learned Judge held that Kuppammal (I will refer to her as the mother), who was made a party to the suit, was estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title, since Kamalammal (I will refer to her as widow) was the ostensible owner of the property with the mother's consent, and that the plaintiffs, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the widow had power to make the conveyance, had acted in good faith.

I have had considerable doubt as to whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant a finding that the widow was the ostensible owner with the consent of the true owner, the mother, within the meaning of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In February 1905, Rangasami Chetti obtained the Collector's certificate for the Thambu Chetty Street house. The Judge (and I think quite rightly) does not attach any importance to this incident.

In 1905 Rangasami Chetti borrowed money from the plaintiffs on the security of certain jewels and of the Collector's certificate (described in the deed as the title-deed) for the Thambu Chetty Street house. The transactions leading up to the conveyance are recited in the deed (Exhibit C). It was not shown that the jewels were the mother's and she was not asked about them.

Prior to the execution of Exhibit C, there were negotiations carried on on behalf of the plaintiffs by one Murugappa, their partner, with the object of clearing Rangasami Chetti's liabilities to the plaintiffs. The Judge found that Murugappa knew a great deal more about the transaction than the plaintiffs did. Murugappa was also a relative of Rangasami Chetti's family. According to Murugappa's evidence he went to Pondicherry, where the widow lived, and made an arrangement to which the widow was a party, that money should be raised for the payment of Rangasami Chetti's liabilities by the sale of the two houses to his sister. He stated that a sale-deed was executed, but not stamped or registered. The learned Judge held that secondary evidence of this unstamped document was inadmissible. For the purpose of corroborating Murugappa's evidence, the press copy of the letter alleged to have been written by Murugappa to the widow was put in evidence. Rangasami Chetti died just after this letter was written. The evidence, as to the sending of this letter, was not satisfactory but I am not prepared to differ from the learned Judge's finding that it was in fact sent. Murugappa spoke to a further interview with the widow at Pondicherry, when according to him she promised to send him the title-deeds of the Linghi Chetti Street house.

He also said that, when he asked the widow why she did not come to Madras to act in pursuance of the agreement (apparently the agreement to sell the house to the sister), the widow said, "will you obtain the wife's signature?"

The widow was called and denied all knowledge of any arrangement for the sale to the sister. She also denied that Murugappa had seen her in Pondicherry and told her about her son having mortgaged this property. She admitted his coming to Pondicherry, but said it was to offer condolence on the death of her son.

The learned Judge accepted the evidence of Murugappa as substantially true. I am not prepared to say he was wrong. If Murugappa's evidence was true, I think the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs was sufficient to support the learned Judge's finding as to ostensible ownership by Rangasami Chetti, and after his death by his widow with the consent of the mother.

In my opinion, however, the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs was not sufficient to establish that they took reasonable care to ascertain that the widow had power to make the transfer and that they acted in good faith. They took a conveyance, from a widow and the only document of title was the Collector's certificate for one of the houses which she purported to convey. The certificate of the Thambu Chetti Street house gives the number of the petition (Exhibit B) on which the certificate was granted. It is then stated that the registered proprietor was Rangasami Chetti's grandfather and that Rangasami traced title as the grandson through a daughter (the mother) who was dead. As a matter of fact she was alive. The plaintiffs knew this and if they had examined the petition, they would have been made aware there was an outstanding life-estate.

As regards the Linghi Chetty Street house, the plaintiffs did not receive even the Collector's certificate. The conveyance, Exhibit C, in fact recites that the title-deeds of the Linghi Chetti Street house were not in the widow's possession; and that she did not know where they were. The conveyance also recites an agreement by the widow to execute to the plaintiffs a bond of indemnity in respect thereof, but the bond does not seem to have been executed.

The learned Judge relies on the plaintiffs' knowledge that the mother was arranging for the sale of these houses by Rangasami Chetti to his sister and the fact that the widow subsequently urged the plaintiffs to get the widow to sell direct to them. With all respect, I do not think this is enough to relieve the plaintiffs from the obligation of making further inquiry than they had in fact made. It seems to me that the arranging was done mostly by Murugappa Chetty, who, it is not unlikely, being a relative of Rangasami Chetti's family, knew all about the real state of affairs, though, it may well be, the plaintiffs did not. Murugappa, however, was, I think, the plaintiffs' agent throughout, and the plaintiffs cannot plead their own ignorance if Murugappa knew all about it. Further. I do not think it can be said there was any inquiry upon the plaintiffs' part and on the part of the mother to get the widow to convey to the plaintiffs. All that Murugappa said as to this was that when he asked the mother to go to Madras to act in pursuance of the agreement with the sister, the mother said, "will you obtain the widow's signature?"

Assuming that Murugappa did not know the real state of affairs, I do not think it can be said that the plaintiffs took reasonable care to ascertain that the widow had a title to convey.

I would allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiffs sue in ejectment claiming possession of two houses under Exhibit C, a conveyance from Kamalammal, widow of Rangasami. The learned Judge has held, and it is not disputed here, that the title to the property was never with either of these two persons, but was with the third defendant, Rangasami's mother. He, however, decided in the plaintiffs' favour with reference to section 41, Transfer of Property Act, on the ground that the 3rd defendant held out Rangasami before his death and his widow afterwards to the plaintiffs' agent, the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, as the ostensible owner of the property. The questions are, first, whether the learned Judge's findings of fact entail his legal conclusion, next, whether these findings are justified by the evidence.

The first incident referred to by the learned Judge was treated by him as unimportant and, therefore, can be dealt with shortly.

It is the obtaining by Rangasami on the 10th February 1905, more than 18 months before the first dealing with the property, of Exhibit D, the Collector's certificate, for one of the two houses in suit in his name. There is no evidence that the 3rd defendant was aware of, or had any connection with, his doing so. Even if she had, she lived in Pondicherry and might well have allowed his registry to enable her son to collect the rents more conveniently. In fact Exhibits I, II, III and IV show that he claimed transfer on the false ground of inheritance, suppressing the fact of the 3rd defendant's existence. Generally, as to enjoyment, there is the evidence of the plaintiffs' 4th witness, a tenant, and the 3rd defendant.

They agree that on one occasion at least, the 3rd defendant obtained a payment on account of rent on producing Rangasami's authority, Exhibit H; and the 3rd defendant says that Rangasami was collecting and spending the rents. But there is no reason for doubting her evidence that she has a substantial income from other sources. There is nothing to show that Rangasami ever claimed ownership to her knowledge in this connection. The most this entailed is that he asserted it to the tenants for the purpose of collecting rents; and, if she allowed him to do so, that gives very little support to the case of holding out as full owner, which the plaintiffs have to establish.

Next, in 1905 Rangasami, who according to the 3rd defendant, was extravagant, borrowed from the plaintiffs on the security of some jewels. Some of the jewels were sold, and the proceeds credited towards the debt. In 1906 a pro-note was executed, the amount due being still secured by pledge of the unsold jewels and also by an enquitable mortgage of the suit property. So far there is no suggestion that the 3rd defendant had any anything to do with the transactions, except (1) that the jewels were hers and (2) that she allowed Rangasami to have one house in his name and use the title-deed. But the 3rd defendant was not questioned as to the ownership of the jewels, and there is nothing regarding it, except the 2nd plaintiff's reference to a statement made to him by Rangasami. Moreover, when the jewels were eventually returned on the discharge of the debt by the sale under Exhibit C, they were not returned to the 3rd defendant, but to the vendor, the widow. As regards the title-deed, Exhibit D, it was for one house only; and, though (according to the 2nd plaintiff) Rangasami sent for it from Pondicherry, there is no evidence to show in whose custody it was there.

Regarding the next stage, the preliminaries to Exhibit C, there is a conflict of evidence The plaintiffs' 2nd witness is related to the 3rd defendant's family and he is a partner of the plaintiffs. He says that he went to Pondicherry and induced Rangasami to execute an agreement to sell the two houses and two jewels to his sister, Nagalakshmi, in order to pay the plaintiffs' debt and that the 3rd defendant was present throughout. Afterwards the witness wrote to Rangasami, Nagalakshmi and one Manikkam Pillai, since deceased. Later, in reply to a letter from the 3rd defendant, he wrote to her the original of Exhibit F, a press copy. It is on the 3rd defendant's complicity in this arrangement that the plea of holding out by her is mainly based.

First as to the legal aspect of this evidence, if it is accepted, section 41, Transfer of Property Act, is applicable when the transferor is the ostensible owner and the transfer is made with the consent of the real owner. Such consent may, no doubt, be either to the particular transfer or generally to any transfer which the ostensible owner may make. But there is nothing in the present case to show that the 3rd defendant's consent was of the latter class or extended to more than the transfer then under consideration. That transfer and the representations involved in it were not to the plaintiffs or any possible purchaser, but only to Nagalakshmi; and the representations (if any) to her could not affect the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, their agent, since their concern was only to get the money due to them, not with the manner in which it was obtained. This part of their case cannot be put higher with reference to Exhibit F. So far they have nothing on their side.

But in fact this part of their case is inadequately proved, and the learned Judge has found in its favour, perhaps because he throughout overlooked the fact that only the plaintiffs' 2nd witness tells the whole story and he is not independent. It is, therefore, unsafe to act on his statements, which the 3rd defendant contradicts in toto, without corroboration. It is further ground for suspicion that the 2nd plaintiff, his principal, knew nothing of the 3rd defendant, of her part in the negotiations, or of correspondence with her. Then again, each item of documentary corroboration relied on is either inadmissible or inconclusive. There was, according to the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, a letter from the 3rd defendant to him. But she denied it, and it is said that the writer, Thangavelu, cannot be identified. If it were clear, as the learned Judge held, that Exhibit F, the reply to the 3rd defendant, had been written and despatched, as the plaintiffs' 2nd witness alleges, that would be material. But there is only the evidence of the plaintiffs' 4th witness, the plaintiffs' 2nd witness's gumashta, to corroborate his own on the point and according to them the original of Exhibit F was not despatched to the 3rd defendant, Kuppammal, but to one Kuppuswami Chetty, her relative, by mistake; and Kuppuswami is not called to produce it or speak to its receipt. If, therefore, it was written on the date indicated by its position in the press letter book, there is still nothing to fix the 3rd defendant with knowledge of it, or to exclude the possibility of its having been created to support a fraudulent claim. Exhibit G, a letter from Manikkam Pillay above referred to, mentions the arrangement with Nagalakshmi, but not the 3rd defendant and it in no degree supports her connection with the transaction. Though a cover is produced with this letter, there is no security beyond the plaintiffs' 2nd witness's evidence for its having been written on the date it bears, since Manikkam was, according to the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, alive till after this suit was filed. Lastly the plaintiffs no doubt summoned Nagalakshmi to produce the agreement between her and Rangasami, and could not give secondary evidence of it, because the plaintiffs' 2nd witness described it as unstamped. But neither Exhibit F nor Exhibit G mention any written agreement; and the existence of one, therefore, rests on no better foundation than the plaintiffs' inability to adduce evidence as to its contents and the statement of the plaintiffs' 2nd witness —which it is required to corroborate. The result is that the documentary corroboration of the plaintiffs' 2nd witness's evidence is deficient. The oral evidence to corroborate him is given by the plaintiffs' 3rd witness alone. He is a relative of the 3rd defendant. But the character of Exhibit B, to which he obtained Rangasami's signature as a formal acknowledgment of his indebtedness, indicates that he was acting in the plaintiffs' interest. He described a conversation with the 3rd defendant. But, as he eventully admitted that he heard her say nothing as to the ownership of the property, he added nothing to the plaintiffs' case. In conclusion the plaintiffs have not explained their omission to call Kamalammal, their vendor, who is referred to by the plaintiffs' 2nd witness as having consulted with the others. In these circumstances the evidence of the plaintiffs' 2nd witness is not adequately corroborated and accordingly this part of the case cannot be held proved.

Rangasami died on the 18th September 1909, the alleged date of despatch of Exhibit F. His widow, as the plaintiffs' 2nd witness says, quarrelled with the 3rd defendant and left Pondicherry. After she did so, he went to remonstrate with the 3rd defendant for her failure to come to Madras, to act in pursuance of her agreement with Nagalakshmi. This is unintelligible, since it is inconsistent with the plaintiffs' case that she had actively concealed her own ownership and had held out Rangasami as owner. According to the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, she first said she would have come but for Rangasami's illness and afterwards that Kamalammal could sign the document to be executed. She also, according to the plaintiffs' 2nd witness, promised to send him the title-deed for the house not covered by Exhibit B, putting him off for the time being. This attracts suspicion, because there is nothing as to further attempts to get the title-deed from her; and Exhibit C says that its whereabouts are not known. The learned Judge has relied on the reference to Kamalammal as a continuation of the previous holding out of Rangasami. But the evidence as to this conversation is, as pointed out, improbable and, as it is given by the plaintiffs' 2nd witness alone and is contradicted by the 3rd defendant, it cannot be accepted. The sale-deed, Exhibit C, was executed by Kamalammal on the 2nd December 1909. As she had quarrelled with the 3rd defendant and was to regain two jewels by executing it, no presumption arises in favour of her disinterestedness. The conclusion on the whole case must be that the facts alleged by the plaintiffs have not been proved, and that, if they had been, only the last portion of them, the reference of Kamalammal's signature, could have entailed the legal consequence claimed.

It is then unnecessary to deal with the question whether the good faith and reasonable care postulated by the proviso to section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act have been established. It would be material, first, that the plaintiffs never saw any title-deed under which Rangasami could be supposed competent to deal with one of the houses. Next, Exhibit D, which covers the other, is only the Collector's certificate of revenue registry and could afford little or no security as to ownership. The learned Judge observes that a registration search would have disclosed nothing, and that is probably the case. But the direction in which a purchaser's inquiries might and should have been made was towards the circumstances in which and the allegations on which Exhibit D was obtained. If such inquiries had been made, Exhibits I—IV would have been forthcoming, as they have been to the 3rd defendant, the number of the connected registration case being specified in Exhibit D itself. The plaintiffs would have seen that Exhibit D was obtained by suppression of a material fact, the 3rd defendant's existence. In any case, therefore, it would be impossible to hold that the requirements of the proviso were complied with.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

HARA CHANDRA MAJUMDAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Maharaja RADHA KISHORE MANIKYA BAHADUR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Possession, suit for—Assessment of rent—Addition to holding—Maintainability of suit—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 52.

A suit for possession on the allegation of dispossession by the defendant, or in the alternative for assessment of rent, where the land in suit is not part of the original holding but is subsequently acquired and treated as an addition to the original holding, is not maintainable, as not being framed under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal against the decree of the first Subordinate Judge of Noakhali, dated the 1st February 1910, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, at Feni, dated the 18th June 1909.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Birendra Chandra Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff sought to recover possession of a tank on the allegation that the defendant dispossessed him in the year 1898. There was an alternative prayer for assessment of rent.

The defendant alleged that plaintiff had never been in possession, that the tank had been excavated by his ancestor on land which formed part of his holding, and that his ancestor had by paying the capitalised value of the rent to the landlord acquired a right to hold the land rent free.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff's allegation of dispossession was false, and that defendant and his ancestor had been in possession for upwards of 50 years. He, therefore, refused the prayer for possession. He was, however, of opinion that the defendant was liable to pay rent for the tank, for he found that it previously formed part of the mal land of the estate and disbelieved the defendant's story of payment of a premium on the capitalised rent and acquisition of a right to hold it rent-free thereby.

He also found that the tank had been dug with the permission of the plaintiff's predecessor and that defendant's possession was not adverse to the plaintiff prior to 1899. He further found that the tank was not on land forming part of the defendant's original holding.

He accordingly assessed the land to rent.

On appeal only two points appear to have been argued before the Subordinate Judge, viz., (1) that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the land was mal, (2) that the claim was barred. The learned Subordinate Judge disposed of these contentions by remarking as to the first, that it was admitted that the land was mal and virtually admitted that rent was paid for it, as payment of the rent of the holding was not denied; and as to the second, that the defendant held the land as appertaining to his jote, so his possession could never be adverse, and that he had in fact never asserted a rent-free title.

He found, as a fact, that the defendant's ancestor had acquired the land either by encroachment or by the landlord's implied permission, as the latter had given permission to excavate a tank. His findings taken together amount to this that the land was not part of the original holding, but was subsequently acquired and treated as an addition to the original holding.

On this appeal the learned Pleader for the appellant has advanced two arguments only: (1) that the suit must fail as plaintiff has not proved his possession within 12 years of the suit, (2) that the suit is premature, for as the plaintiff's ancestor had given permission for the tank to be dug and rent had never been paid or demanded, and the tank still exists, the purpose of the grant has not been exhausted.

The first point needs no further comment than this, that the claim for possession has been dismissed and the appeal is against a decree for assessment of rent.

As to the second point, it need only be remarked that it was never the defendant's case that there had been a grant and no issue was framed to deal with any such question. The defendant's case was that he had redeemed the rent by paying the capitalized value of it, a case which has been disbelieved.

The real difficulty in the plaintiff's way is in the frame of the suit. His case now is that the land was not part of the original holding but was added to that holding by encroachment. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that it was added to and treated as part of the holding. In that view of the facts the suit should have been framed as one under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

To this the plaintiff's Pleader replies that the facts found are such as it would have been necessary to find if the suit had been framed as one under section 52. The obvious answer to this argument is that the allegations in the plaint are not the allegations that would be made in a suit under section 52, and if the suit had been properly framed as one under that section, the defendant might have taken a different line of defence and put the plaintiff to proof of the extent of the encroachment.

In the circumstances the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

A dakhl-dihani of proprietary rights cannot amount to dispossession of the ex-proprietor from his ex-proprietary rights in his sir, nor does the subsequent proprietor's collection of rent from the ex-proprietor's sub-tenants in possession of the sir, not by some overt act but in the background, amount to such dispossession.

An ex-proprietor retaining possession of his sir since the date of sale of his proprietary rights can claim ex-proprietary rights in respect of the sir at the time of mutation proceedings, even though they take place after more than a year from the date of the transfer.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(March 30th, 1914).—The land now in question was formerly in proprietary possession of the husband of the appellants. It was admittedly his sir and when his proprietary rights were on the 29th May 1911 transferred by dakhil-dihani to the respondent, ex-proprietary rights in his favour admittedly accrued. His widows now apply under section 36, Land Revenue Act, for a declaration of their ex-proprietary rights. Their claim was allowed by the Court of first instance and a rent of Rs. 12-1-6 fixed. This decision was, however, reversed by the Deputy Commissioner. He found that as the suit was brought on the 12th June 1912 and that as respondent had in the meantime collected rent from the sub-tenants who cultivated the land, the appellant had been for over a year out of possession and was not entitled to recover possession or to have a declaratory decree passed in their favour. This decision was upheld by the Commissioner. There is an obvious mistake in this finding. The dakhl-dihani of proprietary rights could not possibly amount to dispossession of the appellants' husband from his ex-proprietary rights; nor was it claimed by respondent himself that it did amount to dispossession. What he did claim was that the collection of rent from the sub-tenants amounted to dispossession. Now the rabi rent of 1911 was due to the former proprietor and not to the respondent. The first rent that respondent was entitled to collect was the rent of the kharif and this could not have been collected till November, so that a year had certainly not passed after dispossession according to the respondent's own claim.

There does not, however, appear to me to have been anything of the nature of a distinct dispossession which would give a cause of action for suit under section 108 for recovery of possession. Dispossession cannot be effected by collecting rent in the background from sub-tenants who also held other land from the respondent. It must be by means of some overt act which brings prominently to notice of the persons dispossessed the fact that adverse rights are being exercised. I find no evidence whatsoever of any such overt act. Appellants have a right of collection of the arrears due from their sub-tenants for three years, and so far as the record shows there is nothing which brought prominently to their notice the fact that their right of collection was being interfered with. I do not think that it can be held that in this case appellants have been dispossessed. As their initial ex-proprietary rights are admitted I would allow this appeal, cancel the order of the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner and restore that of the Court of first instance. Costs on respondent. Pleader's fee, Rs. 15.

FAKHRUDDIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Lease for certain purpose—Lessee's act in pursuance of purpose of lease—Landlord bound by lessee's act.

Where a lessee holds land from the landlord for a certain purpose and does any act in pursuance of that purpose the landlord is bound by that act, although that particular act may not be mentioned in the lease as one which the lessee is entitled to do.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 11th August 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh, dated 25th March 1913.

FACTS.—The defendant landlord gave certain land on lease to one Mr. Chapman for the purpose of constructing a canal or drain thereon. Mr. Chapman constructed the canal, acquiring for that purpose some under-proprietary land of the plaintiff and giving him in exchange some other land comprised in his lease. Some time after this, the defendant issued in respect of the land so given in exchange a notice of ejectment against the plaintiff, who contested it on the ground that he was not liable to ejectment as the land was his under-proprietary tenure. But the defendant pleaded that the land had not been so given in exchange and that even if it had been so given, he was not bound by this particular act of Mr.

Chapman, as the latter was merely a lessee and not entitled to give the land in question with any rights to the plaintiff. It was found by the lower Courts as a question of fact, that the land was given in exchange for the plaintiff's under-propietary land acquired by Mr. Chapman in the course of construction of the canal. Thus the only question for decision was whether the defendant was bound by Mr. Chapman's act.

Pandit Balraj Sahay, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It is urged that Mr. Chapman, who was merely a lessee, was not entitled to give the land in question with any rights to the respondent. Mr. Chapman occupied respondant's under-proprietary land for the purpose of an improvement on the property and I have no hesitation in holding that the talukdar is bound by his act in giving other land in exchange. The question as to whether there was an exchange is one of fact. There is no ground for interference by this Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Landlord and tenant—Contribution, right of, founded on justice, equity and good conscience—Principle—Contribution for excess over one's share—Liability limited only to one's share—Over-payment good defence—Suit for contribution—Decree, how to be framed.

The right of contribution has its foundation in, and is controlled, by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It does not arise from contract, although it has sometimes been based on the theory of an implied contract for contribution supposed to exist between parties jointly liable ex contractu. The principle is that one who has discharged a common liability can recover from his co-obligors only for the excess that he has paid over his share, and each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his share of the common debt or obligation. No contribution can be claimed against a person who paid more than his share of the debt. It is not necessary that the entire debt should have been satisfied by the plaintiff, but he must establish that he has paid more than his share of the joint liability. In a suit for contribution, the liabilities of the different parties, plaintiffs and defendants, must be separately ascertained. a joint decree cannot be made in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants.

X, Y, and Z are co-sharer landlords, each of whom collects his share of the rent separately X obtains a decree for rent against A, B, and C. Similar decrees are obtained by Y and Z against the same set of tenants. A satisfies the decree of X, B that of Y, and C that of Z. In a suit for contribution brought by A against B and C in respect of payment made by him to satisfy the decree of X, it is open to B and C to plead non-liability on the ground that they have discharged a liability which would otherwise have fallen upon A under the decrees of Y and Z.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by one of the defendants in a suit for contribution. The circumstances under which the present plaintiff seeks relief are somewhat complicated; but the facts essential for the appreciation of the question of law raised before us may be shortly stated. There were three sets of plaintiffs, who for the sake of brevity may be called X, Y and Z, and who instituted a suit for rent against a number of defendants. One of these defendants was the present plaintiff. Another defendent was the husband of the present appellant, whose estate is now represented by her as the executrix under his Will. A decree was drawn up in this suit for rent, under which the tenant defendants became liable to the plaintiffs for a large sum of money. The decree, however, specified the extent of the relief to which the plaintiffs X, Y and Z were entitled as amongst themselves. It may be observed incidentally that the decree was drawn up in this form, because the landlords were accustomed to collect rent in their respective shares separately. But as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Raja Pramada Nath Roy v. Raja Ramani Kanta Roy (1), that did not stand in the way of a suit by all the landlords for a joint decree against all the defendants. After this decree had been drawn up in favour of X, Y and Z, X proceeded to execute the decree against one of the defendants, Y against another and Z against a third. The result was that the present plaintiff satisfied the claim made in execution by one of the decree-holders, and the husband of the present appellant similarly satisfied the claim made by another decree-holder. The plaintiff now asserts that he has paid more than his share of the aggregate liability under the decree and is accordingly entitled to seek contribution from all the defendants to the original suit. The present appellant contends that her husband had also paid more than his share of the total liability under the decree, and that consequently no right of contribution can be claimed against her as his representative. This defence has not found favour with the Court below. The District Judge seems to have thought that there were separate decrees in favour of the different sets of landlords whom we have named X, Y, Z, and that it was not open to the present appellant, whose husband had satisfied the claim of one of these decree-holders Y, to assert in answer to the claim for contribution by the plaintiff, who had satisfied the claim made by the other decree-holder X, that he had made a payment in excess of his own liability and was consequently not liable to contribution. In our opinion this view cannot be supported.

In the first place, there was only one decree in the suit for rent. No doubt, that decree specified the extent of relief to which the different sets of plaintiffs were entitled. But the liability of the defendants was joint and several. Consequently, if any one of the defendants to the original suit satisfied more than his share of the liability, no claim for contribution could be made against him by any other co-sharer. It may be conceded that if he had made a payment in excess of his own share and wanted relief against his co-debtors, he was bound to bring a suit for contribution against them. But so long as he did not actively seek relief against his co-debtors, he was entitled to plead in answer to a claim for contribution by a co-debtor that he had discharged his liability and could not be called upon to contribute to the original debt. The contrary view cannot possibly be supported on principle.

In the second place, assume, as the respondent contends, that there were in essence three decrees in one sheet of paper in favour of three different sets of landlords, X, Y and Z, the question still remains whether satisfaction, by one of the joint debtors, of the claim of one of the decree-holders could not be pleaded in answer to a claim for contribution by a co-debtor who had satisfied another decree in favour of another landlord. The position may be thus re-stated for the sake of clearness. X, Y, and Z are co-sharer landlords, each of whom collects his share of the rent separately. X obtains a decree for rent against A, B and C. Similar decrees are obtained by Y and Z against the same set of tenants; A satisfies the decree of X, B that of Y, and C that of Z. If a suit for contribution is brought by A against B and C, in respect of payment made by him to satisfy the decree of X, is it open to B and C to plead non-liability on the ground that they have discharged a liability which would otherwise have fallen upon A under the decrees obtained by Y and Z? Clearly, the answer should be in the affirmative. If a defence like this were not available, the result would be that every joint debtor who makes a payment in satisfaction of the joint debt must have recourse to a suit for contribution; if he omits to seek relief by way of contribution, he does so at his peril. This view was not accepted by this Court as well-founded on principle in the cases of Gogun Chand Dut v. Huri Mohun Dut (2) and Gajadhar Mahto v. Raghubar Gope (3). When, as here, or as in the hypothetical case just mentioned, the judgment-debts satisfied are closely connected and arise out of the same or similar transactions, there is no good reason why in a suit by one of the joint-debtors for contribution, the defence should not be allowed to the co-debtors that they had discharged a similar liability which would otherwise have fallen upon the claimant. In our opinion, the contention of the respondent is based upon a misapprehension of the nature and purpose of a suit for contribution. The right of contribution has its foundation in, and is controlled by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It does not arise from contract, although it has sometimes been based on the theory of an implied contract for contribution supposed to exist between parties jointly liable ex contractu. Every joint debtor who has been compelled to pay more than his share of the common debt, has the right of contribution from each of his co-debtors. The principle is that one who has discharged a common liability can recover from his co-obligors only for the excess that he has paid over his share, and each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his share of the common debt or obligation; hence, it follows as a corollary that no contribution can be claimed against a person who has paid more than his share of the debt. It is not necessary that the entire debt should have been satisfied by the plaintiff, but he must establish that he has paid more than his share of the joint liability. As soon as the plaintiff establishes this, he becomes entitled to contribution from every one of the joint debtors who has not paid up to the full extent of his share of the liability. In a suit so framed, the liabilities of the different parties, plaintiffs, and defendants, must be separately ascertained; a joint decree cannot be made in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants, because that would be contrary to the principle that each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his liability; a joint decree against the defendants in a contribution suit would render necessary a succession of contribution suits. Tested in the light of these principles, the claim of the respondent against the appellant proves entirely unsustainable, for it has not been disputed that the husband of the appellant paid more than his share of the liability, and that is a complete answer to the claim of the plaintiff.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside in so far as the present appellant is concerned, and the suit dismissed with costs against her in all the Courts.

This judgment, it is conceded, will govern the other two appeals (Nos. 1644 and 1624 of 1912) in which similar decrees will be drawn up.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of an application made by Madhusudan Das for Probate of a document said to be the Will of Raghunath Das Brajabasi. Radhamohan Das was the Mohunt of the Lohaganj Akhrá. On the 6th June 1903 in consideration of Rs. 12,000 he transferred the whole of the Asthal properties (including the right of performing the debsheba) by way of usufructuary mortgage to the Maharaja of Nattore for a period of 40 years, the Maharaja making an allowance to support the debsheba. There was also an ekrarnama of even date, to which we need not more particulary refer. Raghunath Das, claiming to be the successor of Radhamohan, filed a suit in forma pauperis (No. 77 of 1905) against the Maharaja to set aside the mortgage, except as to any payments properly made on account of the Asthal. The plaintiff obtained a decree and the Maharaja appealed to this Court. That appeal (No. 371 of 1906) came on for hearing and on 2nd June 1910 this Court delivered judgment and ordered a remand for the ascertainment of certain amounts. The findings of the lower Court have now been returned and the appeal is ready for final disposal.

On the 9th July 1911, however, Raghunath Das died. He is alleged to have executed a Will the day before his death, and that is the document now propounded by Madusudan Das, the executor therein named. He applied for Probate or in the alternative for Letters of Administration. The District Judge has refused his application on the ground that the document is not a Will of which Probate can be granted. Madhusudan Das has appealed and his appeal is No. 169. To that there are cross-objections by Naga Behari Das, who claims to have succeeded Raghunath Das as Mohunt, that the District Judge was wrong in not holding that he had a locus standi in the Probate proceeding and in not awarding him costs. The Maharaja, who was definitely found by the District Judge to have no locus standi, has filed a cross-appeal, No. 195.

The real question between the parties is, who is entitled to be substituted in place of Raghunath Das as respondent in Appeal No. 371 of 1906; but that cannot be determined in these appeals. The only question before us is whether the document propounded is a Will of which Probate can be granted. If it is, the case would have to be remanded to the District Judge for inquiry into the genuineness of the document, which is disputed. We are, however, of opinion that the decision of the District Judge is correct. The learned Pleader for the appellant Madhusudan Das relied on the case of Behary Lall Sandyal v. Juggo Mohun Gossain (1) and a number of decisions following upon it, which establish the proposition that on a bona fide application for Probate or Letters of Administration the Court will not go into questions of title, with reference to the property of which the deceased purported to dispose or in respect of which he died intestate. That is a proposition which cannot be gainsaid, but that is not the question before us. What we have to determine is whether this document is really a Will. A careful perusal will show that it is not. Raghunath Das by this document purported to appoint the minor Madan Mohan Das as his successor on the gaddi, and to make over to him as Mohunt all the properties of the Asthal and the right of performing the debsheba. Raghunath Das did not by that document purport to deal with any property of his own. It is clear from his petition to sue in forma pauperis that he had none. The petition also for Probate or Letters of Administration makes mention only of the debuttar properties. The case appears to be indistinguishable from Chaitunya Gobinda Pujari Adhikari v. Dayal Gobinda Adhikari (2) and we are content to follow that ruling.

As for Letters of Administration there is distinct authority that they cannot be granted in respect of properties held by a person in his capacity of Mohunt. See Mohunt Jib Lal Gir v. Mohunt Jaga Mohan Gir (3) in which the case of Ranjit Singh v. Jagannath Prosad Gupta (4) was distinguished, and Parsania v. Hari Charan Das (5). We agree with those rulings, and the case distinguished is equally distinguishable from the present.

The Maharaja does not press his appeal, nor Naga Behari Das his cross-objections.

Both appeal and cross-objections are dismissed. We leave the respective parties to bear their own costs.

Contract—Lease and sanad by Government—Resumption for public purposes—"Public purpose," meaning of—Erection of dwelling houses for Government officials, whether public purpose

A lease and a sanad granted by the Government contained a power of resumption at any time for "public purposes" upon certain terms as to notice and compensation. The Government gave notice to resume the lands in order to erect dwelling houses which they could offer to Government officials at adequate rents for their private residence, as suitable houses could not be easily obtained, though it was shown that it was not impossible to obtain quarters of some kind:

Held, that the term "public purpose" includes a purpose in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interests of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned and that as the scheme of the Government is one which will redound to public benefit by helping the Government to maintain the efficiency of its servants, it is a "public purpose" within the meaning of the contracts contained in the lease and the sanad.

Appeals from two judgments and decrees of the High Court of Bombay, dated the 5th of September 1911, reported in 12 Ind. Cas. 871, affirming the judgments and decrees of the High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 11th of April 1910.

FACTS.—A lease and sanad were respectively granted to the appellants of certain premises and lands in the town of Bombay by the East India Company, with the stipulation that the Company, their successors or assigns had the power of resuming them for a public purpose. By 21 and 22 Victoria, Chapter 106, section 1 (1858), the rule of the East India Company was terminated and all property and benefit of all contracts to which the Company was entitled vested in the Crown. In 1908 rents of houses in respectable quarters of Bombay became very high, and the officials whose salaries were not very large felt the difficulty of keeping up appearances to command respect from the Indians who were impressed by a show of diginity. The Government of Bombay thereupon desired to build a certain number of houses to be let out to the officials at a reasonable rent, and gave notice to the appellants for the mutation of the parcels of land in their possession. The appellants challenged the bona fides of the Government, as they stated that constructing any buildings for the Bishop of Bombay and his domestic Chaplain and the Senior Chaplain of the Scottish Church for their personal use and accomodation was not a public purpose, nor was the building of bungalows for the officials an object which concerned the public utility. The Government instituted a suit for the possession of aforesaid lands. The High Court (original side) decided that building for the aforesaid purpose was a public purpose as "the average Oriental could not understand and would soon cease to respect an exalted official whose outward circumstances were those of the humblest citizen." On appeal to the High Court (appellate side) the findings of the lower Court were affirmed and the aforesaid purpose held to be a public purpose.

The appellants then appealed to His Majesty in Council.

As both appeals involved the same question for determination, i. e., what constitued a public purpose, they were heard together.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Kemworthy Brown and McCardie, for the Appellants, contended that a public purpose consisted in the conversion of private use and occupation into public use and occupation. Therefore, there must be occupation and user by the public.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—By the Land Acquisition Act of 1896 (Australia), section 16, the Government can acquire land for any purpose.]

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The other idea is that the scheme must be for public and need not exclusively be for public purpose.]

The definition that public purposes covered every step which the Government took as Government in the interest of the public committed to their care, was too wide. The whole point was whether housing the officials was a public purpose or not. The lease was in perpetuity. This kind of resumption would mean converting it into a tenancy-atwill, for the Government might take possession of it for any purpose. The true test was, what was the use to which the land was put afterwards? The incorporation of the provisions of the Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894, into the lease was erroneous.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—The language is so wide that if the Government wanted it for a scheme, it could take it.]

It was not to be obtained under the Land Acquisition Act, by which mere declaration would have been sufficient. The Government were in effect proposing to carry on a business for profit. The list of 33 officials for whom the Government proposed to provide houses ought to have been admitted in evidence. The building of houses for the Bishop and the Chaplain of the Scottish Church could not be a public purpose.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes, who appeared for the respondent, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—The same general point is raised in these two appeals.

The first appellant was lessee under the Government as successors of the East India Company under a lease of date 18th April 1854, which lease contained a power of resumption in favour of the lessor if "the Company, their successors or assigns, shall, for any public purpose, be at any time desirous to resume possession of the premises granted" . . . upon certain terms as to notice and compensation.

The second appellants are holders of land under Government in virtue of a sanad originally granted to one George King on 6th April 1839, by the said East India Company, which declares the ground given in occupation is to be "at any time resumable by Government for public purposes" upon certain terms as to notice and compensation.

The Government gave notice in both cases to resume for a public purpose. On being challenged as to what that public purpose was, they explained that they wished for the ground in order to erect dwelling houses, which they could offer to Government officials at adequate rents for their private residence. Suitable houses for Government servants are not easily obtainable in Bombay; but it is not said that obtaining quarters of some kind is an impossibility. The whole question, therefore, is: Is such a scheme a "public purpose," within the meaning of the contracts contained in the lease and the sanad?

The learned Judge of first instance in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay and the Appeal Court of the same Court have both held that it is. The learned Judges in the Court below have, in deference to citations made before them, elaborately considered many of the decisions which construed the words "public purposes," as used in the Statute of Elizabeth with reference to exemptions from rating. In the end, however, they came to the conclusion that those decisions afforded no help as to the proper construction to be put on the words of these contracts; and in that conclusion their Lordships unhesitatingly agree.

The argument of the appellants is really rested upon the view that there cannot be a "public purpose" in taking land, if that land when taken is not in some way or other made available to the public at large. Their Lordships do not agree with this view. They think the true view is well expressed by Batchelor, J., in the first case, when he says:—

"General definitions are, I think, rather to be avoided where the avoidance is possible, and I make no attempt to define precisely the extent of the phrase 'public purposes' in the lease; it is enough to say that, in my opinion, the phrase, whatever else it may mean, must include a purpose, that is, an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interests of the individuals, is directly and vitally concerned."

That being so, all that remains is to determine whether the purpose here is a purpose in which the general interest of the community is concerned. Prima facie the Government are good judges of that. They are not absolute judges. They cannot say: "Sic volo sic jubeo," but at least a Court would not easily hold them to be wrong. But here, so far from holding them to be wrong, the whole of the learned Judges who are thoroughly conversant with the conditions of Indian life, say that they are satisfied that the scheme is one which will redound to public benefit by helping the Government to maintain the efficiency of its servants. From such a conclusion their Lordships would be slow to differ, and upon its own statement it commends itself to their judgment.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that on the general point the view of the Courts below was right.

A special point was taken in the second case as to sufficiency of notice. It is enough to say that the view of the Courts below was clearly right in this matter.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeals, but there will be no costs to either party before this Board.

Appeals dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 39, 42—Removal of guardian—Grounds of removal—Appointment of successor—Appeal.

Section 42 of the Guardians and Wards Act can only come into operation when a guardian is properly removed. Therefore, where the point in issue is whether he has been so removed, the order of removal is appealable.

Where there is nothing on the record to show the grounds of the removal, the case should be remanded in order that the District Judge may deal with the matter properly under section 39 of the Act

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Purneah, dated the 16th of April 1912.

Babu Bimala Charan Deb, for the Appellant.

Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Purneah removing one Mahadeo Mondal from the guardianship of a minor Bidhi Chand, and appointing the Nazir of the Court to be guardian in his place.

An objection is taken that this order must have been passed under section 42 of the Guardians and Wards Act in so far as it appointed the Nazir to be the guardian and that, therefore, no appeal lies. This may be so; but section 42 could only come into operation if Mahadeo was properly removed and this is the question contested in this appeal. It appears to me perfectly clear that he was not properly removed. A Court can, of its own motion, remove a guardian under section 39 of the Act for the reasons given in that section.

It has been suggested on behalf of the respondents that Mahadeo in this case failed to discharge certain duties of the trust and acted in contumacious disregard of the orders of the Court. That may or may not be so. But the learned Judge did not pass his order on these grounds and we have no materials before us for any opinion whether there was a case for Mahadeo's removal or not.

It is also suggested that the Court might have acted in consideration of the preference of the minor under section 17 of the Act. But there is nothing before us to show that the Court ever consulted the minor personally at all.

It seems to us perfectly clear that the case must go back to the District Judge in order that he may deal with the matter properly under section 39. Mahadeo should be clearly informed under what clause or clauses of section 39 he is being proceeded against and should be allowed to give any explanation he may desire to put forward.

Meanwhile the Nazir of the Court will continue guardian of the property of the minor.

We make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

FATEH SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SANT SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 11—'Member of agricultural tribe'—Government Notification—'Holding land'—Tenant-at-will—Right should also be subsisting at date of suit.

Under section 11 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, the expression 'member of an agricultural tribe' means, according to the Government notification on the subject, a person (i) belonging to any one of the tribes notified as agricultural tribes for the district in which he claims that status, and (ii) either holding land or residing in that district.

It is very doubtful whether a person who occupies land as a tenant-at-will can be said to 'hold land' within the meaning of the notification.

To maintain a suit for pre-emption, the plaintiff must show, not only that he had a right of pre-emption at the time of the sale, but also that his right subsisted at the date of the institution of the suit.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 26th January 1912, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant, Fateh Singh, for pre-emption of a plot of land situate in Chak No. 271, Rakh Branch, Tahsil and District Lyallpur. The sale was effected by Sawan Singh Jat, father of the plaintiff-appellant, in favour of Sant Singh Jat, by a deed, executed on the 17th of February 1909 and registered on the 1st of March 1909, and the suit was instituted on the 28th of February 1910. The District Judge has dismissed the suit on the preliminary point that the plaintiff was not a member of an agricultural tribe in the Lyallpur District at the time of the sale and did not, therefore, comply with the requirements of section 11 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, II of 1905. We have considered the arguments advanced by Mr. Nand Lal on behalf of the appellant and are of opinion that the suit must fail, not only on the ground stated by the learned District Judge, but also on the further ground that the plaintiff was not a member of an agricultural tribe at the date of the institution of the suit, and that the possession of that status on the above date was essential to the success of his suit.

The law as enacted in section 11 of the Act makes it a condition precedent to the success of a pre-emption suit in respect to agricultural land sold by a member of an agricultural tribe, that the plaintiff must be a member of an agricultural tribe. We have, therefore, to determine whether Fateh Singh satisfies this requirement of the law. The expression "member of an agricultural tribe" is not defined by the Act, but a notification of the Local Government dealing with the subject prescribes that a person claiming that status in a particular district must fulfil two conditions:—

(1) he must either hold land or ordinarily reside in that district;

(2) he must belong to any one of the tribes notified as agricultural tribes for that district. Now the present plaintiff, being a Jat, undoubtedly satisfies the second condition, but he has, in our opinion, failed to establish that he either resided or held land in the Lyallpur District at the time of the sale. The original home of the plaintiff was admittedly in the Sialkot District and though he resided in the Lyallpur District for a few years, it is clear from the patwari's evidence that he had ceased to do so before the sale took place. Nor is it shown that he held land in the district at the time of the sale. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that he was a tenant-at-will of the land in dispute, but we doubt very much whether a person who occupies land as such can be said to 'hold land' within the meaning of the notification. It seems to us that the definition given therein contemplates that a person must have some permanent connection with the district in which he wants to acquire land as pre-emptor and that that connection can be established either by proving ordinary residence in it or by showing that he held land therein. The interest of a tenant-at-will, which is liable to be determined at the instance of the landlord, is of too transient a nature to secure the object which the framers of the definition had in view.

It is, however, unnecessary to pursue the subject any further, because we are clear that the plaintiff was not even a tenant-at-will at the time of the sale. The girdawari papers produced by the patwari show that the plaintiff did not cultivate any land in this district in kharif 1908 or at any time thereafter. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff, who was neither residing in the district nor holding land therein at the time of the sale, was not a member of an agricultural tribe and that his suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Court.

But there is a further obstacle in the way of the plaintiff. It is a well-established principle of law that to maintain a suit for pre-emption, the plaintiff must show not only that he had a right of pre emption at the time of the sale but that his right subsisted at the date of the institution of the suit, Vide, inter alia, Khan v. Mahanda (1) and Janki Prasad v. Ishar Das (2). In the present case there is not a particle of evidence to show that on the 28th of February 1910 the plaintiff either resided or held land in the district. In fact, his own witnesses deposed to the effect that he had severed all connection with the district several months before the suit was filed. This ground alone is fatal to his claim.

For the aforesaid reasons we affirm the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 32—Statements as to date of birth by person who is dead—Admissibility of such statement.

A statement by a person who dead made in a petition for guardianship to the effect that a certain person was born on a certain date, not being a statement relating to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption, is not admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act. Nor does section 11 cover a statement of this kind.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of 24-Perganas, dated the 2nd December 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, at Alipur, dated the 26th February 1912.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellant.

Babus Tarakishore Chowdhury and Kshetra Gopal Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for money on two hand-notes. The defence was minority. The Courts below have dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

It is first contended on behalf of the appellant that the Courts below erred in admitting the statement of one Nistarini Debya in evidence. Nistarini apparently is dead. She applied to be appointed guardian of the defendant and in her petition she stated that he was born on the 12th January 1890. The learned District Judge, following the decision in Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (1), held that this statement was admissible in evidence. It is, however, difficult to reconcile that case with that of Satis Chunder Mukhopadhya v. Mohendro Lal Pathak (2), and certainly in the present case we cannot hold that the statement now before us can be regarded as one relating to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption and, therefore, admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act.

It has been contended that the statement is admissible under section 11 of the same Act. But that section, in our opinion, was never intended to cover statements of this kind. The learned District Judge based his decision on this statement alone. He says in his judgment: "The first question is whether defendant Manindra was a minor when he executed either or both of the hand-notes." He then deals with the oral evidence and says with regard to it: "It is impossible to come to a definite decision on this evidence." Clearly, therefore, on the evidence other than the statement of Nistarini, he was not prepared to hold that the defendant was a minor.

That being so, the appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case sent back to the District Judge in order that he may dispose of the second issue in the case.

Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

Babu Gobind Chandra Dey Roy (with him Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Birendra Chandra Das), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the ijara constitutes a good answer to the plea of limitation. But it is manifest that we have here conditions which bring into play the doctrines to which expression has been given in a number of cases purporting to follow Ramsden v. Dyson (1). We are by no means satisfied that this has been thoroughly appreciated by the lower Appellate Court, and were it not that the parties before us have taken up a reasonable attitude, it might have been incumbent on us to have sent down the case for further investigation in the lower Appellate Court. This is now unnecessary, because the appellant accepts and the respondent does not object to our suggestion that the appellant should be, in respect of the land in suit, treated not merely as a settled raiyat but a raiyat holding at fixed rates, the rate being 8 annas per kani as settled by the lower Courts.

In the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Arbitration—Revocation of submission not allowed without good cause—Notice of meeting to party who has already withdrawn not necessary—Arbitrators not bound to discuss in presence of parties—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 20—Regular suit to enforce award—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (X) (d)—Limitation—Appeal.

Neither party to a submission to arbitration can revoke it unless for good cause shown.

Omission to give notice of the meeting of arbitrators to a party, who has prior to such meeting notified to the arbitrators his withdrawal from the submission, does not invalidate the award.

The arbitrators are not bound to discuss in presence of the parties what award they are going to make.

The procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, Schedule II, paragraph 20, is not obligatory. Instead of applying that an award may be filed, a party may institute a regular suit to enforce the award. For such a suit, the Court-fee would be ad valorem on the value of the property in dispute [section 7 (X) (d), Court Fees Act], and the period of limitation is three years at least, in some land cases it may be twelve years, and there is free right of appeal and second appeal.

Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. K. Milter and D. Dutt, for the Respondents.

NGA HLA GYAW v. MI YA PO.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs-appellants sued to enforce an award of arbitration, in other words, for specific performance of an award. The plaint was quite plain. It did not mention Schedule II, clause 20, Civil Procedure Code, or ask that the award might be filed in Court, but prayed that the award might be enforced and a decree pronounced in accordance with it. The procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code is not obligatory. Instead of applying that an award may be filed, a party may institute a regular suit to enforce the award.

The distinction is important. The Court-fee on an application to file an award is eight annas: the Court-fee in a suit to enforce an award is ad valorem on the value of the property in dispute [section 7 (X) (d), Court Fees Act].

In the case of an application to file an award the period of limitation is six months and there are stringent restrictions on appeal [See Schedule II, clause 21(2), and section 104 (2), Civil Procedure Code]. In the case of a regular suit to enforce an award the period of limitation is three years at least, in some land cases it may be twelve years, and there is free right of appeal and second appeal.

The Courts below were in error in not observing this distinction and in speaking of the case as an application to file an award. There is the less excuse for them that the matter was explained long ago in Nga Pu v. U De Wainda (1), Kyan Pon v. Yan Nyein (2) and Mi Hla Win v. Shwe Yan (3).

In the present case the parties on the 15th February 1912 by a written submission referred the partition of their inheritance to arbitrators, Tha Do and Po Se. On the 22nd April, the arbitrators pronounced an award in favour of plaintiffs-appellants. Before the hearing of the case, the defendants-respondents gave the arbitrators notice that they withdrew from the reference, and they did not attend the hearing or the delivery of the award. The arbitrators on receiving the notice proceeded ex parte without replying to the defendants-respondents' notice.

The defence to the plaintiffs-appellants' suit was that the award was invalid because it dealt with a piece of land which was not included in the reference, because defendants-respondents had no notice of the date on which the arbitrators intended to proceed with the case (ex parte) and because defendants-respondents had withdrawn from the reference.

The Sub-Divisional Court found against the defendants-respondents on all points, and ordered the award to "be filed" (sic) and a decree to issue in accordance therewith. The District Court, on appeal, set aside that order and decree, and "dismissed the suit" (sic) with costs.

The grounds on which the District Court came to this decision were that the arbitrators had omitted to reply to the defendants-respondents' notice or to make them aware of the date of the ex parte hearing, and that the arbitrators did not discuss in the presence of the parties what award they were going to make. This last ground was not raised by the defendants-respondents and was entirely unsustainable. The arbitrators were in no way bound to discuss in presence of the parties what award they were going to make. They deposed that they discussed the matter together, and that one of them, Tha Do, drew up the award and signed it and sent it for signature to the other arbitrator, Po Se, who then signed it. This was a perfectly legitimate method of preparing the award.

On other points also the lower Appellate Court's decision cannot be supported. As the learned Additional Judge observed: "When parties have agreed to submit a dispute to arbitration, no party can revoke the submission unless for good cause shown, and a mere arbitrary revocation is not permitted." This was laid down by the Privy Council in Peston jee Nusserwanjee v. Manockjee and Co. (4). The subject is fully explained in Banerji's Law of Arbitration in India, 1908, at page 118.

It has also been clearly laid down that the omission to give notice of the meeting of the arbitrators to a party who has, prior to such meeting, notified to the abritrators his withdrawal from the submission, does not invalidate the award. The case of Subraya Prabhu v. Manjunath Bhakta (5), where this was declared to be the law, was very like the present case.

(1) U. B. R. (1892-96) II, 11.

(5) 29 M. 44.

The defendants-respondents had no right to withdraw; they have never attempted to show that they had. It was their business to attend before the arbitrators, and when they failed to do so, it was not incumbent on the arbitrators to give them any further notice.

This was the position on general principles and apart from any special stipulation in the reference. The reference in the present case, however, expressly provided that if either party failed to appear before the arbitrators, the arbitrators might proceed ex parte.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiffs-appellants are granted a decree in terms of the award as prayed.

Defendants-respondents will pay the plaintiffs-appellants' costs.

Decree set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Admission of additional evidence on appeal—Appellate Court, duty of—Practice.

In admitting additional evidence, it is necessary for an Appellate Court to comply with the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27; and if it thinks, either with the consent of the parties or on the application of any one of them, that there is sufficient ground to admit certain papers, the reasons for admitting them in evidence should be stated, and the papers should be formally admitted in evidence.

Second appeal against the decision of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge, at Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 443 of 1912, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of Malwan, in Civil Suit No. 238 of 1913.

Mr. D. W. Pilgaokar, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The main point argued in this appeal relates to the question of the admissibility of certain evidence which the lower Appellate Court considered for the first time in appeal. That evidence consists of certain papers relating to a revenue-inquiry. During the course of the argument we were led to think that these papers were looked at and considered by the Court without the knowledge and consent of the present appellants. It turns out, however, that these papers were sent for expressly on the application of the plaintiffs, and the Pleaders on both sides were heard after these papers were received and before the judgment was pronounced. No objection has been taken to this procedure in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. Under these circumstances it is quite clear that so far as the present appellants are concerned, they have no just grievance at all as regards the procedure adopted by the lower Appellate Court with reference to these papers.

At the same time we think that it was necessary for the lower Court to have complied with the provisions of rule 27 of Order XLI before taking these papers into consideration; and if it thought, either with the consent of the parties or on the application of any one of the parties, that there was sufficient ground to admit these papers, the reasons for admitting them in evidence should have been stated, and they should have been formally admitted in evidence. The lower Appellate Court no doubt acted improperly in considering the papers without formally admitting them in evidence. But having regard to the facts which we have already mentioned, it is quite clear that the appellants cannot be allowed to object to the procedure which they invited the Court to adopt.

On a consideration of the whole evidence in the case, including these papers, the lower Appellate Court has come to definite conclusions on questions of fact, viz., that the plaintiffs have not proved their title, and that the defendant has been in possession of the lands for over twelve years prior to the date of the suit. These findings must be accepted. On these findings it is quite clear that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court is proper.

We, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs.

Decree confirmed.

DAL SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Adoptee not a lineal descendant of his natural father—Occupancy holding, succession to—Right of brother adopted in another family—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22.

Once a boy has been adopted into another family, he ceases to be a "lineal descendant" of his natural father, and, therefore, cannot succeed to the occupancy holding of his brother by the natural father.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal (with him Mr. Ibn Ahmad), for the Appellant.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Kewal Singh to recover possession of certain immoveable property comprising an occupancy holding. The occupancy holding belonged at one time to Puhap Singh. Puhap Singh had a son Hansi and a son Kewal, the plaintiff. On the death of Puhap Singh, Hansi became the occupancy-tenant. Kewal had been adopted into another family. On the death of Hansi the defendant, Thamman Singh, entered into possession. Kewal Singh then brought the present suit alleging that he was entitled under section 22 (c) of the Tenancy Act to the occupancy holding. He also alleged that Thamman Singh was illegitimate.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Court of first instance and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. Hence the present appeal.

In our opinion the decree of the Court of first instance is correct and must be restored. Unless Kewal Singh can be said to be the brother by the same father as Hansi's, he has no right to the occupancy holding, even on the assumption that Thamman Singh is illegitimate. In our opinion once a boy has been adopted into another family, he ceases to be a "lineal descendant" of his natural father. This was expressly held by a Bench of this Court in the case of Lala v. Nahar Singh (1). In principle exactly the same view was taken in the case of Nandan Tewari v. Rajkishore Rai (2). We agree with both these authorities.

The respondents rely upon the case of Ali Baksh v. Barkatullah (3) and quote the following passage from the judgment: "In our opinion the personal law of the parties has nothing to do with the rule of succession which is laid down by section 22 of the Tenancy Act." In our opinion this remark of the Judges must be read in connection with the particular facts of the case before them.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 158—Liquidation proceedings—Charge—Lease providing for payment of arrears of rent from buildings erected on land—Priority over unsecured creditors—Charge.

Where a lease provided that if the lessees (a Company) caused delay in payment of rent, the landlords would be entitled to recover the arrears with interest "from the buildings which may have been erected on the land:"

Held, (1) that in equity a charge was created on the buildings when they came into existence; and

(2) that although the charge did not amount to a transfer or a mortgage, it gave a right of priority to the landlords over the unsecured creditors of the company in a winding-up.

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ahmedabad, in Miscellaneous Application No. 141 of 1911.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Respondent.

ASAD ALI v. ANAND SARUP.

JUDGMENT.—The only point that we have to dispose of in this appeal is whether the claim of the appellants for rent, accrued due under the lease under which the Company enjoyed the property upon which the mill-buildings were erected before the date of the winding-up, could be satisfied out of the proceeds of the mill-buildings in priority to the claims of unsecured creditors. The lease of which the Company have taken the benefit provided that: "If the lessees cause delay in paying the rent the landlords should give one month's notice, and inspite of that if the lessees or their representatives do not pay the arrears of rent within one month, the landlords may recover the arrears of rent with interest at the rate of eight annas per cent. per month from the building or buildings which may have been erected on the land and from the person and property of the tenants." No question has been raised as to the want of notice under that clause, but what we have to consider is whether the clause gives a charge to the landlords for unpaid rent upon the buildings when the buildings come into existence. We think that in equity a charge was created upon the buildings when they came into existence, as is shown by the judgment in Holroyd v. Marshall (1). But the charge does not amount to a transfer or a mortgage, and the further question arises whether in equity such a charge will give a right of priority to the landlords in a winding up. That it will do so seems to be taken as settled law in the judgment of Mr. Justice Lindley in Andrew v. Swansea Cambrian Benefit Building Society (2), where he says that a general charge upon the assets of the Company, although not amounting to a mortgage, will give the holder of the charge priority over the unsecured creditors. We must, therefore, allow the appeal, directing the liquidator to pay out of the proceeds of the buildings upon the land the sum of Rs. 1,937-8-0 with interest at 6 per cent. in priority to the unsecured creditors. The appellants are entitled to their costs out of the assets of the Company in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Mortgage—Suit for redemption—What should mortgagor prove—Adverse possession, what amounts to—Issue, whether properly remitted.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage if the mortgagor proves that there is a subsisting mortgage affecting the property claimed by the other party as his and that the equity of redemption is vested in him (the mortgagor) he is entitled to a decree, but if he fails to prove a subsisting mortgage covering the property, he cannot succeed.

It is not necessary for the person who claims the property as his to prove that he or the person through whom he claims were in possession for 12 years.

A mortgagor must prove that he has been in legal possession of the property mortgaged within 12 years of the institution of the suit.

A man can be in legal possession either through his tenant, care-taker or mortgagee.

Per Richards, J.—(Banerji, J., dissenting).—

Where the lower Appellate Court has found in a redemption case that the mortgage is not proved, a Judge of the High Court is not entitled to remit an issue to inquire whether the mortgagor has been in possession either personally or through others within 12 years.

Per Banerji, J.—If the ownership of the property was vested in the mortgagor and not in the party claiming adversely, the mortgagors are entitled to recover possession unless they have lost their title by reason of the adverse possession of some one for a period exceeding 12 years.

Possession to be adverse must be by a person who does not acknowledge the other's rights but denies them. There must be an ex rese or implied repudiation of the rights of the true owner and an open assertion by the person in possession of a claim of rights to hold the property on his own behalf. Unless possession is coupled with an express or implied claim of right inconsistent with the title of the lawful owner, it cannot be regarded as adverse to the true owner.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed possession of premises described as "Sarai Bala" and a parao attached thereto. The plaintiffs' case was that the parao was transferred by way of usufructuary mortgage on 2nd April 1853 to secure Rs. 100 and that the whole sarai was similarly mortgaged on 26th June 1853. Persons who were alleged to be the representatives of the original mortgagees were made defendants. They are relatives of the plaintiffs and did not contest the suit. The plaintiffs also made Saiyed Asad Ali a defendant, stating that they did so because he alleged himself to be the purchaser of half the parao at an auction-sale but that the judgment-debtors had no interest which could be sold. It is admitted that Saiyed Asad Ali was an auction-purchaser at a sale of the interest (if any) of the defendants, third party. These last-mentioned defendants had, of course, no interest in contesting, and did not contest, the present suit. The contest in the suit was only about that part of the premises claimed by the defendant, Saiyed Asad Ali.

Saiyed Asad Ali put in a written statement which beyond doubt put the plaintiffs on proof of everything that it was necessary to prove to entitle them to a decree for possession of the property claimed by them. Among other matters pleaded in the written statement was an allegation that the parao claimed by Saiyed Asad Ali was not in Sarai Bala.

On the general merits of the plaintiffs' case it may be remarked that it is strange that the plaintiffs have waited since the year 1853 (over 50 years) to redeem the mortgages for the small sums of Rs. 100 and Rs. 25. The mortgaged property was worth very much more. On the other hand the answering defendant purchased half the parao for the sum of Rs. 11. If the title was clear it would be worth a great deal more. However this may be, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree if they prove their case. If the plaintiffs fail to prove their case, the answering defendant is entitled to have the suit dismissed as against him notwithstanding that he purchased the property in dispute for a small sum.

The Court of first instance granted the plaintiffs a decree. Mr. Sabonadiere reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. A learned Judge of this Court remitted an issue which was tried by Mr. Pitamber Joshi In remitting the issue the learned Judge directed that no further evidence should be taken. Upon the finding of Mr. Joshi the learned Judge of this Court restored the decree of the Court of first instance. The case has come again before this Court in Letters Patent Appeal.

There can be no doubt that if the plaintiffs proved that there was a subsisting mortgage affecting the property claimed by the answering defendant and that the equity of redemption was vested in them, they would be entitled to a decree. On the other hand the answering defendant was entitled to call upon the plaintiffs to prove that they had been in possession of the property in dispute within 12 years of the institution of the suit. In my opinion it was not necessary for the answering defendant to prove that he or persons through whom he claimed were in possession for over 12 years. The plaintiffs need not prove actual physical possession. A man can be in "legal" possession (e.g., through his tenant, care-taker, or usufructuary mortgagee). In the present case the plaintiffs did not allege, much less prove, that there was any one in possession otherwise than as mortgagee. It was necessary for the plaintiffs to prove not only that there were mortgages affecting some premises; it was necessary to prove that the mortgages or any one of them affected the actual premises claimed by the answering defendant. Mr. Sabonadiere found that the mortgages were not proved, and reading his judgment as a whole I think it is absolutely clear that he intended to find and did find that the plaintiffs failed to prove that the mortgages (even if they were subsisting mortgages) included the premises in dispute. If this was the finding of the learned District Judge, it was binding on this Court in second appeal and would, in my opinion, have entitled the answering defendant to have the appeal dismissed.

The issue which the learned Judge of this Court sent down for a finding was as follows:—"Have the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title been in possession either personally or through others within 12 years?" The finding was as follows:—"On the whole I find that the persons whom the plaintiffs call their mortgagees were in possession after September 1910."

ASAD ALI v. ANAND SARUP.

Now it was never suggested that any one was in possession of the disputed premises otherwise than as mortgagee (and Mr. Sabonadiere found that that the defendants were not mortgagees). There is no finding that any one was ever put into possession by permission otherwise than as mortgagee. Such evidence as was given related to the alleged mortgages and not to permission of any other kind, and the finding of Mr. Subonadiere that these mortgages were not proved to include the premises in dispute was conclusive in second appeal. The learned Judge of this Court says in his judgment of the 12th December 1913: "There can be no doubt whatever that as between the parties, the contest raged round the question as to whether the defendant or his so-called predecessors-in-title had been in actual possession and whether.....whom the plaintiffs had admitted to be their mortgagees had been in possession." I do not think this is quite accurate. There had been a very sharp contest as to whether the premises in dispute were or were not in Sarai Bala. The evidence was very conflicting and documents had been tampered with or fabricated. I do not think that the learned Judge of this Court ought to have referred the particular issue he did, nor do I think the finding of Mr. Pitamber Joshi justified the setting aside of the decree of the Court of first appeal. If there was any inconsistency in the finding of Mr. Sabonadiere so as to make his finding on the subject of the mortgages bad, a new issue on the point might have been referred. Judging from the evidence referred to by Mr. Sabonadiere it is difficult to see how the plaintiffs proved that the mortgages covered the property in dispute If, however, the plaintiffs' case in the appeal was that the defendants first party were in possession on their behalf (other than as mortgagees), it was a new case and could not be disposed of on evidence which related only to the mortgages. I think that Mr. Sabonadiere's finding was a finding that the plaintiffs failed to prove a subsisting mortgage covering the premises now in dispute. If we accept this finding, the plaintiffs have failed to prove possession of this part of the property by themselves or any other persons on their behalf within 12 years of the institution of the suit. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—This appeal relates to a half share of a plot of land which is a camping ground or parao and forms part of the property claimed in the suit by the plaintiffs-respondents. The appellant purchased the half share at auction in 1908 as the property of the defendants of the third party, and it has been found that he has been in possession since that year. It has also been found that the land did not belong to the predecessors-in-title of the appellant and that they never were in possession, so that the appellant is not the owner of the land in question. This, of course, will not entitle the plaintiffs to a decree unless they can prove their own title to the property and a title which still subsists. All the lower Courts which tried this suit have found that the land in question originally belonged to the plaintiffs-respondents. The finding, on the point, of Mr. Sabonadiere, who dismissed the suit, is in the following terms:—"I find that although the case for the respondents is not too strong, yet it does amount to proof that they are owners of this parao or were, and that that case has not been rebutted." As it has been found that the ownership of the property was vested in the plaintiffs and not in the appellant, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession unless they have lost their title by reason of the adverse possession of some one for a period exceeding 12 years. It has not been suggested that they have lost their ownership in any other way.

It has been found by the Court below that before the appellant took possession of the land in dispute, it was for several years in the physical possession of Mukta Prasad, the predecessor-in-title of the first set of defendants, and of those defendants. The plaintiffs alleged that their ancestors had mortgaged the land to Mukta Prasad in 1853 and that he and his successors were in possession as usufructuary mortgagees. The plaintiffs brought the present suit for redemption of the mortgage. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiffs and granted them a decree. The defendants of the first party, who are the representatives of the original mortgagee, submitted to the decree. The appellant alone appealed. On his appeal Mr. Sabonadiere held that the alleged mortgage had not been proved and he dismissed the suit against the appellant on this ground. In view of the evidence referred to by the Court of first instance and Mr. Pitamber Joshi, I think Mr. Sabonadiere's finding was erroneous but as it was a finding of fact, this Court was bound to accept it in second appeal. The finding was not, however, sufficient, in my opinion, for dismissal of the suit. It was necessary to find whether the possession of Mukta Prasad and his successors was adverse to the plaintiffs, because unless it was adverse the plaintiffs' proprietary title did not become extinct. As Mr. Sabonadiere had not come to any finding on this point our learned brother Tudball was, in my opinion, fully justified in referring an issue to the Court below. The finding of Mr. Pitamber Joshi, though not very clearly expressed, is in substance a finding to the effect that the possession of Mukta Prasad and his representatives was on behalf of the plaintiffs and was equivalent to their possession. He found that Mukta Prasad, so far from setting up a right of his own, had alleged himself to be mortgagee and claimed to enforce the mortgage. Upon this finding the learned Judge of this Court was, in my opinion, right in decreeing the claim against the appellant. The failure of the plaintiffs to prove, as against the appellants, the mortgage alleged by them would not necessarily make the possession of Mukta Prasad and his successors adverse. Possession to be adverse must, as observed by Dr. Markby in his Elements of Law, Chapter X, 2nd Edition, be possession "by a person who does not acknowledge the others' rights but denies them." There must be an express or implied repudiation of the rights of the true owner and an open assertion by the person in possession of a claim of right to hold the property on his own behalf. Unless possession is coupled with an express or implied claim of right "inconsistent with the title of the lawful owner," it cannot be regarded as adverse to the true owner. On this point I need only refer to the remarks of Markby, J., in Bejoy Chunder Banerji v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (1), and of Farran, C. J., in Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (2). See also Banning on Limitations, 2nd Edition, page 101. In the present case Mukta Prasad or his successors, who have been found to have been the only persons in actual physical possession, never denied the plaintiffs' right and never asserted a proprietary right in themselves. On the contrary Mukta Prasad claimed to be the mortgagee of the property. His representatives who are the defendants of the first party in the present suit, did not deny the mortgages set up by the plaintiffs and submitted to the decree for redemption made by the Court of first instance. Their possession cannot, therefore, be regarded as adverse to the plaintiffs. By reason of their possession the plaintiffs' title has not become extinct and they are entitled to recover possession from the appellant who has no title. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be allowed, the decree of this Court be set aside and the decree of the lower Appellate Court restored.

The parties will abide their own costs in this Court.

Where out of a house-site and a field mortgaged to the plaintiff the house-site was sold to the defendants who thereby acquired a right to redeem the whole property and the plaintiff subsequently purchased the field and set off the purchase-money pro tanto against the mortgage-debt, and sued to recover the balance by sale of the house-site:

Held, that as the sale to the plaintiff was subsequent to the acquisition of the house-site by the defendants and was without their privity or consent, they had not been deprived of their right of redemption which had been in existence since they purchased the house-site.

Subordinate Judge at Godhra, in Suit No. 225 of 1910.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the property of a mortgagor was mortgaged to the plaintiff. It consisted of a house-site and a field. Subsequently the house, subject to the mortgage, was sold to defendants Nos. 1 to 26. The defendants then had a right to redeem the whole property. After this purchase the plaintiff by arrangement with the mortgagor purported to acquire the field for Rs. 1,200 and set off the price pro tanto against the mortgage-debt. He now sues the purchasers of the house to enforce the balance of the mortgage-debt by sale of the house. The defendants as such purchasers claim to be entitled to redeem the original mortgage and to take over the field upon such redemption. It is clear that they would be entitled to do so if the field had not been sold out and out to the plaintiff. But that sale was subsequent to the acquisition of the house-site by the defendants, and it was without their privity or consent. We, therefore, think that they have not been deprived of their right of redemption which was in existence since they purchased the house-site, and their offer to pay to the plaintiff the amount of Rs. 1,200, which had been set off against the mortgage-debt at the time of the alleged transfer of the equity of redemption of the field, should have been allowed. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and decree that the defendants be at liberty to redeem the mortgage by payment of Rs. 1,628-12-0 (British) together with interest at 4 per cent. upon Rs. 428, part thereof, from the date of suit until redemption within six months, and upon redemption we decree that the plaintiff do transfer the field to them free from incumbrances, but that if the mortgage-debt be not paid within six months, the field be taken as representing Rs. 1,200, and that the house-site be sold and the proceeds applied to satisfy the balance of the mortgage-debt. If the property is redeemed, the mortgagee will be entitled to the costs of the institution of this suit to be added to the mortgage-debt. But he must pay to the defendants the costs of the hearing in the first Court and the costs of the two appeals. If the defendants do not redeem within six months, they must pay all the costs of the plaintiff.

Decree varied.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sambalpur, dated the 29th June 1910, affirming that of the Munsif of Burgurh, dated the 7th March 1910.

Babus Satis Chandra Ghose and Smritis Chandra Ghose, for the Appellants.

Babus Sarat Chandra Ray Choudhury, Charu Chandra Bhattacharya and Gobind Chandra Chakrabarti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third and fourth defendants in a suit for declaration of title to land and for recovery of possession thereof. The property in dispute belonged to Pitabas, one of four brothers who were members of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. The plaintiff is one of the sons of a brother of Pitabas, and his case is that he was taken in adoption by his uncle in the year 1900. The defendants, now appellants, are two of the daughters of Pitabas, who would be entitled to succeed to the estate of their father in the absence of an adopted son. They consequently challenge the factum as also the validity of the alleged adoption. The Courts below have concurrently found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. They have held on the evidence that the adoption did in fact take place, that since then the plaintiff has been treated as the son of

KATKI v. LAKPATI PUJARI.

Pitabas, that his thread and marriage ceremony has been performed as such, and that he has performed the annual shradh ceremony of his adoptive father and enjoyed the turn of worship of the family deity as his successor-in-interest. The Courts below have also held that there is no evidence that the datta homa ceremony was performed on the occasion of the adoption of the plaintiff, but they have taken the view that as the plaintiff was the nephew of his adoptive father, the performance of such ceremony was not essential. In this view, the adoption has been held valid and the claim of the plaintiff to the estate of his adoptive father sustained. The defendants have appealed to this Court and have reiterated the objection that the adoption was invalid, as the parties are Brahmins in whose case the datta homa ceremony is essential; in support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the case of Luchmun Lall v. Mohun Lall (1), where Dwarkanath Mitter, J., stated that the performance of the putrashtijag (apparently written inadvertently for datta homa) is essential to the validity of an adoption in the dattaka form among the three superior castes. On behalf of the respondent, it has been argued that this is not an accurate statement of the rule on the subject, that in any event it is too broadly formulated, and that no datta homa is necessary when the son of a brother is taken in adoption. In support of this contention, reference has been made to the cases of Atmaram v. Madho Rao (2) Govindayyar v. Dorasami (3) and Valubai v. Govind (4). In our opinion, the contention of the plaintiff must prevail that the validity of his adoption has not been affected by the non-performance of the datta homa.

The claim of the plaintiff is supported by a text attributed to Yama: "The homa or the like ceremony is not necessary in the case of adoption of the daughter's or the brother's son; by the verbal gift and acceptance alone, that is accomplished; this is declared by the Lord Yama." This text is quoted by the authors of the Dattaka Kaumudi and Dattaka Darpana as one of Devala mentioned in the Saraswati Vilasa of Dwaipayna (Dattak Siromani by Prof. Bharat Chandra Siromani published under the direction of Prasanna Kumar Tagore, pages 45, 92, 244, 246) and the comment is added by the author of the Dattaka Darpana that the expression "brother's son" includes persons who are sapindas and sagotras, and that consequently it is only when an adoption is made of a Samanodaka or Sakulya Sagotra, the rule for performance of the datta homa ceremony operates. The text, which was quoted as early as 1821 by the Pandits consulted in connection with the case of Husbant Rao v. Govindrao (5), has also been accepted as genuine in the cases of Valubai v. Govind (4)! and Atmaram v. Madho Rao (2), and its authority was treated as unquestionable by V. N. Mandlik (Yajnavalykya, page 483). The rule enunciated in the text of Yama was also recognised by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Govindayyar v. Dorasami (3), on the authority of an opinion expressed by Ellis that datta homa, though proper in all cases, was not indispensable if the person adopting and the boy adopted were of the same gotra. It has been argued, however, that the text of Yama is not based on any intelligible reason which could justify a departure from the general rule that the datta homa is an essential ceremony for the validity of an adoption amongst members of the three regenerate classes. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well-founded. There has been considerable divergence of opinion amongst text-writers, ancient and modern, which is reflected also in judicial decisions upon the question whether the datta homa is essential for the validity of an adoption, and even if it be conceded that there is a strong body of opinion in favour of the view that it is obligatory in the case of adoption amongst Brahmins, we would not be disposed to ignore or even to minimise the effect of an exception for which direct authority may be found in a text of unquestionable genuineness and authority.

To take the texts first, it is plain that Manu undoubtedly contemplated nothing more than gift and acceptance for the validity of an adoption in the dattaka form, as in defining the dattaka son he says that the gift is to be made 'together with water,' that is, as Sir William Jones renders it, the gift is confirmed by pouring water. "That (boy) equal (by caste) whom his mother or his father affectionately gives, (confirming the gift) with (a libation of) water, in times of distress (to a man) as his son, must be considered as an adopted son (Datrima)" [Manu, IX, 168; S. B. E. Volume XXV, page 361]. It is noteworthy that none amongst the commentators of Manu, not even Medhatithi, the oldest among them, touches upon this question (Mandalik's Manu, page 1202). Vasistha describes the ceremonies in a more developed form, though not in the passage (XVII, 29; S. B. E. Volume XIV, page 87) where he classifies the different kinds of sons. He directs that "he who desires to adopt a son shall assemble his kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt offerings in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyahritis, and take (as a son) a not remote kinsman, just the nearest among his relatives." (Vasistha, XV, 6; S. B. E. Volume XIV, page 75; Mitakshara, I. 11, 13; Dattaka Mimansa, II, 51; Dattaka Chandrika, II, 11.)

The ritual is further elaborated by Baudhayana (VII, 5; S. B. E. Volume XIV, pages 334-336; Dattaka Mimansa V, 42; Dattaka Chankrika II, 16; Journal, A. S. B. Vol. XXXV, page 162), though not in the passage where he classifies the various kinds of sons (II, 2, 3, 20; S. B. E. Volume XIV, page 227). An equally elaborate description is given by Saunaka [Dattaka Mimansa (V, 2, 42); Dattaka Chandrika (II, 1, 3, 5, 7, 9); Vyavahara Mayukha (IV, 5, paragraphs 8, 36-42); Mandalik, pages 50-53, 63-65; Buhler, Journal A. S. B., Volume XXXV, page 149]. These statements, nothing like which can be found either in Yajnavalkya (II, 130; Mandlik, page 219) or in Vishnu (XV, 18-19; S. B. E. Vol. VII, page 63), still leave the question open whether the performance of the homa is essential for the validity of the adoption, because they enumerate it along with other matters, such as the assembly of the kindred and notice to the king, which have never been deemed indispensable to validate the adoption. The Mitakshara and its commentaries, Subodhini and Balambhatti, though referring specifically to the text of Vasistha, do not raise the question at all [Mitakshara, Ed. Setlur, page 695]. A similar observation applies to Apararka, who in his commentary on Yajnavalkya (II, 130) contents himself by quoting the verse of Manu (IX, 168). When, however, we come to the Dattaka Mimansa, we find definite rules laid down on the subject; paragraph 50 of section V lays down that the filial relation of the five sons previously mentioned proceeds from adoption only with observance of the form of either Vasistha or Saunaka and not otherwise. This is emphasised in section V, paragraph 56, where the general conclusion is stated that the filial relation of adopted sons is occasioned only by the proper ceremonies, and that the filial relation even fails, should either gift, acceptance, a burnt sacrament and so forth, be wanting. [Reference may also be made to section V, paragraph 47, where an ingenious attempt is made to read this interpretation into the simple text of Manu (IX, 168), and to section V, paragraph 55, where a quotation from Medhatithi, which cannot be traced in his commentary on Manu, is similarly treated.] To the same effect is the statement in the Dattaka Chandrika, section II, paragraph 17, where it is recited, after the description in paragraph 16 of the mode of adoption prescribed by Baudhayana for followers of the Taittri Veda, that in case no form as propounded should be observed, the adopted son will be declared entitled to assets sufficient for his marriage. This is reiterated in section VI, paragraph 3, where reliance is placed on a text of Manu which has not been traced: "He who adopts a son without observing the rules ordained, should make him the participator of the rites of marriage, not a sharer of the wealth." In this connection, it is worthy of note that the opinion has been expressed by Sastri Golap Chandra Sarkar (Tagore Lectures on Adoption, page 124; Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 126), that the Dattaka Chandrika was composed about the year 1800 for the purposes of a particular litigation, by one Raghumani Vidyabhusana who passed it off as the work of Kuvera. Serious notice need not accordingly be taken of a text which has not been found in the Institutes of Manu. There remains, however, the opinion of the author of the Dattaka Mimansa, which is, no doubt, entitled to weight. As against his opinion, we have the contrary view maintained by commentators of repute. Shankarabhatta, in his work styled the Dharma Dvaita Nirnaya, in the chapter styled the "Solution of doubts in regard to adoption," which has been translated by Mandalik (page 55, lines 39-42), says that by the operation of the rule Yatha Saktinyaya (the rule which enjoins the observance of a precept as far as possible), the homa (sacrifice) or the like, which is a part of the ritual enjoined for adoption, may be disregarded, for the rule properly applies with regard to the details of an enjoined ritual. Laugakshibhaskara, as Mandalik points out (Yajnavalkya, page 509), goes into this question very elaborately and comes to the conclusion that the homa (sacrifice or any other ceremonies beyond giving and taking are not essential for any of the four classes. The Dattaka Darpana, as we have already stated, declares the performance of the homa and other ceremonies unnecessary where the person to be adopted is a near relation, on the strength of a liberal interpretation of the expression "brother's son" in the text of Yama. The Dattaka Nirnaya (Dattaka Shiromoni, page 238) declares an adoption performed without homa to be valid, at least in the case of Sudras. The Dattaka Kaumudi (Dattaka Siromoni, page 245) quotes the commentary of Maheswara and the Dayakala of Bhabadeva as authorities in favour of the validity of an adoption where the datta homa ceremony has not been performed. Jagannath, in his great Digest of Hindu Law, translated by Colebrooke, after an elaborate examination of the texts, comes to the conclusion that an adoption without the performance of the datta homa is valid (Volume III, page 323; Book V, Chap. IV, section VIII, paragraph 273). Jagannath observes that the gift and acceptance only are essential, and that the homa or oblation to the fire with holy words from the Veda is an unessential part of the ceremony; even though it be defective, the adoption is nevertheless valid, for no one admits that the principal object is unattained i an unessential part be defective. Jagannath directs a very weighty criticism against the position that the datta homa is necessary: if you say that the performance of the homa is essential, then you cannot but admit that it must be accurately, properly and completely performed; for if there be any defect in its performance, it cannot serve the purpose; but if you say that even a defective homa is sufficient, you necessarily admit that it is not essential. There can be no question as to the weight to be attached to an opinion expressed by Jagannath Tarkapanchanan, who, as stated by Dwarkanath Mitter, J., in Kory Kolitany v. Monseram Kolita (6), was one of the most learned Pandits that Bengal had ever produced and whose authority on questions of Hindu Law ranks only next to that of Jimutavahana, Raghunandana and Srikrishna. The divergence of opinion to which we have referred has led to a similar want of unanimity amongst leading text-writers of the last century. Thus, Shama Churn Sirkar strenuously maintained to the end the view that the datta homa is essential, not only in the case of the three regenerate classes, but also in the case of Sudras, and wrote a learned criticism on the contrary opinion established by a Full Bench of this Court [Behari Lal v. Indramani (7)], subsequently approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, Indromoni v. Behari Lal (8); [Vyavastha Darpana, 3rd Edition, Part I, page 355, Part II, page 574; Vyavastha Chandrika, Part II, page 125] Dr. Jogendranath Bhattacharyya acquiesced in the view that the datta homa is not necessary in the case of Sudras, but maintained that it is essential in the case of the three regenerate classes [Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Volume I, page 450]. On the other hand, Sastri Golap Chandra Sarkar follows the view of Jagannath that the absence of the datta homa does not in any case affect the validity of an adoption (Tagore Lectures on Adoption, page 377).

When we turn to examine the course of judicial decisions on the subject, we meet with a similar absence of uniformity. But one point is now finally settled, viz, no religious ceremony is essential in the case of adoption by Sudras. This had been formulated by the Supreme Court of Calcutta as early as 1800 when Sir John Anstruther, C. J., with the concurrence of Royds and Russell, JJ., held, in the case of Gopee Mohan Deb v. Sree Rajcrishna Deb (9), that the adoption was validly made if gift and acceptance of the child by an overt act was shown to have taken place. The elaborate judgment of the Chief Justice is mentioned by Sir Thomas Strange in his Elements of Hindu Law, 1825, Volume I, Page 84, but has never been traced. There was, after this, a uniform succession of decisions to that effect: Joymony Dossee v. Siboosoondry Dossee (10), Dayamayee v. Rasbihari (11), Ramkishore v. Bhubanmayee (12), Perkash Chandra v. Dhanmani (13), Sreenarain v. Kishen Soondery (14). The flow of this current was, however, interrupted by the contrary view taken in Bhairubnath v. Mohesh Chandra (15) and Sayamalal v. Saudamini Dasi (16), which were doubted and disapproved in Nittianund v. Krishna Dyal (17) and were ultimately overruled by the Full Bench in Behari Lal v. Indramani (7), the decision wherein was confirmed on appeal to the Judicial Committee, Indromoni v. Behari Lal (8). This brought the rule on this point into harmony with what had been laid down in Sootrugun v. Sabitra (15) [on appeal from Sabitreea v. Sutur Gun (19)], Veerapermall v. Narain (20), Alwar v. Ramaswamy (21) and Thangathanni v. Ramu Mudali (22). The principle that religious ceremonies are not necessary in the case of an adoption by a Sudra has been applied to support the inference that a Sudra leper can adopt, Sukmari v. Ananta (23); see also Shoshinath v. Krishnasundari Dasi (24). As regards the three regenerate classes, however, the point is by no means settled. The dictum of Lord Wynford in Sootrugun v. Sabitra (18) undoubtedly admits of a wide interpretation, and in Madras it was actually decided in Singamma v. Yinjamuri Venkatacharlu (25), on the strength of the opinion of Jagannath and the decision of Sir Thomas Strange in Veerapermall v. Narain (20), that even in the case of Brahmans, the gift and acceptance of a boy qualified to be adopted is sufficient to constitute a valid adoption according to Hindu Law. A similar view was adopted in the case of a Kshatriya in Chandramala v. Muktamala (26), and of a Nambudri Brahman in Shankaran v. Kesavan (27). But the tide has apparently turned back in Madras, and the view taken in Singamma v. Yinjamuri Venkatacharlu (25) has been doubted in Venkata v. Subhadra (28) and Subbarayar v. Subbammal (29), though it has been held in the second of these cases that the datta homa, which had not been performed by the adoptive father, could, after his death, be performed by his widow. The later view in Madras, as indicated in Gobindayyar v. Dorasami (3) and Ranganayakammá v. Alwar Setti (30), is sought to be supported by reliance on the dictum of the Judicial Committee in Shoshinath v. Krishnasundari Dasi (24) to the effect that "amongst the twice-born classes, there can be no valid adoption by deed, and certain religious ceremonies, the datta homa in particular, are in their case requisite." A similar view is embodied in the extract from Savara Swami translated by Ellis (Strange's Hindu Law, 1825, Volume II, page 192) and had also been put forward by the Pandits who were consulted in the cases of Alank Manjari v. Fakir Chand (31) and Bullubakant v. Kishenprea (32). The statement by Dwarkanath Mitter, J., in Luchmun v. Mohun (1), to which reference has already been made, points in the same direction, and Thakoor Oomrao Singh v. Thakooranee Mehtab Koonwer (33) leads to the same conclusion, though it recognizes that the ceremony may be performed at any place. There are also expressions in Ravji v. Lakshmibai (34) which may possibly be called in aid by those who seek to support the more stringent rule. In this diversity of judicial opinion, it must be conceded that the principle that datta homa ceremony is essential for the validity of an adoption among Brahmans still counts a strong body of supporters, and that the rationalistic view has not yet finally triumphed over formalism. Yet among all this divergence of opinion, the doctrine clearly emerges that the datta homa is not necessary when the adoptive father and the adopted child belong to the same gotra: Govindayyar v. Dorasami (3), Ranganayakamma v. Alwar (30), Thanathanui v. Rama Mudali (22), Vedavalli v. Mangamma (35), Valubai v. Govind (4), Atmaram v. Madho Rao (2) Nittianund v. Krishna Dyal (17). It has, indeed, been argued that this distinction is not based on logical grounds, and that the view cannot be maintained that datta homa becomes unnecessary where the adoptive father and the adopted child belong to the same gotra, because a change of gotra is not necessary in such a case. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine, whether what is thus regarded as an exception is based on logical grounds, or, as is not improbable, really indicates a modern relaxation of the primitive inflexible rule, in the growth of which, as in so many archaic systems, formalism exercised a dominating influence. Whether the rule itself will ultimately stand discredited and disappear, it is needless to speculate in this instance; it is sufficient to hold that the present case falls within the text of Yama and is covered by a long series of decisions which affirm the doctrine that even amongst twice-born classes, the datta homa is not essential when the adopted boy is of the same gotra as his adoptor.

In this view, the validity of the adoption of the plaintiff must be upheld, the decree of the Subordinate Judge affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 31 OF 1913.

August 12, 1914.

TULSIDAS LALUBHAI—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

THE BHARATKHAND COTTON MILLS CO., LD.—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 169—Petition by creditor to wind-up—Dispute about genuineness of claim—Object of petitioner to bring pressure in order to obtain cheap and expeditious payment—Order refusing to wind-up—Appeal, whether maintainable.

The principle upon which a Company is to be wound-up on the petition of a creditor is simply its inability to pay after proper demand made and the lapse of three weeks. Any such neglect must be judged by reference to the facts of each particular case, and when the defence is that the debt is disputed, all that the Court has first to see is whether that dispute is, on the face of it, genuine or merely a cloak of the Company's real inability to pay just debts.

Where a creditor's demand is in respect of a claim which the Company honestly believes to be a fraudulent claim and unsustainable at law, and in filing a winding-up petition his object is to bring the pressure of insolvency proceedings to bear upon the Company in order to make it pay cheaply and expeditiously a heavy debt which it desires to dispute in the Civil Courts, the petition for insolvency of the Company must be dismissed under section 169 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882).

An appeal will lie from an order refusing to wind-up a Company.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ahmedabad, in Miscellaneous Application 282 of 1912.

Mr. G. S. Rao, (with him Mr. M. K. Mehta), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Desai, (with him Mr. D. A. Khare), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner-appellant is assignee of certain debts alleged to be due by defendant-Company to its late Secretary and Manager, Mr. Kevaldas, and his benamidars, his wife and daughter. The petitioner-appellant gave the Company notice on the 7th of October 1912 and demanded payment. On the 24th October 1912 the Company replied in a rather vaguely worded letter, the general content of which, however, clearly indicates the line of defence subsequently adopted by the Company. On the 15th of November the petitioner, instead of accepting the Company's challenge and bringing a suit to vindicate the justice of his demand, put in a winding-up petition. This came on before the District Judge, and the Company replied in effect that the alleged demand was in respect of a claim which the Company honestly believed to be a fraudulent claim and unsustainable at law. The matter appeared to the learned District Judge to be one of great complexity, and we think that in declining to go into it upon this petition he acted upon sound and correct principles. We are not afforded any assistance by such cases as In re King's Cross Industrial Dwellings Company (1) and In re Great Britain Mutual Life Assurance Society (2). The dicta of Jessel, M. R., in the latter case certainly appear to be rather widely and loosely expressed, but in no case could such general dicta be carried further than the facts of the case would warrant. If any general rule is to be laid down at all, it is easily obtained from the Statute Law. The principle upon which a Company is to be wound-up, for all the purposes with which we are now concerned, is simply its inablity to pay its just debts, and that inability is said to be indicated by its neglect to pay after proper demand made and the lapse of three weeks. It is quite clear, however, that any such neglect must be judged by reference to the facts of each particular case, and that, where the defence is that the debt is disputed, all that the Court has first to see is whether that dispute is, on the face of it, genuine or merely a cloak of the Company's real inability to pay just debts. In this case it is perfectly clear that the defence, whatever its ultimate result may be, has substance in it, for it is hardly even the petitioner-appellant's case that the Company is unable to pay the debt it owes him. It has been stated here that he expects to obtain all his dues in full in the liquidation. Thus, therefore, it appears that the petitioner's object is to bring the pressure of insolvency proceedings to bear upon the Company in order to make it pay cheaply and expeditiously a heavy debt which it desires to dispute in the Civil Courts, and this, we are both very strongly of opinion, is one of the worst abuses to which the winding-up sections of our Statute Law upon Companies could be perverted. We are clearly of opinion that the learned Judge below was right, and that his order ought to be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

JAGARALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 49 (a)—Lease-hold property, whether heritable—Lease for a term of years—Death of tenant before expiry of term—Right of son to hold lease—Suit for ejectment—Notice to quit.

A lease-hold property under the Bengal Tenancy Act or under any other Act if it is for a term of years is necessarily heritable, inasmuch as the contract enables the lessee to remain in possession for the full term.

Where a tenant holding under a written lease for a fixed term of years died before the expiry of his term and his son held the lease and went on cultivating the lands even after the lease:

Held, that the son was liable to be ejected without a notice to quit.

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Tipperah, dated the 29th February 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, third Court, Chandpur, dated the 23rd May 1911.

Babu Kritanta Kumar Basu, for the Appellant.

Babus Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Jotindra Mohan Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by an occupancy raiyat in ejectment against an under-raiyat. It appears that the father of the defendant took a lease from the plaintiff as under-raiyat of his holding for nine years. The rent stipulated for was Rs. 45 and odd. But apparently under the provisions of section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act this rent was irrecoverable, and upon the tenant's admission that the real rent was Rs. 8-4-0 the plaintiff continued to accept that rent. The other conditions of the lease do not appear in any way to have been varied, and it cannot be said that the lease was cancelled or a new tenancy created. If it was it must have been created before the death of the original tenant. That tenant died five years after the inception of the lease and his son succeeded him and went on cultivating till the expiry of the lease. When the plaintiff wanted to eject him under section 49 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he pleaded that he could not be ejected without notice, and in this suit both the lower Courts have held that that is so.

It is perfectly true that it has been held by this Court in more than one case that the ordinary holding of an under-raiyat from year to year is not in itself heritable. There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which makes it heritable. But that is a very different thing from saying that a lease-hold property is in any case not heritable and that the Bengal Tenancy Act can make it not heritable. A lease-hold property under the Bengal Tenancy Act or under any other Act if it is for a term of years is necessarily heritable, inasmuch as the contract enables the lessee to remain in possession for the full term, and in the case of a kabuliat such as this is, where the lessee promises to hold land for nine years, his death can make no difference to the contract under section 37 of the Contract Act. It cannot be said, therefore, that in no circumstances can an under-raiyati be heritable, and there is no law that we are acquainted with that has ever said so. We think that on the death of the lessee his son had a right to hold the lease and did hold it, and that the finding of the lower Court, that after Budha Gazi's death the plaintiff and defendants entered into a contract with one another that the latter shall continue as under-raiyat, or in other words, the plaintiff recognised, as he says, the heirs of Budha Gazi as his tenants, is a mere matter of argument and certainly cannot be a finding of fact upon evidence; for this simple reason the defendants did not appear and the case was dismissed ex parte, and this is clear from the Munsif's judgment where he puts forward the same consideration as an argument raised by the Pleaders in the case.

We think that as a question of law the present defendants did not enter into a fresh contract with the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's recognition of them which was unnecessary, cannot operate in law as any admission that there was a renewal of the contract or fresh contract. There is nothing to show that the original contract did not continue. That being so, we think that the plaintiff who is a raiyat who wishes to cultivate his own land, is entitled to succeed in this suit and to eject the defendants-under-raiyats on the expiration of the term of the written lease and that as the written lease expired some years ago, the plaintiff is further entitled to obtain damges for use and occupation which he claims for two years with costs.

The judgment and decree of the lower Court are set aside and the plaintiff's claim is decreed in full with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

RAMCHANDRA KRISHNA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3, Sch. II, cl. 18—Agreement to refer to arbitration after institution of suit—Application for stay of suit—Adjustment within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3.

Clause 18, Schedule II, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is restricted to cases in which the suit complained of has been instituted after the agreement to refer to arbitration.

Where after the institution of a suit, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration, and the defendant moved the Court to stay proceedings:

Held, that the agreement did not fall under any of the clauses of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code and that, therefore, the application must fail

Per Beaman, J.—A mere agreement to refer to arbitration, even though it be in other respects valid, cannot be such an adjustment in whole or in part of the suit as the Court can give effect to under Order XXIII, rule 3.

Where the Court is seized of a cause, its jurisdiction cannot be ousted by the private and secret act of parties, and if they, after having involved the authority of the Court and placed themselves under its superintendence, desire to alter the tribunal and substitute a private arbitrator for the Court, they must proceed according to the law laid down in the first sixteen clauses of the second Schedule.

VYANKATESH MAHADEV v. RAMCHANDRA KRISHNA.

Civil application under Extraordinary Jurisdiction, against an order passed by the District Judge of Poona, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 3 of 1913, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Civil Suit No. 657 of 1910.

Mr. Coyajee, with him Mr. B. V. Vidwans, for the Applicant.

Messrs. D. A. Khare, with him J. B. Gharpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—A suit had been instituted, and it is alleged that the plaintiff and one of the defendants after the institution of the suit entered into an agreement to submit the matters in difference between them to arbitration. Thereupon the defendant moved the Court to stay the further progress of the suit. The first Court refused, and on appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that the defendant's application could not be sustained and that the suit must proceed.

We are asked to interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction and to set aside that order of the learned District Judge. It appears to me that the agreement alleged to have been made between the plaintiff and one of the defendants does not fall under any of the clauses of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. The first sixteen of those clauses exhaust the whole process of arbitration after the suit has been instituted and the parties desired to submit their differences to arbitration under the control of the Court. The Court under those sixteen clauses controls completely the whole course of the reference, indeed the reference is its own, and its jurisdiction is never at any time ousted until a good award has been made. In the event of an award having been made, but being set aside for any reason, the Court immediately resumes its jurisdiction and completes the trial of the action. The next class of cases provided for in the second Schedule are those in which persons who have not instituted any legal proceedings desire to submit any difference between them to arbitration. Having agreed to do so either party may then bring the agreement into Court, and, if resisted by the other party, his application to have the agreement filed and further action taken upon it will be treated as a suit. Thereafter, again, the Court immediately assumes and retains control of the subsequent arbitration proceedings. The third and the last case provided for in the second Schedule is where the parties who have not come into Court have not only agreed to refer matters in difference between them to arbitration, but have obtained an award. Here again the party desiring to enforce the award may bring it into Court and upon proper proceedings obtain a decree in conformity with it. There remains only one single clause 18, which is of an exceptional character and virtually re-enacts a portion of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, which is declared to have no applicability to any arbitration proceeding provided for in the second Schedule. That clause, which is also to be found almost in totidem verbis in section 19 of the Arbitration Act, provides for a special class of cases in which, after parties have agreed to submit matters in difference between them to arbitration, one of them in violation of such agreement institutes a suit in respect of any or all of those matters. Then the other party may set up in bar of the suit the agreement to submit to arbitration. If this analysis be correct, and I think there is no doubt but that it is, it is clear that what the defendant here relies upon is an agreement nowhere provided for in the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, nor does it fall within the language or the spirit of section 18, for that section, as I say, is designedly restricted to cases in which the suit complained of has been instituted after the agreement to refer to arbitration. It might be objected that no solid ground in reason can be found for refusing to extend the principle of that section to cases where, after a suit had been instituted, parties had privately agreed to submit the matters in difference between them to arbitration, and in spite of such agreement and in violation of it one of them insists on going on with the suit. The answer to that appears to me to be short and simple, and to cover other objections which might arise upon the other points I have very generally indicated, for, in my opinion, where the Court is seized of a cause its jurisdiction cannot be ousted by the private and secret act of parties, and if they, after having invoked the authority of the Court and placed themselves under its superintendence, desire to alter the tribunal and substitute a private arbitrator for the Court, they must proceed according to the law laid down in the first sixteen clauses of the second Schedule. Therefore, it appears to me that there is no force whatever in the applicant's contention that a private agreement of this kind is on the same footing as the private agreement contemplated in clause 17 reproducing old section 523, nor, as I have just explained, will it give him any right to invoke the assistance of clause 18. How then could it serve him? Only as a lawful agreement by which the suit had been adjusted wholly or in part. Doubtless any parties litigating in Court have perfect liberty to compose their differences amongst themselves by entering into any lawful agreement, compromise or satisfaction. And when this is done, they have only to apply to the Court to act under Order XXIII, rule 3. But it is equally clear that a mere agreement to refer to arbitration, even though it be in other respects valid, could not be such an adjustment in whole or in part of the suit as the Court could give effect to under Order XXIII, rule 3.

In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge below was right and no case whatever has been made out for the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction. I would, therefore, dismiss this application with all costs.

HAYWARD, J.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant No. 1 with regard to a certain matter which was subsequently referred by them to private arbitration without leave of the Court. The defendant No. 1 thereupon applied for stay of the suit in consequence of the reference to private arbitration outside the Court.

The original Court refused to stay the suit, holding that the reference had been made under a mistake of fact, and that in any case it did not amount to an adjustment of the matter in suit within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code.

The first Appeal Court did not decide the question as to mistake of fact, but held that there was no adjustment inasmuch as there had been no award within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, and that further the suit could not be held to be barred by the contract to refer, as that contract was entered into subsequent to suit, and was not prior to suit as contemplated by section 21 of the Specific Relief Act. Moreover, it pointed out that that provision had been repealed by rule 22 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code.

On this application for revision it has been contended, though the contention has not been very seriously pressed, that the submission to arbitration did, as a matter of fact, amount to a lawful adjustment, but there does not seem to me to be any substance in that contention, as there was no resulting award as explained in the case of Rukhanbai v. Adamji Shaik Rajbhai (1) and Venkatachellam Reddi v. Rangiah Reddi (2). It is to be observed that there was a resulting award in Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (3), in which case it was held by the present learned Acting Chief Justice that there was a good adjustment within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, to which effect could be given under the saving provisions of section 89 of the Civil Procedure Code.

But it has been contended, and strenuously contended, that a stay ought to have been granted of the suit. It has been argued that notwithstanding the pendency of the suit it was open to the parties to enter into an agreement to arbitrate privately, without leave of the Court, and to proceed to have that private reference to arbitration or the resulting award converted into an independent decree of the Court. It appears to me, however, that the matter is concluded by the wording of rule 3 and rule 15 occurring among the first sixteen rules referring to arbitration during pendency of a suit with the consent of the Court. Rule 3 lays down the conditions upon which jurisdiction in the suit shall be withdrawn from the Court and that condition is that there has been an order of reference under that rule by the Court. As no other condition is stated, it must be presumed that that is the only condition under which the suit could be removed from the jurisdiction of the Court. Then again, rule 15 expressly provides the conditions under which jurisdiction in the suit can be resumed by the Court. It states that that can occur when the award either becomes void or has been set aside by order of the Court. Again, as these are the only circumstances under which jurisdiction can again be resumed by the Court, it must be presumed that there are no other circumstances under which such jurisdiction could be resumed by the Court. A ruling to the contrary has been quoted to us in the case of Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (4) and it has been pointed out that that ruling was apparently approved of by one of the Judges in the case of Pragdas v. Gardhardas (5), but it seems to me that caution must be observed in giving weight to that distant authority in view of the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Gulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (6). The Privy Council there appear to have taken the view that the rules corresponding to the present rules of the Code were exclusive and the only rules permitting arbitration during the pendency of a suit before a Court, and that the succeeding rules corresponding to rules 17 to 21 of the second Schedule of the Code applied solely to arbitration in matters which had not come as suits before the Court. The Privy Council's decision has been so interpreted both by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts in the cases of Tincowry Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey (7) and Venkatachellam Reddi v. Rangiah Reddi (2).

It has also to be observed that stay of a suit instituted after the reference to arbitration would alone appear to be contemplated by the wording of rule 18 of the second Schedule, which is almost identical with the concluding thirty-seven words of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, and that interpretation is borne out by the cases of Peruri Suryanarayan & Co. v. Gullapudi (8) and Ramjidas Poddar v. Howse (9) dealing with the corresponding section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. So that this application would have been bound to fail whether it had been possible to have recourse to rule 18 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code or the concluding words of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act or section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. It appears to me, therefore, that this application must be dismissed, and the order of the first Appeal Court confirmed, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss the further question raised whether the decision of the learned Judge would or would not have amounted to irregularity in the exercise of the jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Rule discharged with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29—Partition among superior landlords—Distribution of rent—Enhancement.

If the total rent remains unaltered, its distribution, by agreement of parties, over different parcels of land does not constitute enhancement within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 15th February 1911, affirming that of the Munsif of Mymensingh, dated 9th June 1910.

Babu Binal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Appellant.

Babu Joges Chandra Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal by the defendant in a suit for rent, the controversy relates to the rate at which the rent is payable. The plaintiff claims rent at the rate of Rs. 16-4 a year. The defendant asserts that he is not liable to pay rent at a higher rate than Rs. 7 a year. The Courts below have found that the defendant held under the plaintiff and his co-sharers two separate tenancies, that in 1866 the holdings were amalgamated and that the consolidated rent was fixed at Rs. 80; consequently in 1885, when the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force, the defendant held under the plaintiff and his co-sharers one holding for which Rs. 80 was annually payable. In 1892 there was a partition amongst the superior landlords; the consequence was that the land now in dispute fell into the share of the plaintiff, and by agreement of parties Rs. 16-4 was fixed as the fair rent payable in respect thereof. The defendant argues that as before 1866 Rs. 7 was payable as annual rent in respect of this land, there has been an enhancement in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This contention is obviously unfounded. There has been no enhancement at all, for it is not suggested that in 1892, when the partition and distribution of rent took place, the rent was enhanced from Rs. 80 to a higher sum. If the total rent remained unaltered, its distribution, by agreement of parties, over different parcels of land does not constitute enhancement within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. What the defendant now seeks to do is to deprive plaintiff of the fruit of the agreement of 1892 under which he made himself liable to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 16-4 a year for the disputed land. His contention is clearly unjust and should not prevail.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 185—Private land—Determination—Onus—Evidence.

Section 185 of the Madras Estates Land Act enacts rules to determine whether any particular land is private land. The presumption is that it is not and in determining the question the Court is to have regard to the local custom and to the question whether the land was before the 1st day of July 1898 specifically let as private land, and to any other evidence that may be produced. Letting as private land after 1st July 1898 is not to be taken into account.

Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, dated the 13th of November 1912, in Second Appeal No. 564 of 1912, perferred against that of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 535 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Yellamanchili, in Original Suit No. 358 of 1909.

Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Appellant.

Mr S. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Private land is defined in section 3, clause 10, of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) as the domain or home-farm land of a landholder by whatever designation known, such at kambattam, khas, sir or pannai, and section 185 enacts rules to determine whether any particular land is private land. The presumption is that it is not, and in determining the question the Court is to have regard to local custom and to the question whether the land was before the 1st day of July 1898 specifically let as private land, and to any other evidence that may be produced. Letting as private land after 1st July 1898 is not to be regarded because it was thought that after the introduction of the Tenancy Bill landholders might have attempted to extend unduly the area of private land. It is clear, however, from the section that the fact that the land has been let as private land in the years immediately preceding 1898 is some evidence that it was private land, to be considered with the evidence of local custom and all the other evidence in the case. In face of these provisions we cannot accept Mr. Sarma's contention that the Act does not recognise as private land any cultivable land which was not private land at the date of the Permanent Settlement; what the Court has to find is, with regard to the clauses of evidence mentioned in the section, whether the land was private land at the passing of the Act.

The land in question has been found by two Courts, on evidence upon which in our opinion they might legitimately come to that conclusion, to be private land; and the learned Judge has declined to interfere. We are not prepared to differ from him and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

NINGANGAUDA SIDDANGAUDA— PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Right of widowed daughter-in-law—Consent of mother-in-law in whom estate vested.

Under Hindu Law a widowed daughter-in-law, that is to say, the widow of a pre-deceased son, can make a valid adoption with the contemporaneous consent of her mother-in-law in whom the estate of the last full owner is vested as an heir.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Bijapur, in Appeal No. 64 of 1911, confirming that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Muddebihal, in Civil Suit No. 35 of 1908.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Setlur (with him Mr. P. D. Bhide), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts out of which this second appeal arises are few and undisputed. One Ramanganda had a son Ninganganda, who died during his life-time leaving a widow Shidava. Thereafter Ramanganda died leaving a widow Avabai, who inherited the property of her husband. In 1878 Shidava adopted Shidappa with the consent of Avabai, in whom the estate was vested at the time as the heir of the last full owner. Shidava died in 1904. Avabai apparently had pre-deceased Shidava. The present plaintiff, who is the adopted son of Shidappa, claims to be the owner of the property in suit, while the defendants claim the property as the reversioners of Ramanganda. It is common ground that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed if the adoption of Shidappa by Shidava is valid. The lower Courts have held the adoption to be valid, mainly relying upon the case of Payapa v. Appanná (1).

In the appeal before us, the same question has been raised, and it is argued on behalf of the defendants that the adoption by Shidava is invalid as the adoption is not to the last full owner, and that the consent of Avabai cannot validate it. In other words, it is contended that the case of Payapa v. Appanna (1), which is admittedly on all fours with the present case, is not correctly decided. It is conceded—and I think rightly conceded—that there is no decision of this Court or of the Privy Council which is in conflict with Payapa's case (1). But Mr. Nilkanth has relied upon certain dicta in Shri Dharnidhar v. Chinto (2), Ramachandra v. Mulji Nanabhai (3), Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (4) and Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (5), as showing that the decision in Payapa's case (1) cannot now be accepted as a binding authority. He has also drawn our attention to the criticism on these cases in paragraphs 194 and 195 of Mayne's Hindu Law (8th Edition, pages 255-258).

In dealing with these cases it is necessary to bear in mind the particular facts of each case, and the point for decision with reference to which the observations must be deemed to have been made. It is also necessary to remember that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides, and that it cannot be quoted for a proposition which may seem to follow logically from it. Viewed in this light, it is clear that Payapa's case (1) is an authority for the proposition that a widowed daughter-in-law (I mean the widow of a pre-deceased son) can make a valid adoption with the contemporaneous consent of her mother-in-law in whom the estate of the last full owner is vested as an heir. We are not concerned in this case with the exact scope of the general propositions enunciated in the case as third and fourth exceptions to the rule by Ranade, J. The observations in the two earlier cases were obiter dicta and considered by the Court which decided Payapa's case (1). The Full Bench ruling in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (4) does not touch the point actually decided in Payapa's case (1). The Full Bench considered the question of the power of the grandmother to make a valid adoption, and held that her power to adopt was at an end when her son died leaving a grandson as his heir.

The considerations which would apply to the limited proposition with which we are concerned in this appeal, and with which the learned Judges in Payapa's case (1) were concerned, would be quite different, and, so far as I can see, there is nothing in the Full Bench case which is in conflict with the main ground of Payapa's decision (1). The same may be said of the case of Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (5) in which, as I read the observations of Chaubal, J., it was merely suggested that the general propositions stated as the third and fourth exceptions to the ordinary rule were not universally true and could not apply to certain widows adopting under certain conditions. In any case I see nothing in these two cases which is in conflict with the decision in Payapa's case (1). On a careful consideration of the arguments urged by Mr. Nilkanth, I am unable to see any reason to dissent from the decision in Payapa's case (1).

I consider it essential that a rule affecting the devolution of property after it is laid down definitely and clearly should not be lightly disturbed unless there are clear and cogent reasons to do so. Payapa's case (1) was decided in 1898. Mr. Justice Ranade then observed as follows (page 332):—"Nothing is more common in this country than to find that parents, when they grow old and have the misfortune of losing an only son in their old age, leaving a young widow behind, think it their duty to console that widow for the loss she has suffered by permitting her to adopt a son in preference to adopting a son themselves." To adopt any other view now would have the effect of unsettling many titles settled on the footing of Payappa's case (1). I would, therefore, follow the decision in Payapa's case (1).

Apart altogether from Payapa's case (1), I see nothing in such an adoption as we have in this case which is opposed to the Hindu sentiment or Hindu usage or any specific and inflexible rule of Hindu Law In this case Avabai was unquestionably competent to adopt to Ramangauda at the time when she consented to Shidappa's adoption by Shidava and to defeat the rights of the reversioners. Instead of following that method of doing so, she allowed her daughter-in-law to do so by giving her consent to the adoption at the time. It matters nothing to the reversioners whether their rights are defeated by the adopted son of the last full owner or of a pre-deceased son of the last full owner. The rule as to the adoption being to the last full owner for the purposes of inheritance is subject to certain exceptions. For instance, a mother is allowed to adopt, though her adoption is not to the last full owner, so as to enable the adopted son to inherit the property of her son. An exception in favour of the widow of a pre-deceased son when she adopts with the contemporaneous consent of her mother-in-law seems to be just and in accordance with Hindu Law. The result, therefore, is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed with costs.

HEATON, J. —I concur. I do not wish to express any opinion at all on the general principles which were discussed and which it is far from easy to determine, but I am quite satisfied that in this case we should decide as was done in Payapa's case (1).

Will, Parsi, construction of—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 111, applicability of.

A Parsi made a Will of his property in favour of his two sons, stating: "The . two sons are proprietors, half and half alike, and in equal (shares) of my whole 'estate' . At present my elder son.. has no male issue of his body ..therefore, if my elder son gets a male issue, half of the estate is to be made over to him, on his attaining full age. . If my son elder) does not get a son, my son (younger) is to give away his son as . palak." After his death the elder son died leaving no male issue and then his heirs under the Parsi Intestate Succession Act sued for his share:

Held, that on the general principles applicable to the construction of such a Will as well as on the principle of section 111 of the Indian Succession Act, the estate got divided on the testator's death into two portions and each portion became the absolute property of one of the two sons.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Bombay, dated December 9th, 1910, and printed at 9 Ind. Cas. 951, affirming those of the Subordinate Judge of Thana, dated April 2nd, 1910.

FACTS are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court reported in 9 Ind. Cas. 951.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Horace Miller), for the Appellants, contended that there were three points to be considered, viz., (1) whether there was a gift under the Will, (2) whether the gift was valid and (3) whether the suit was barred either in whole or in part.

[LORD DUNEDIN—There were two points only decided in the lower Court, (1) there was no gift and (2), if any, it was barred under the Indian Succession Act].

It was the Will of a Parsi and was written, One must place oneself in the position of the testator in order to construe the Will rightly. There was no custom of adoption among the Parsis and, therefore, any mention of adoption in a Will must imply the intention of the testator to vest the adoptee with proprietary rights.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—Has adoption among Parsis any legal effect?]

At first the custom of primogeniture prevailed among them; the division among sons followed, which in turn was replaced by the Parsi Successisn Act of 1866. There was a well-recognised institution of palak among Parsis. A Parsi could adopt during his life-time to the exclusion of his widow and daughter.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—Therelis no limit of age.]

Section 111 of the Indian Succession Act did not apply. The action was barred by limitation as the true nature of the action was to recover properties from Jehangirji. The High Court wrongly held that there was no limitation in this case, as section 10 of the Limitation Act applied. He was really a trustee for a specific purpose and had to hand over the properties on Pallonji's son coming of age, i. e. 21 years.

[LORD SHAW.—Assume vested interest. As a trustee he ought to have divested himself of the trust in time].

In any case costs ought to come out of the estate as all troubles were caused by the wording of the Will.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated the 9th December 1910. The High Court affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Thana, dated the 2nd April 1910.

The case has reference to the construction of a Will executed by one Dadabhoy Byramji on 8th August 1866. By this Will the testator narrated that of his three sons then living, he has given one in adoption to a paternal uncle. His other two sons were named Pallonji and Jehangirji. The material portions of the Will disposing of the "estate" are these:—

"The said two sons are proprietors: half and half alike, and in equal (shares), of my whole 'estate,' outstandings, debts, title, and interest . . . . Both the heirs are to take care of the said 'estate' and look after it, and both the heirs living together, are duly to enjoy the balance which may remain after payment of the Sarkar's assessment . . . . In this my testamentary writing, I the testator have appointed my two sons as (my) heirs."

The Will then states that Pallonji, the elder, a man then of about 39 years of age, was in a confused state of mind, and that the other son Jehangirji was accordingly entrusted with the management of the "estate."

"by his true and pure integrity, and both the heirs are to equally enjoy half and half alike the whole 'estate' with unanimity with my elder son Pallonji in such a way as not to injure his (Pallonji's) right."

Up to this point in the Will there can be no doubt whatsoever that the property of the estate was effectually and equally divided between these two sons. There then follow, however, the clauses which are said to create difficulty. They are these:—

"At present my elder son Pallonji has no male issue of his body. (He) has only a daughter. Therefore, if my elder son Pallonji gets a male issue, half of the 'estate' is to be made over to him, on his attaining (his) full age."

And it may be proper that the 11th clause of the Will should be quoted in full. It reads thus:—

"I, the testator, have in the second clause of this Will appointed my two sons Pallonji and Jehangirji as my heirs. The wife of Pallonji, the elder of them, has now gone to her father's house. On her return, if she, by instigating her husband, or by any (other way) cause to be mortgaged, sold, given in gift, charity, etc., or disposed of, whatsoever in any way to any one, any immoveable and moveable 'estate', etc., appertaining to the half share during the life-time of my son Pallonji or, after his death, which God forbid, my son Pallonji or his wife, or daughter, or any (other) person (shall), as stated in the third clause of this Will, have no authority, power and right so to do. If my son Pallonji does not get a son, my son Jehangirji is to give away his son as Pallonji's palak (or his adopted son). All the clauses of this Will are applicable to the said adopted (son). If a son be born of the body of Pallonji, he (shall) on his attaining (his) full age be the owner of half share in the whole of the immoveable and moveable 'estate' belonging to me. My heir (and) vakil (or executor) Jehangirji, or his heirs shall raise no objection to give him the share. If they raise any objection, the responsibility arising therefrom is on their heads. All the clauses written in this Will are applicable to the said son of (his body)."

JEHANGIR DADABHOY v. KAIKHUSHRU KAVASHA.

The material facts of the case are that the testator having executed this Will on 8th August 1866 died within a fortnight thereafter, viz, on 21st August 1866. He was survived by his two sons. Pallonji, the elder, was of weak intellect as the Will indicates. Jehangirji entered upon the management of the whole estate, having obtained Probate of the Will in 1867. This state of matters lasted for 30 years, viz., till 1897, when Pallonji died. Pallonji was twice married but had no son. He left a widow and other representatives, who are respondents in this appeal and are his heirs according to the Parsi Intestate Succession Act. The nature of the suit by these heirs is for an account for an ascertainment of the rights and interests of the parties in the estate and for partition, and the claim is grounded on the right of Pallonji as, it is contended, the owner of one-half of the estate from the date of the testator, Dadabhoy's death.

One other fact may now be mentioned, viz., that it is alleged that on 3rd December 1886 Pallonji adopted, as his palak, Byramji, his nephew and son of Jehangirji. Jehangirji and his son Byramji resist the suit, maintaining that Byramji as palak, or adopted son, of Pallonji succeeds in terms of the settlement to the half of the estate which Pallonji so long enjoyed. It is, of course, also maintained that under the terms of the settlement Pallonji never was owner of the one-half of the estate, or, as it would be expressed in English phraseology, the terms of the Will were such as to prevent vesting in Pallonji.

The learned Judges of the Court below have not only dealt with this question but with certain others, including the special situation of Byramji as palak of his uncle. The points among others discussed were (1) whether such a palak could ever take under the Will, looking to the fact that it remained uncertain until Pallonji's death that the condition of a palak taking could ever be purified, viz., that Pallonji should die without a son, and (2) the peculiar point as to the office of a palak to a Parsi becoming effectual only three days after the adoptive father's death. (3) A further question was keenly argued, viz., whether the Will contained in itself sufficient words of grant or gift to the palak.

In the view taken of this case by their Lordships these questions, however interesting, are not necessary for the decision about to be pronounced. For their Lordships are clearly of opinion that under the terms of Dadabhoy Byramji's Will one-half of the estate conveyed vested in Pallonji a morte testatoris. The result of the argument presented would be that if Pallonji had had a son who reached 21 during his father Pallonji's life, then in that event that son would have taken so as to cut out Pallonji from all rights under this Will. The right of Pallonji would accordingly be restricted to that of enjoyment, not even for life, but until the majority of his own son. Their Lordships cannot agree with such a construction.

The destination over to a son who should take upon attaining 21 years of age, would appear to their Lordships to be language appropriate to the events of the death of Pallonji during the life-time of the testator and of his having left a son—the situation also being provided for of that son being at that period of time under 21.

But when the father Pallonji himself survived the testator, it does not appear to their Lordships that there are any words in the Will sufficient to cut down the right of Pallonji to one-half of the estate to a tenancy for life therein, or for a less period, according to the argument. On the contrary, the words employed seem to fit the case of the entire estate being on the testator's death divided into two portions, and of each portion becoming then the absolute property of one of the two sons.

While these are the general principles which would be applicable in the construction of such a Will, in their Lordships' opinion the same result is precisely reached by the application of section 111 of the Indian Succession Act. Their Lordships agree with the view that has been taken as to the applicability of that section in the Courts below. No further question, this being so, need be dealt with.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed

Where an assignee of a decree for rent, without obtaining assignment of the landlord's interest in the land, applies for execution, and one of the judgment-debtors satisfies the decree by payment under compulsion of legal process, the latter is entitled under sections 69, 70 of the Contract Act to call upon the other judgment-debtors for contribution.

There is nothing in section 148 (h of the Bengal Tenancy Act to prevent the assignee from accepting the payment of the decree and certifying such payment to the execution Court.

A suit by some of several persons, bound by a common liability of tenancy, who have discharged the joint obligation, to compel their co-sharers to make good their shares, falls within the scope of Article 41 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and hence, it is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for contribution. The circumstances antecedent to the litigation are not in controversy and may be briefly stated. The first two defendants and the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs held a tenancy under the fourth defendant. The rent fell into arrears, with the result that the fourth defendant brought a suit for rent and obtained a decree on the 18th June 1907. On the 23rd January 1908 the plaintiffs made a payment of Rs. 8 to the decree-holder. On or about the 24th January 1908 the decree-holder assigned the decree to the third defendant who applied for execution on the 25th January 1908. The Court made an order for execution and a decree obtained by the plaintiffs against one of their debtors was attached. On the 14th March 1908 the assignee, by process of execution, realised Rs. 119-8. Subsequently on the 29th April 1908 he realized another sum of Rs. 73 and on the 27th May 1908 after the moveables of the plaintiffs had been attached, they paid to the assignee Rs. 390-15-3 in satisfaction of the decree. On the 19th August 1909 the plaintiffs commenced this suit to compel the first two defendants to contribute in respect of the sums they had paid in satisfaction of the joint decree. The defendants resisted the claim on various grounds. The Court of first instance overruled their objections and made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for one-third of the admitted amount paid by them, against each of the first two defendants. The first defendant appealed to the District Judge and persuaded him to hold that no contribution could be claimed in respect of payments made to the assignee of the decree, inasmuch as under section 148, clause (h), of the Bengal Tenancy Act the assignee was not entitled to execute the decree as he had not obtained an assignment of the land itself. The District Judge accordingly allowed the appeal and made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of the payment made to the original decree-holder himself. The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court.

On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is incompetent under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by the Court of Small Causes when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 500. The amount claimed in the suit is less than Rs. 500. Consequently the question arises whether the suit is of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. On behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that the suit is excluded from the cognizance of the Court of Small Cause by Article 41 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887. That clause excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts a suit for contribution by a sharer in joint property in respect of payments made by him of money due from a co-sharer. On behalf of the respondents, it has further been contended that assuming the decree to be capable of execution at the instance of the assignee, it could be executed only as a money-decree and that consequently the liability which was satisfied by the payment made by the plaintiff was a personal liability of the judgment-debtor, and not a liability which rested upon their joint property. In our opinion there is no foundation for the contentions of the respondents.

Article 41 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act clearly contemplates suits of three classes: first, a suit for contribution by a sharer in joint property in respect of payments made by him of money due from a co-sharer; secondly, a suit for contribution by a mortgagor of joint property in respect of payments by him on account of the property; and thirdly, a suit for contribution by a member of an undivided family in respect of payments made by him on account of the family. The case before us falls within the first description of suits. It is clearly a suit for contribution as it is a suit by some of several persons, bound by a common liability, who have discharged the joint obligation, to compel their co-sharers to make good their shares: Satya Bhusan Bandopadhyaya v. Krishnakali Bandopadhyaya (1). It has been commenced by persons who are sharers in joint property; at any rate, they were sharers in joint property at the time when the money fell due from their co-shares and the suit is in respect of payments made by them of money due from their co-sharers. All the three elements are consequently satisfied and the case falls within the scope of Article 41. The preliminary objection consequently fails.

As regards the merits of the appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the respondents in support of the view taken by the District Judge that the case does not fall either within section 69 or section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. It has been contended that the assignee of the decree for rent was not entitled at all to execute the decree in view of the provisions of section 148 (h) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that is, he was not free to execute the decree either as a decree for rent or as a decree for money. It is not necessary for us to determine whether the contention is or is not well-founded. As was pointed out by this Court in the case of Manurattan Nath v. Hari Nath Das (2), there is a conflict of judicial opinion upon this question; while some of the authorities are in favour of a strict and literal construction of section 148, clause (h), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there are other cases which support a liberal interpretation of this provision of the law. We shall, however, for the purpose of the argument placed before us, assume in favour of the respondents that the assignee of the decree was not entitled to execute the decree even as a decree for money as he had not obtained an assignment of the landlord's interest in the land. It does not follow, however, that the effect of the assignment was to extinguish the liability of the judgment-debtor under the decree. In the first place, it is plain that if at any time before the decree was extinguished by limitation, the assignee of the decree obtained an assignment of the landlord's interest in the land, the bar imposed by clause (h) of section 148 would be removed and he would be in a position to enforce the decree. In the second place, it is equally clear that if the assignee re-transferred the decree to the assignor, the latter would be in a position to enforce the decree. Neither of these positions could be supported if the view were maintained that the effect of the assignment was to extinguish the judgment-debt completely. The true position consequently is this. The judgment-debtors were liable under the decree, but the person who held the decree was not in a position to apply to the Court for execution till a certain contingency had happened. It was in these circumstances that an application for execution was made by the assignee, and the Court ordered execution to issue. Execution was taken out against the plaintiffs and they satisfied the decree by payment made to the assignee under compulsion of legal process. In these circumstances it is plain that what was done by the plaintiff was done lawfully within the meaning of section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. To bring a case within the scope of that section three conditions must be fulfilled. First, the thing must be done lawfully; secondly, it must be done by a person not intending to act gratuitously; and thirdly, the person from whom the act is done must enjoy the benefit of it. Now we have held that the payment was made lawfully, and in this view we are supported by the decision of this Court in the case Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhuban Mardana Lal (3). Was the nthis payment made by persons who did not intend to act gratuitously? It is obvious that when they made the payment, they did not intend to act gratuitously. Finally, the question arises, whether the person for whom the act was done has enjoyed the benefit of it. It has been argued on behalf of the respondents that as the decree was not capable of execution at the moment when the payment was made, the plaintiffs have not by the payment conferred any benefit upon the defendants. This argument is obviously fallacious. As we have already explained, the judgment-debt had not been extinguished and the defendants were still liable to have the decree executed against them by the assignee if he obtained an assignement of the landlord's interest or by the assignor if he obtained a re-transfer of the decree. The benefit which has been conferred upon them by the payment is that they have been absolved from the liability to be pursued either by the assignee or the assignor of the decree. It has been suggested on behalf of the respondents that the payment made to the assignee does not operate as a valid discharge of the decree. For this contention there is, in our opinion, no foundation. Section 148 (h) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not provide either directly or by implication that if a payment is made to the assignee and is accepted, the decree is not thereby satisfied. There is nothing to prevent the assignee from accepting the payment of the decree and certifying such payment to the execution Court.

The position consequently reduces to this. The defendants along with the plaintiffs were liable to satisfy the judgment-debt under a decree held by the fourth defendant. The decree was assigned to the third defendant. He was, under certain circumstances, entitled to execute the decree, and it was not impossible that the fourth defendant might also be placed in a position to execute it by re-assignment. The third defendant did, as a matter of fact, take out execution of the decree. Under compulsion of legal process, the plaintiffs have satisfied that decree. We are clearly of opinion that the case is covered by section 70 of the Indian Contract Act, and that the defendants are liable to be called upon by the plaintiffs to contribute. It is not necessary to discuss in detail the terms of section 69 of the Indian Contract Act, but it is obvious that the case is covered by the section as well. That section provides that a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. Here the plaintiffs were interested in the payment and were even bound by law to make it. It is by reason of that payment that the decree-holder, who would otherwise have proceeded with execution, has not enforced the decree. The view we take is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Pankhabati Chaudhurani v. Nonihal Singh (4) where the earlier decisions will be found reviewed. We are, therefore, of opinion that whether we apply section 69 or 70, it is clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed and this conclusion is obviously in harmony with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit decreed against each of the first two defendants for the sum claimed in the plaint together with interest and costs. The other defendants will bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 15D, 16—Mortgage transactions—Subsequent money-dealings—Claims for both accounts not to be combined.

Under section 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, a suit for an account may be filed by a mortgagor-agriculturist even where the time named for payment has not yet expired under the mortgage, and he may have either a declaration of the amount due on the mortgage or he may combine a declaration of the amount due with a decree for redemption.

Section 16 enables him to sue for a general account of money dealings between him and the lender and for a bare declaration of the amount due, without any relief being claimed.

But he is not permitted to import the relief to which he is entitled by way of redemption under section 15D into his claim for an account under section 16, and thus to get the benefit of surplus profits remaining in the hands of the mortgagee under the usufructuary mortgage.

First appeal from the decision of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Civil Suit No. 943 of 1910.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this suit has had dealings with the plaintiff for many years and has advanced money to him upon mortgage, and balances due on old accounts have been secured by the mortgage of property of the plaintiff. The mortgage-bonds outstanding at present are Exhibits 63, 64 and 65, which do not all relate to the same property, Exhibit 65 relating to property entirely different from that to which Exhibits 63 and 64 relate. The last of these mortgage-bonds was executed in December 1903. Further monetary dealings took place between the plaintiff and the defendant which are evidenced by promissory notes commencing with the 1st of August 1905. The defendant in 1909 and 1910 brought four suits in the Jalgaon Court upon promissory notes executed by the plaintiff subsequent to July 1905.

The plaintiff then instituted a suit for a general account under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and for redemption of the mortgaged property, and upon his application the four suits filed in Jalgaon on promissory notes were transferred by the District Court, Khandesh, to the First Class Subordinate Judge in Dhulia. That Judge has now tried the plaintiff's suit for account and redemption, and in taking an account he has made up one general account of the mortgage transactions and the promissory note transactions. The mortgages, he finds, were satisfied by profits received by the defendant some time prior to April 1906, and he has taken the defendant as being in receipt of profits at the rate of Rs. 2,000 a year under his mortgages, which profits subsequent to the date of the satisfaction of the mortgage-debts he has applied in the account in reduction of the defendant's claim upon the promissory notes.

That manner of taking an account has been challenged in this appeal. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that every mortgage of separate property, even where the suit relates to more than one mortgage, must be the subject of separate account under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and that under each separate mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to retain such surplus profits as he may have got before the date of the redemption suit or the date of the redemption decree, and as an authority for that contention, the judgments of Sir Charles Sargent in Janoji v. Janoji (1) and Ramachandra Baba Sathe v. Janardan Apaji (2) are referred to. Now if those authorities apply here they are binding upon us. But it appears to me that the case may be decided in favour of the appellant upon a somewhat different ground.

The mortgagor's right to file a suit for an account and redemption rests upon the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and that Act makes provision for two different classes of suits for account by agriculturists. Under section 15D a suit for an account may be filed by a mortgagor-agriculturist even where the time named for payment has not yet expired under the mortgage, and he may have either a declaration of the amount due on the mortgage or he may combine a declaration of the amount due with a decree for redemption, That is a section which relates purely and exclusively to mortgage transactions. Then there is another section, section 16, which enables him to sue for a general account of money dealings between him and the lender, and that section 16 enables him to sue for a bare declaration of the amount due without any relief being claimed. It says:—"Any agriculturist may sue for an account of money lent or advanced by a creditor and for a decree declaring the amount, if any, still payable." But naturally he does not require any further reliefs than that. The plaintiff does not wish to be authorised to pay if the payment is inconvenient to him, as soon as the amount due is ascertained. Therefore, the two sections where accounts are contemplated stand on a different footing. The plaintiff here, however, has combined his claim for account of the mortgage transactions with his claim for an account of the moneys lent upon promissory notes, and he has sought to import the relief to which he is entitled by way of redemption under section 15D into his claim for an account under section 16, and thus to get the benefit of surplus profits remaining in the hands of the mortgagee under the usufructuary mortgage. This we do not think he is permitted to do by the provisions of the Act, and if it were necessary to go further, it would be sufficient to point out that the result would be contrary to the decisions of Sir Charles Sargent which I have already referred to.

(1) 7 B. 185.
(2) 14 B. 19.

We, therefore, cannot accept the account taken by the lower Court, and the decree must be set aside and the suit remanded for a fresh account, treating the mortgage account as entirely separate from the promissory note account, so that the lender-mortgagee will not be accountable for surplus profits received by him after the date when it has been found that the mortgage-claims were satisfied.

The other point relating to the account which was argued on behalf of the appellant related to the amount of profits with which the mortgagee has been charged, namely, Rs. 2,000 per annum. We do not think that we should interfere with the decision of the lower Court upon that point which was come to after careful consideration of all the evidence, for we are not satisfied that the lower Court was wrong.

As the learned Pleaders for the parties do not wish the mortgage-account to be reopened or to be taken again, we remand the case simply in order that the promissory note account may be taken separate from the mortgage account. The plaintiff will be entitled to take back his mortgaged property on the footing of the mortgages having been discharged, and the suits on promissory notes will be dealt with by the lower Court in accordance with the result of the promissory note account upon the basis indicated in this judgment.

The defendant must pay half the costs in the lower Court and have his costs of this appeal. One set of costs to be set off against the other. The rest of the costs of the suit on remand to be dealt with by the lower Court.

Decree reversed.

Occupancy holding—Transfer for value, validity of—Principles governing transfer—Sale in execution of rent-decree—Application to set aside sale—Transferee a representative of judgment-debtor—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 47.

The principles regarding the transfer for value of occupancy holdings apart from custom or local usage as based upon modern authority are:

1. The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against the raiyat

(a) where it is made voluntarily,

(b) where it is made involuntarily and the raiyat with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside.

A sale is made involuntarily where it is in execution of a money-decree, but not of a decree founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made.

2. The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding, but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy.

Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not, depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

3. The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against all other persons where it is operative against the raiyat.

DAYAMOYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY.

A person, who without the landlord's consent purchases from a raiyat a portion of an occupancy holding which is not transferable by local custom or usage, is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and is entitled to have a sale of the holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent set aside on the ground of fraud.

Where a portion of an occupancy holding is transferred, the transferee can by suit recover possession from the landlord who has forcibly dispossessed him.

A right of occupancy, which is not transferable by custom or local usage, can be transferred.

A holding apart from the right of occupancy cannot be transferred.

Full Bench Reference against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tippera, dated the 21st May 1907, confirming that of the Munsif of Nobinagar, dated the 26th December 1906, in Appeal from Order No. 455 of 1907.

Full Bench Reference against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 28th May 1908, modifying the decision of Munsif of Mymensingh, dated the 8th July 1907, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2388 of 1908.

Full Bench Reference under section 15 of the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, dated the 25th January 1910, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2379 of 1908, against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 17th July 1908, modifying that of the Munsif of Narail, dated the 29th November 1907, in Letters Patent Appeal No. 15 of 1910.

FACTS of Appeal from Order No. 455 of 1907 appear fully from the following Order of Reference made by Coxe and Doss, JJ., on the 14th July 1908.

In this case the respondent No. 2 was the owner of an occupancy holding which was not transferable by local custom or usage. He sold a portion of it to the appellant. The landlord afterwards sued for rent and obtained a decree. In execution he sold the holding and purchased it himself. The appellant then applied under sections 244 and 311 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 173 of the Tenancy Act to have the sale set aside. The lower Appellate Court has decided against the appellant and hence this appeal.

Two points are taken in appeal—

First.—That the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the appellant was not entitled to maintain the application under sections 311 and 244; and secondly.—That he was wrong in holding that the decree-holder's purchase was not proved to have been effected on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

Taking the second point first, we think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this point is one of fact that cannot be questioned in second appeal.

With regard to the first point, the Subordinate Judge has decided the fourth point laid down for decision in his judgment in favour of the appellant. That point is thus stated: "Whether the sale notices were suppressed by fraud of the decree-holder." So we may take it as a finding of fact, with which we cannot interfere in second appeal, that the sale was obtained by the decree-holder by fraud. But the Subordinate Judge holds that the appellant being a purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was not entitled to apply under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code at all.

The question whether the appellant is entitled to apply under section 244 depends on the question whether he is representative of a party to the suit, which depends on the further question whether he has an interest in the judgment-debtor's property which is affected by the decree. This is laid down in Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (1), which has been followed in several of the cases to which we propose to refer. It is clear enough that if the appellant has purchased any interest of the judgment-debtor, that interest is bound by the decree, and the appellant is so far a representative of the judgment-debtor and is entitled to apply under section 244. The question, therefore, narrows itself down to this, namely, whether a person who purchases without the landlord's consent a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage without the landlord's consent, can be said to have purchased any interest at all in the property. The Subordinate Judge has relied on Srimati Nissa Bibi v.

(1) 24 C. 62 (F. B.); 1 C. W. N. 26.

Radha Kishore Manikya (2). In that case the applicant to set aside the sale was a mortgagee of the holding, and the learned Judges held that his right to have the sale set aside depended on the question whether or not the holding was transferable by local usage. They remarked: "If such interest was not transferable either according to law, custom or local usage, then we are of opinion that the applicant could not rightly be regarded as a representative in the proper sense of the word and as falling within the provisions of section 244, Civil Procedure Code." This finding was necessary for the decision of the case, for by necessary implication in the order of remand the learned Judges directed the lower Court to dismiss the application if it was found that the holding was not transferable by local usage.

The only distinction that the learned Pleader for the appellant can draw between this case and that quoted is that this is a case of a sale and that was one of a mortgage. But a perusal of the decision itself will show that it refers generally to all transfers. We think there is no real distinction between the cases. A sale of the holding for arrears of rent would have been as fatal to a mortgage as to a sale.

We think, therefore, that if this decision is sound, we are bound to dismiss the appeal and to hold that in the present case, in which the holding is not transferable by custom, the appellant obtains nothing by his purchase and cannot be regarded as a representative under section 244, inasmuch as if he bought no interest, he has no interest to be affected by the decree. There is, of course, authority for the view that a purchase such as this conveys nothing. We may refer to Biramali Shaik Shikdar v. Gopikanta Shaha (3), Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders Arbuthnot and Co. (4) and Sadagar Sircar v. Krishna Chandra Nath (5).

On the other hand, however, it seems to have been held by necessary implication in Bhagirath Changa v. Sheikh Hafizuddin (6), Ambika Nath Acharjee v. Aditya Nath Moitra (7) and Ayenuddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra Banerjee (8) that a purchaser of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage acquires a good title against his vendor and persons claiming through him, and it has been held further in Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhury (9), Durga Prosad Sen v. Doula Gasee (10) and Sheikh Gozaffur Hossein v. E. Dablish (11) that a transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage does not entitle the landlord to re-enter on the portion so transferred. In view of these authorities, though they are not expressly referred to, it has been held in Omar Ali Majhi v. Moonshi Basirudeen Ahmad (12), following Kunja Behari Mundal v. Sambhu Chandra Roy (13), to which Bungshidhar v. Kedar Nath (14) may be added, that a purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding, whether transferable or not, is entitled to apply under section 310A and, therefore, following Asgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kazi (15), quoted above (?), under section 244. It has been sought to distinguish the present case from Omar Ali Majhi v. Moonshi Basirudeen Ahmad (12) on the ground that the application in the latter case was under section 310A. The words in both section 310A and section 311 are "persons whose immoveable property has been sold," and the whole point is whether the purchaser can be said to have any property at all in the holding. In Asgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kazi (15), the application was under section 311 and section 244. We think there is nothing in this distinction and that if the decisions in Omar Ali Majhi v. Moonshi Basirudeen Ahmad (12) and Asgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kazi (15), are correct, we are bound in the present case to allow the appeal and to hold that the appellant is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the judgment-debtor under section 244.

We think, therefore, that there is a real conflict of authority and that the appeal ought to be referred to a Full Bench, and we refer it accordingly. As Rule 11 of the rules for references to a Full Bench by implication requires that we should state our own opinion on the point referred, we may say that we agree with the decision in Omar Ali Majhi v. Moonshi Basirudeen Ahmad (12), and it necessarily follows that we differ from the view taken in Srimati Nisa Bibi v. Radha Kishore Manikya (2). We would formulate the point to be decided in the following way:

"Is a person, who without the landlord's consent purchases from a raiyat the whole or a portion of an occupancy holding, which is not transferable by local custom or usage, entitled to apply under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code as a representative of the raiyat to have a sale of the holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent set aside on the ground of fraud?"

Subsequently the terms of the reference were modified by an order which ran as follows:

"We direct that this reference do stand over generally, and the reference be treated as including the question whether the appellant can be considered as a representative of the judgment-debtor, regard being had to the fact that he purchased before suit and the words 'the whole or' be omitted from the present reference."

FACTS of Appeal from the Appellate Decree No. 2388 of 1908 appear from the following Order of Reference made by Chitty and N. Chatterjea, JJ., on the 23rd March 1911.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit brought by him to recover possession jointly with defendant No. 44 of certain land. His suit was dismissed by the Munsif, but the Subordinate Judge has given him a decree for one-fourth of his claim, on the ground that he had been recognized as tenant by some of the co-sharer landlords holding a share of 4 annas. As to the facts, it is found that the jote in question belonged to Hari Das Mondal and Parasuram Nama Das, two brothers, in equal shares. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the sons of Hari Das. On Parasuram's death, his widow, defendant No. 44, succeeded to his 8-annas share, and sold 7 annas 15 gandas to the plaintiff on 25th Asar, 1308 (9th July 1901). Within two years before suit filed, the plaintiff was dispossessed of his portion of the holding by the 12-anna co-sharer landlords, who settled these lands with defendants Nos. 6, 8 and 12. It appears that defendent No. 44, plaintiff's vendor, and her co-sharers are in possession of the remainder of the holding, and it is not alleged that they had ceased to pay the rent of the entire holding before the ouster of the plaintiff by the 12-anna co-sharer landlords. It was conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellant that if the case of Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders Arbuthnot and Company (4) is to be followed, then his client has no case. That case is a distinct authority for the proposition that the mere fact of a plaintiff having once had possession would not entitle him as against the landlord to recover possession in a suit not under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. As against the landlord he must show some title. In that case as the transfer to the plaintiff of a portion of the jote was not binding on the landlords, he was unable to show a title on which he could claim to be reinstated in possession. That case is on all fours with the present. It was distinguished in the cases of Benodini Dassi v. Peary Mohan Haldar (16) and Asgar Ali v. Asaboddin Kasi (15). In each of these cases the Court remarked that had the case of Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders Arbuthnot & Company (4) been directly in point, they would have had to consider whether the matter ought not to be referred to a Full Bench. The same remark was made in the case of Rai Kamaleswari Persad Singh Bahadur v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh Bahadur (17). Kuldip Singh's case (4) was again distinguished, but without any note of dissent, in Ashok Bhuiyan v. Karim Bepari (18). In that case the Court pointed out that Kuldip Singh's case (4) is no authority for the proposition that a purchaser of a portion only of a jote gets no title at all. It was again distinguished in the case of

(16) 8 C. W. N. 55.
(17) 2 C. L. J. 369.
(18) 9 C. W. N. 843.

Gour Kaibarta v. Srimati Tarajan Bibi (19), where the plaintiff sued not the landlord but other tenants. On the other hand, we find that Kuldip Singh's case (4) was followed in the case of Manoda Sundari Dasi v. Modhu Sudan Das (20), one of the Judges being a member of the Bench in both cases. We cannot find that Kuldip Singh's case (4) has ever been overruled. At the same time it is questionable whether the principle upon which it proceeds is entirely consistent with the principle on which the cases of Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (9), Durga Prosad Sen v. Doula Gazee (10), Sheikh Gosaffur Hossein v. E. Dablish (11) and Rai Kamalesvari Persad Singh Bahadur v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh Bahadur (17) are based. These cases appear to rest upon the principle that where an occupancy raiyat transfers a portion of his holding but remains in possession of the remainder and pays rent for the entire holding, the tenancy still subsists and there is no abandonment of the entire holding, which alone can entitle the landlord to eject the transferee.

If Kuldip Singh's case (4) was correctly decided, it follows that so long as the transferee of a portion of a holding can remain in possession, he can shelter himself under the title of his transferor, the occupancy raiyat, and the landlord cannot evict him by process of law. If, however, the landlord can by any means prevent his getting into possession, or, when he has got into possession, can oust him by force, the transferee has no remedy at law by suit against the landlord. This is no doubt somewhat of an anomaly, and puts a premium upon violence, the landlord being tempted to take the law into his own hands. Kuldip Singh's case (4) is perhaps indirectly supported by the decision in the recent case of Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (21).

As serious doubts have been cast on the correctness of the decision in Kuldip Singh's case (4) and as the questions raised are of very great importance, we would refer for decision by a Full Bench the question whether in the case of a transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding, such transfer not binding the landlord unless made with his consent, the transferee can by suit recover possession from the landlord who has forcibly dispossessed him.

FACTS in Letters Patent Appeal No. 15 of 1910 appear from the following Order of Reference, made by Jenkins, C. J., and N. Chatterjea, J., on the 25th June 1912:—

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of an occupancy holding, alleging that they had purchased the same at a sale held in execution of a money decree against one Kristo Dass. The defence was that Kristo Dass had no title to the lands, that the holding being non-transferable no right passed to the plaintiffs and that the suit was not maintainable, as one Narain, the nephew of Kristo Dass, who had a share in the holding, had not been made a party. The Court of first instance held that only a four-annas share of the holding belonged to Kristo Dass, four annas to Narain, and the remaining eight-annas share belonged to the contesting defendants Nos. 1 and 2; that the holding not being transferable nothing passed to the plaintiffs at the sale, and that the suit was bad for non-joinder of Narain, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the suit could not be dismissed for non-joinder of Narain, but that he would not be bound by the decree, and that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were Kristo Dass's co-sharers in the holding could not raise the question of transferability of the holding, and gave a decree to the plaintiffs for joint possession in respect of a four-annas share of the lands. That decree having been confirmed on second appeal by Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under the Letters Patent against his judgment. It appears that Kristo Dass, whose interest was purchased by the plaintiffs, did not contest the plaintiffs' claim. The landlord of the holding brought a suit for arrears of rent against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Narain, and so far has not recognized the plaintiffs as tenants and is no party to the suit,

DAYAMOYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY.

The point for consideration in this appeal is whether the question of transferability of Kristo Dass's share in the holding can be raised by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and this depends upon the question whether a right of occupancy not transferable by custom or local usage is a right that is merely personal to the raiyat and as such cannot be transferred at all, or is a right the transfer of which is valid against all persons other than the landlord so that no one except the landlord can take exception to the validity of the purchaser's title. There is a considerable conflict of judicial opinion on the point.

Before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, it was settled by a Full Bench in the case of Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chundra Sen (22) that a right of occupancy was a right that was personal to the raiyat and could not be transferred. The question there arose between the landlord and the transferee. Subsequent to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in the case of Biramali Sheikh Shikdar v. Gopikanta Shaha (3), the learned Judges, after a consideration of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, came to the same conclusion, and it was held in that case that the tenant whose occupancy holding had been sold in execution of a money-decree could himself raise the question that the holding was not transferable in a suit by a purchaser for possession of the holding and that the tenant was not barred by the provisions of section 244, Civil Procedure Code. Biramali's case (3) was followed in a number of cases where such a question was raised by the tenant, with this qualification that if the tenant was aware of the execution proceedings and having had opportunity of objecting did not object, he was precluded by the provisions of section 244, Civil Procedure Code, from raising the question subsequently. The case of Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prasanna Sarkar (23) may be cited as an instance of this class of cases.

In the case of Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (21), a suit for possession by the purchaser of a share of an occupancy holding was resisted, not by the tenant who had transferred his share, but by his co-sharers, and it was held that it was open to tenants in occupation of a portion of the jote, i. e., the co-sharers of the vendor, to question the validity of the transfer.

A different view has been taken in other cases, viz., that the question of transferability is one that might be raised by the landlord but cannot legitimately be raised by trespassers, and that whatever might be the precise nature of the tenants' interest which is purchased, it has a market-value and the transfer is capable of being recognised by the landlord, and that the purchaser is entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of his purchase against all the world except possibly his landlord, see Basarat Mandal v. Sabullah Mandal (24), or in other words, as observed in the case of Hari Das Bairagi v. Udoy Chandra Das (25), the transfer of an occupancy holding is not a void transaction, and is voidable only at the option of the landlord. And in several cases, for instance in Ayenuddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra Banerji (8), it has been held that in a suit between two rival claimants (both of whom derive their title from the tenant), neither of whom is the original tenant nor the landlord, the question of transferability does not arise. These cases, however, can be explained by the doctrine of estoppel.

A sale of occupancy holding has been held to be valid if settlement is made by the landlord with the auction-purchaser as soon as can reasonably be expected after the sale, see Dwarka Nath Pal v. Tarini Sankar Roy (26), and an objection to the sale of a holding with the consent of some of the landlords was overruled in the case of Shukuruddin Chowdhury v. Rani Hemangini Debi (27), on the ground that the non-consenting landlords might give their consent after the sale is held, but that the decree-holders must take the risk and the purchaser must purchase at his peril.

In the case of a voluntary transfer it has been held that the transferor cannot question the validity of the transfers. See Bhagirath Changa v. Hafizuddin (6), but such cases proceed on the ground that the transferor is estopped from impugning the validity of his own transfer.

If the view that the transfer of an occupancy holding is valid against all persons excepting the landlord, is correct, it is difficult to see how the raiyat himself whose right is sold at an execution sale can question the validity of the purchaser's title, or why the validity of the transfer should depend upon recognition by the landlord in cases where the landlord does not impugn the transfer. If, on the other hand, occupancy holdings are not transferable at all, there does not seem to be any reason why persons in the position of the defendants in the present case or even trespassers in the possession of the land should not be entitled to question the validity of the transfer, or why the purchaser should acquire a right of occupancy by consent of the landlord, although he might by virtue of fresh settlement become a non-occupancy raiyat.

The facts of the present case are similar to those of Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (21) referred to above, except that in that case the purchase was made by a kobala which, however, does not make any difference in principle (the doctrine of estoppel not coming into operation either in that case or in the present), but having regard to the conflict of views noticed above and having regard to the great importance of the questions involved, we think the case should be referred to a Full Bench.

The questions referred to the Full Bench are:

(i) Whether a right of occupancy which is not transferable by custom or local usage, is a right which can be transferred at all.

(ii) If not, whether the holding apart from the right of occupancy can be transferred.

(iii) In either case, whether the validity of the transfer can be questioned by any person other than the landlord of the holding.

As these questions arise in a second appeal, the whole case is referred to the Full Bench.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

JENKINS, C.J.—These several references have been heard consecutively, and as they involve many of the debatable points that relate to the transferability of occupancy holdings, apart from local usage, it will be convenient to state our conclusion in general terms. This conclusion rests largely on a recognition of the paramount importance of upholding decisions on which dealings with property have been extensively based. These decisions probably mark a departure from earlier judicial pronouncements and the opinions of those who have studied this question in the past. The life of the law, however, it has been said, is not logic but experience, and the modern departure is probably due to a change in economic conditions, which has brought into prominence problems that did not previously call for solution.

The weight of modern authority establishes the following propositions regarding the transfer for value of occupancy holdings apart from custom or local usage:—

1. The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against the raiyat,

(a) where it is made voluntarily,

(b) where it is made involuntarily and the raiyat with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside.

A sale is made involuntarily where it is in execution of a money-decree, but not of a decree founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made.

2. The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

3. The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against all other persons where it is operative against the raiyat.

Applying, then, these propositions to the questions propounded, we answer them as follows:

(i). The question in appeal from Order No. 455 of 1907 is answered in the affirmative. We accordingly hold that the appellant is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the judgment-debtor under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. This appeal must, therefore, be allowed and an order made as prayed. Each party, however, will bear his own costs throughout.

(ii). The question in Appeal from Appellate decree No. 2388 of 1908 is answered in the affirmative. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and a decree will be passed in favour of the plaintiff for possession, but each party will bear his own costs throughout.

(iii). The questions in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2379 of 1908 are answered as follows: (1) in the affirmative; (2) in the negative; (3) in accordance with the propositions above set out. The result will be that this appeal will be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of the Letters Patent Appeal on this reference.

We would only add that the uncertainty as to the transferability of holdings has been one of the most fruitful sources of litigation, and it is urgently necessary that it should be set at rest by the Legislature.

Ejectment, notice of, validity of—Statutory period, computation of.

Where with reference to the patta and kabuliat the statutory period of a tenant was to expire in June 1913, while the notice of ejectment served upon him required him to vacate his holding in May 1913:

Held, that the notice was perfectly good in law, inasmuch as the time for ejectment fixed by the Oudh Rent Act is with a view to enable both the landlord and the tenant to make their arrangements, respectively, in time for the next year.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 15th October 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Rae Bareli, dated 2nd June 1913.

FACTS.—A tenant held some land under a patta and kabuliat, with reference to which his statutory period was to expire in June 1913. The landlord issued against the tenant a notice of ejectment in 1912, according to which the latter was required to vacate his holding on or before the 15th of May 1913. The question for decision, therefore, was whether the notice was to be considered good in law or bad as premature.

Babus Kismat Rai Jagdhari and Ganga Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. Manuel, Pandit Sheo Dularey Lal, Pandit Savitri Sahay Shukla and Sardar Gurumukh Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The points raised in this appeal are, with one exception, points of fact which cannot be touched in second appeal. The only legal point is that concerning the statutory period and I think that the Courts below are right. The notice is issued in November for ejectment from the beginning of the next Fasli year. No doubt, the notice requires the tenant to vacate on or before 15th May which is before the end of the year, but that, as the Assistant Collector has held, is simply for the convenience of the parties in order that the zemindar may be able to make arrangements for the next year's cultivation and that the tenants also may take up other land. On 15th May there are no crops standing and there is nothing that the tenant can remain in possession of.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Partnership—Joint Hindu family—Death of member of family—Partnership not dissolved—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 253 (10)—Principle—Partnership continued after its determination by death—Limitation—Manager's statement as to date of dissolution—Estoppel—Surety bond to be read in conjunction with partnership deed.

A partnership between certain individuals and a joint Hindu family is not dissolved by the death of a member of the joint family.

The principle of law embodied in section 253 (10), Contract Act, is based on the ground that partners cannot be expected to acquiesce in new partners being forced upon them. But this principle cannot apply when all that happens is that one of the existing partners becomes, by operation of law, entitled on the death of his co-parcener to a larger share in the partnership than he previously possessed in his individual capacity.

When a partnership is determined by death and the surviving partners continue to carry on the business, the statute of limitation is no bar to taking the accounts of the new partnership by going into the accounts of the old partnership which have been carried on into the new partnership without interruption or settlement.

Ahmad Bibi v. Abdul Kader Saheb, 25 M. 26 at pp. 31, 32, referred to.

Where the managing partner of a firm himself issues notices to its constituents informing them that the partnership had dissolved from a particular date, it is not open to him subsequently to contend that this was false and that the partnership had actually terminated sometime before.

A surety bond executed in connection with a partnership must be read in conjunction with the partnership agreement to which it makes express reference. A bond of this kind is to be construed strictly, and the liability of the surety cannot be extended beyond the period for which he was undertaking liability simply by showing that the partnership, which, according to the express provision of the partnership agreement, he was led to believe was to terminate within a specified period, was in fact, by subsequent mutual agreement of the partners to which he was no party, continued beyond that period.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th May 1912.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Madan Gopal, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs, Hargobind and Basheshar Lal, trading under the name of Basheshar Lal-Hargobind, allege that by a written agreement, dated the 1st of January 1901, a contract of partnership was entered into between (1) Maharaj Kishen, defendant No. 4, of the one part, and (2) plaintiffs' firm and the firm of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das, represented by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, of the second part; that under the terms of this agreement the two said firms were to supply the capital for the business of the partnership; and that defendant No. 4 was to act as manager, the profits being shared equally by the two parties. The agreement was, according to paragraph 6, to remain in force for three years from the date of starting work. By a bond, dated the 27th of March 1901, Rai Bahadur Gursahai Mal, the father of defendant No. 4, undertook to stand security for all losses suffered by the two firms to the extent of defendant No. 4's share. The said surety died before suit and defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 represent his estate. Plaintiffs in their plaint, which was presented to the Court on the 22nd of December 1910, allege that the partnership in question was carried on up to the end of December 1907 and was dissolved on the 1st of January 1908, except in so far as the carrying on of the business was necessary for winding-up purposes. They further state that the representatives of the firm of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das have settled matters with themselves and are merely pro forma defendants in the present suit. The plaint further sets out that the business of the partnership was hopelessly mismanaged and that plaintiffs are entitled to claim a settlement of accounts from the late Manager of the concern—Maharaj Kishen. They accordingly claimed the following alternative relief:—

(a) that the partnership be wound-up and after settlement of accounts a decree be passed in favour of plaintiffs for such sums as they might be found entitled to, and

(b) that in the event of the Court finding that the partnership had not been dissolved prior to institution of suit that it should now be dissolved, accounts made up and decree passed in accordance therewith.

The plaintiffs' claim was contested by defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6, and a number of pleas were urged with which we are not concerned upon this appeal. The main ground of defence was that the claim was barred under Article 106 of the Limitation Act inasmuch as the partnership had been dissolved more than three years before suit, and further that the agreement by Rai Bahadur Gursahai Mal to stand surety determined on the lapse of the period of three years for which the partnership was to continue in force according to the terms of the agreement, i. e., from the 1st of January 1901 to the 1st of January 1904. Defendant No. 4 in his written pleas maintained that the partnership in question was dissolved by the death of Munna Lal, one of the partners in the firm of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das, who died in July 1907.

Subsequently, however, when giving evidence before the Court Maharaj Kishen deposed that the partnership remained in existence till November 1907, when it came to an end by arrangement between the partners. The District Judge found that the firm was dissolved at the death of Munna Lal in July 1907, but was continued after his death by mutual consent of the remaining partners, that in point of fact it was not dissolved till the 31st of December 1907, and that consequently plaintiffs' claim against defendant No. 4 was within time. On the other hand, the learned Judge held that the suretyship of Rai Bahadur Gursahai Mal determined after the lapse of the period of three years mentioned in the partnership agreement and that consequently plaintiffs had no claim against the estate of the late surety. A preliminary decree was passed in favour of plaintiffs on the 20th of May 1912, declaring that the partnership of the firm of Maharaj Kishen-Basheshar Lal was dissolved on the 31st of December 1907 and directing Maharaj Kishen, defendant No. 4, to file within one month a balance-sheet showing profits and losses of the partnership.

From this decree Maharaj Kishen has appealed to this Court and on behalf of the appellant Mr. Sheo Narain, his Advocate, has declared that he gives up grounds 3 and 4 of the grounds of appeal and that his sole contention is that the claim is barred by time, on the ground that the partnership terminated either on the death of Munna Lal or in November 1907; and that in either case the suit was instituted more than three years after the cause of action accrued. The plaintiffs have also filed a cross-appeal, taking exception to the finding of the District Judge that the surety bond of Rai Bahadur Gursahai Mal terminated upon the expiry of three years after the date of the partnership starting work.

We have heard lengthy arguments as to the date when the partnership between the parties actually terminated, but the question does not appear to us to be very difficult. The agreement by which the partnership was constituted is set out at pages 4 and 5 of part I of the paper-book, and upon a consideration of its terms, we have no hesitation in accepting Mr. Shafi's contention that the partnership was one between (a) Maharaj Kishen, of the one part and (b) the two firms of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das and Basheshar Lal-Har Gobind, of the second part, and not (as contended by Mr. Sheo Narain) between the five individuals who signed the deed in their personal capacities.

It is further established by the evidence on the record, and indeed not now contested, that the firm of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das was constituted of three partners, viz., Munna Lal, Piyari Lal and Hardwari Mal. Munna Lal and Piyari Lal (uncle and nephew) constituted a joint Hindu family, so far at all events as their property was concerned, and when Munna Lal died in July 1907, Piyari Lal at once became his heir by the rule of survivorship and represented his estate for all purposes. Thus the death of Munna Lal in no way affected the partnership up to that moment existing between him, his co-parcener, Piyari Lal and Hardwari Mal. Piyari Lal, his heir by survivorship, was at the time one of the partners. The principle of law embodied in section 253 (10) of the Indian Contract Act is based on the ground that partners cannot be expected to acquiesce in new partners being forced upon them. In the event of one partner dying, they may well object to the executors or administrators of a deceased partner coming into the business. But this principle can obviously not apply when all that happens is that one of the existing partners becomes by operation of law entitled, on the death of his co-parcener, to a larger share in the partnership than he previously possessed in his individual right. We hold, therefore, that the death of Munna Lal did not dissolve the partnership firm of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das and as a result, did not dissolve the partnership existing between Maharaj Kishen and the two firms of Ganga Ram-Jamna Das and Basheshar Lal-Har Gobind.

Mr. Sheo Narain contended that as a son was adopted to Munna Lal after the latter's death, Piyari Lal cannot be regarded as Munna Lal's heir. A son, no doubt, was eventually adopted to Munna Lal, but this happened admittedly after Munna Lal's death and there is nothing to show that the adoption in question took place before the 31st December 1907. Some time obviously must have elapsed before the adoption was effected, and until it was completed, Piyari Lal was admittedly Munna Lal's heir.

But even if it be held that the death of Munna Lal had the technical effect of dissolving the partnership of which he was a member, it is clear from the evidence of Maharaj Kishen himself that all parties agreed, expressly or by necessary implication, to continue the partnership as if no dissolution had taken place. Possibly, the legal effect of such agreement would be the creation of a new partnership. But even so it is obvious that the new partnership was founded on the basis of taking up matters exactly as they stood at the time of Munna Lal's death and of carrying on the business upon the understanding that the accounts of the old partnership were to be incorporated just as they were into the new partnership. Maharaj Kishen, when giving evidence in Court, expressly admitted that the partnership between the parties remained in existence till November 1907, whereas Munna Lal had, to the knowledge of all parties, died in July 1907. Presumably, Maharaj Kishen is well aware of the legal proposition that the death of one partner, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, terminates a partnership, and his meaning, therefore, must be that the parties either did not regard the death of Piyari Lal's co-parcener as dissolving the partnership, or that if they did, they agreed to continue the partnership just as if no such dissolution had taken place. In either event, the provisions of Article 106 of the Limitation Act would not bar the present claim, for as held in Betjemann v. Betjemann (1), "when a partnership is determined by death and the surviving partners continue to carry on the business, the statute of limitation was no bar to taking the accounts of the new partnership by going into the accounts of the old partnership which have been carried on into the new partnership without interruption or settlement" [see also Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Saheb (2)].

But the present suit was not instituted till the 22nd of December 1910, and the claim would consequently be still barred by Article 106 of the Limitation Act if defendant's allegation is true that the partnership was finally dissolved by consent of parties in November 1907. In our opinion this allegation is not true, and we cannot concede the right of defendant to put it forward. He has had to admit in his evidence that he himself issued notices to constituents of the firm informing them that the partnership was dissolved from the 1st January 1908, and it is not open to him now to contend that this was in fact false and that the partnership had actually terminated in November 1907. But apart from this objection, it is clear from the evidence of his own witness (Gonjeveram, D. W. No. 3) that about the end of 1907, he went to Calcutta to arrange for the further financing of the business. Clearly, then, the partnership had not terminated up to the time of defendant's visit to Calcutta which took place in November or December 1907. Then again, in his letter to plaintiffs, dated 16th of January 1908 (Exhibit P. 8), he states: "I did no new business after the 31st December as desired by you." The inference is obvious that plaintiffs had instructed him to close the business of the partnership with effect from the 1st January 1908, an inference which becomes irresistible when we read with this letter the notices admittedly issued by defendant to the firm's constituents.

We hold, therefore, that the present suit is not barred by Article 106 of the Limitation Act and that defendant's appeal must be dismissed.

There remains the cross-appeal by plaintiffs, and here again we agree with the District Judge's conclusions. The surety bond executed by Rai Bahadur Gursahai

Mal must be read in conjunction with the partnership agreement to which it makes express reference, and under the provisions of paragraph 6 of that agreement the partnership was to continue in force for the period of three years, though it was terminable earlier. A bond of this kind is to be construed strictly, and the liability of the surety cannot be extended beyond the period for which he was undertaking liability simply by showing that the partnership, which he was led to believe was to terminate within three years, was in fact, by mutual agreement of the partners to which he was no party, continued beyond that period. Mr. Shafi relies upon the words in the bond:—"During the time the said firm or any branch of it constituted hereafter carries on any business," etc., as indicating that the surety undertook liability for an indefinite period. In our opinion, these words must be read subject to the provision in the partnership agreement that the period of the partnership was to be three years, unless it was terminated earlier.

We accordingly dismiss the cross-appeal also.

Both parties agree that in the circumstances they should be left to bear their own costs upon these appeals and we direct accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

In suits on mortgage the proper course obviously is to confine the preliminary decree to a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, but where a Court goes further and passes a combined decree under Order XXXIV, rules 4 and 6, Civil Procedure Code, a separate decree under the latter rule is not necessary, and an application for such a decree is, therefore, superfluous.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghoshal, for the Appellant.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, holding brief of Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, refusing to grant a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that Ram Dhani Pathak and his son, Sant Bakhsh, obtained thekas of certain villages from the Maharaja of Ajudhya in their respective names, in respect of which some arrears of rent were due. On the 22nd October 1901 Ram Dhani Pathak executed a mortgage-deed for Rs. 7,831 due by him on account of the said arrears in favour of the Maharaja and agreed to pay the said money by instalments. He died subsequently in 1905 without making any payments. On the 10th September 1908 the Court of Wards representing the Ajudhya Estate filed a suit for the recovery of money due on the mortgage, impleading Sant Bakhsh and Ajudhya Prasad, two of the surviving sons of the deceased mortgagor, and Musammat Jagwanta, the widow of a predeceased son of his, parties to the suit. The Court of Wards claimed in that suit a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, and in case the sale of the mortgaged property proved insufficient, a decree against the other property, moveable and immoveable, of the mortgagor which might be in the possession of the defendants. One of the issues raised in the case was whether Ram Dhani was competent to mortgage the property in suit and whether the defendants or any of them were personally liable to the claim. The learned Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, found that Ram Dhani and his sons lived jointly, that Ram Dhani was the manager of the joint family and was competent to mortgage the family property, and that Sant Bakhsh, Ajudhya Prasad and Musammat Jagwanta would be personally liable for any sum which might remain due to the plaintiff after the sale of the mortgaged property, to the extent of the other property inherited by them from Ram Dhani. He passed a decree accordingly for the recovery of the amount claimed by sale of the mortgaged property and in case of deficiency for the recovery of the balance from the other properties of the deceased Ram Dhani in possession of Sant Bakhsh, Ajudhya Prasad and Musammat Jagwanta. The decree was thus a combined decree granting relief to the plaintiff under Order XXXIV, rules 4 and 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree was made absolute on the 5th February 1910 and both the reliefs originally granted were repeated in the said decree.

In suits on mortgages the proper course obviously is to confine the preliminary decree to a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code. But where a Court goes further and passes a combined decree under Order XXXIV, rules 4 and 6, a separate decree under the latter rule is not necessary. In Batak Nath v. Pitambar Das (1), which was followed in Lalji Lal v. C. J. Barber (2), it was held under similar circumstances that such a decree could be executed against the persons or other properties of the parties named therein without it being necessary for the decree-holder to obtain a separate decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Tirbini Sahai v. Hurruk Narain (3), Dina Nath Mitter v. Bejoy Krishna Das (4), Dinabandhu Nandi v. Mashuda Khatun (5), the Calcutta High Court recognised the same principle. The application for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code was, therefore, superfluous. The reasons upon which the learned Subordinate Judge rejected the application cannot, however, be supported, for a relief claimed under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code against a defendant includes a relief against any property in his possession.

We dismiss the appeal accordingly, leaving the right of the decree-holder to proceed against the non-hypothecated property as directed by the decree unaffected. The parties will, under the circumstances, bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Where in a correction of jamabandi case, a Court does not frame specific issues for trial as provided by section 42 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, but clearly and definitely understands those issues, and pronounces its decision after hearing the pleadings and arguments and consulting the rulings advanced on behalf of both the parties, that decision, although passed in a miscellaneous proceeding and without a formal drawing up of issues, does, in view of the provisions of section 44 of the U. P Land Revenue Act, operate as res judicata in a subsequent case for declaration of tenure between those parties as regards the kind of tenure already determined in the jamabandi case.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Meerut, dated 2nd May 1913.

BAILLIE, S. M. (March 5th, 1914).—Appellant was, as appears from the judgments of the lower Courts, the father of a tenant who died when Act XII of 1881 was in force. The son's widow succeeded on her husband's death and has died recently. The father claims that as heir of his son, entitled to succeed under Act XII of 1881, he is now the occupancy tenant of this land. The Court of first instance decided in his favour. The Commissioner has decided against him, on the ground that section 22 does not provide for the succession of a father. The claim is analogous to that decided in Petition No. 10 of 1911-12, Meerut, Harbans v. K. Bishambhar Singh, decided on 7th and 9th July 1913. But it appears entirely unnecessary to enter into the various questions raised in this case inasmuch as the matter is, in my opinion, res judicata. In a correction of jamabandi case Thakur Bhagwat Dayal Singh decided on the 15th June 1911 that Harjas was the occupancy tenant in succession to his son, Amin Chand. This case was decided after hearing the pleadings and the arguments advanced by Vakils on behalf of both parties. It is claimed that it does not make the matter res judicata, because it was a miscellaneous proceeding and no formal issues were drawn up. Section 44 provides that the decision shall be binding on all Revenue Courts precisely as if the miscellaneous proceedings were a regular suit. Section 42 provides that the procedure shall be as in a suit, and it has been customarily held that where the provisions of 42 were grossly ignored, decisions cannot be considered to be binding, but this cannot be held to be a case in which the provisions of section 42 were ignored. It is true that the Court did not write down separately certain issues as for trial, but it clearly and definitely understood what these issues were. It heard the Pleaders on behalf of parties in regard to the decision it was to pronounce and consulted rulings advanced on behalf of both parties. There was a deliberate, a careful and an intelligent judgment recorded. In my opinion, the decision was a binding one and the matter now in issue is res judicata. On this ground I would allow the appeal and cancel the Commissioner's decision and restore that of the Court of first instance.

In the matter of Musammat HARUNNESSA BIBEE.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Guardianship—Female minor—Muhammadan Law—Sister's husband and maternal uncle—None but mahram to be appointed.

No male has a right to the custody of a Mussalman female child unless he is a mahram, that is, stands to her within the prohibited degrees of relationship and cannot under any circumstances marry her.

The sister's husband of a girl is not entitled to be appointed guardian, specially in the presence of a person who is competent under the Muhammadan Law, for instance, the maternal uncle of the minor.

Mr. B. C. Mitter (with him Dr. A. Suhrawardy), for the Applicant, maternal uncle.

Mr. C. R. Das (with him Mr. Akbari), for the sister's husband.

Mr. A. Rasul, for the step-father.

JUDGMENT.—These are two applications for the guardianship of the person and property of a Muhammadan infant of the name of Harunnessa Bibee. I shall first deal with the application of Golam Kadir, the husband of the minor's sister.

The Guardians and Wards Act provides that in appointing the guardian of a Muhammadan, no appointment shall be made inconsistent with the Muhammadan Law. The point for me to decide is whether the appointment of Golam Kadir, the husband of the infant's sister, would be consistent with the Muhammadan Law. I am clearly of opinion that it would not. The Rt. Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali, in his Muhammadan Law, Vol. II, page 293 (3rd Edition), says: "No male has a right to the custody of a female child, unless he is a mahram, that is, stands to her within the prohibited degrees of relationship and cannot under any circumstances marry her."

It is contended on behalf of Golam Kadir that there is no authority for the statement "cannot under any circumstances marry her" in the passage I have quoted. In this connection I was referred to the case of Aisunnissa Khatoon v. Karimunnissa Khatoon (1), in which a question arose whether under the Muhammadan Law marriage with the wife's sister, who was legally married, was void or not. It was held that the children of such marriage were illegitimate and could not inherit. In dealing with the question then before the Court, their Lordships referred to the passage I have quoted, but I do not find any authority or sanction for the contention that the words, "cannot under any circumstances marry her" have been wrongly introduced by the learned author.

Wilson's Muhammadan Law, page 205, section 108 (2nd Edition), was also referred to and Mr. Abdur Rahman's book on Mussalman Law and Mr. Tyabji's, but they throw no light on the point.

Now, it is conceded that the mother of a Muhammadan infant girl loses her right of guardianship by marrying a stranger. In the case of Yakub Sheikh v. Nafujan Bibee (2) it is stated, as seems to be the correct law, that the mother is not disqualified if she marries one related to the minor within the prohibited degrees. It would be very curious that if the mother were disqualified by marrying a stranger, that a sister would not be thus disqualified, and that a stranger marrying her would be qualified for appointment as a guardian. Learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the maternal uncle has placed certain original texts before me with translations, which were circulated among the parties to test their correctness. The texts and translations have not been challenged.

I.—"The woman entitled to the custody of a child loses her right by marriage with a person not within the prohibited degrees to it, i.e., the minor." (Durr-al-Mukhtar, Vol. II, page 656, Ed. Cairo.)

II.—"'By marriage with a person not within the prohibited degrees to it':—i. e., whether the marriage is consummated or not. The author (of the Durr-al-Mukhtar) should have said, 'a person not within the prohibited degrees on the ground of consanguinity. For, one within the proihibted degrees on the ground of fosterage is like a stranger as regards her loss thereby (marriage) of the right to the custody of the minor." (Radd-al-Muhtar, Vol. II, page 656, Ed. Cairo.)

III.—"'With a person not within the prohibited degrees':—i. e., on the ground of consanguinity. So if he is one within the prohibited degrees not on the ground of blood-relationship (e. g., a foster paternal uncle), or a relation on the ground of consanguinity but within the prohibited degrees on the ground of fosterage (e. g., the child's uncle's son on the ground of consanguinity, but its uncle by fosterage), he is like a stranger." (Radd-al-Mukhtar, Vol. II, page 651, Ed. Cairo).

IV.—"'Then if there be no agnates, (the guardianship, belongs to uterine relations. So it (the child) should be handed over to the uterine brother, then to his son, then to uterine paternal uncle, then to full maternal uncle and then to uterine maternal uncle." (Radd-al-Muhtar, Vol. II, page 656, Ed. Cairo.)

V.—"A minor girl should not be handed over to an agnate not within the prohibited degrees (e. g., an emancipated slave; the son of a paternal uncle), so long as there is a non-agnate within the prohibited degrees like the maternal uncle. She should rather be handed over to the maternal uncle to guard against mischief." (Inayah, Vol. IV, page 187, Ed. Cairo).

VI.—"If she (woman entitled to guardianship) dies or marries, then the full sister; then if she (full sister) dies or marries, then the uterine sister. . . . . The right to guardianship which belongs to these women is lost by marriage when they marry a stranger. But if they marry a blood-relation of the child standing to it within the prohibited degrees, e. g., its grandmother (mother's mother) marries its grandfather (father's father) or if the mother marries the paternal uncle of the child; then, the right to guardianship is not lost. Thus it is laid down in the Fatawa Qadi Khan, (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. I, pages 728, 729, Ed. Calcutta.)

VII.—"When the minor girl has no agnate, she should be handed over to the uterine brother, then to his son, then to uterine paternal uncle, then to full maternal uncle, then to consanguine maternal uncle, then to uterine maternal uncle." (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. I, page 729, Ed. Calcutta).

These texts supply clear authority for the proposition that a brother-in-law not within the prohibited degrees is not entitled to be appointed guardian. That being so, I hold that the brother-in-law, Golam Kadir, is not entitled to be appointed guardian, specially in the presence of a person who is competent under the Muhammadan Law, viz., the sister.

(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 571; 11 C. L. J. 632 at p. 634.

nal uncle, Syed Mohammed Yakub, who is the other applicant.

The step-father also appeared and stated through his Counsel that though he considered he had no right and was not in Court for the purpose of asserting any right in himself, yet he submitted that if the Court so desired, he was willing to be appointed. The maternal uncle has been examined and cross-examined before me. There were certain charges made against him in the affidavit of the step-father and both the step-father and brother-in-law were allowed to cross-examine him in order to help the Court to consider whether he was eligible or not. I do not think that any of the charges made against the maternal uncle has been substantiated. The only ground for alleging that he is a man of dissolute habits is that some years ago he went to a questionable quarter of the town, and heard some music with his brother-in-law in the house of a woman of bad repute. Nothing else is alleged against him. It is also strenuously contended that inasmuch as he instituted certain proceedings in the Police Court challenging the marriage of Khaja Golam Kadir, and because he subsequently withdrew from the prosecution and consented to Golam Kadir being appointed guardian of the person of his wife, stating that he was convinced that they had been legally married, showed that he was a person in whom the Court could not place any confidence, that he had by his conduct shown that he was disqualified from acting as the guardian of the infant. It was said that he had extorted Rs. 2,500 to give his consent as above and that he might utilise this occasion also for extorting some money from the young man, the son of a tailor, to whom the infant had been married. It appears that Syed Mohammad Yakub was promised payment of his costs in the Police Court and of the High Court in respect of the criminal proceedings, when the matter was amicably settled. He was not paid the amount, but that subsequently his Lordship Mr. Justice Imam, who arbitrated for the parties in certain matters and took evidence, allowed him Rs. 2,500 out of Rs. 3,500 which had been promised to be paid by Khaja Golam Kadir. His Lordship allowed Rs. 1,000 thereout to be paid to the wife. Even if the facts were as alleged by the other side, I could hardly have held that this man was disqualified. He is now living with his wife who is 18½ years old; a girl of that age is competent in this country to look after her own household. Mr. Rasul on behalf of the step-father urged that it was necessary in the interest of the minor that she should repudiate her marriage with the tailor's son on attaining puberty, as it was a marriage below her station in life and altogether undesirable. It is said that the repudiation must be at the exact moment of time that she attains puberty, and that some female ought to be present at that time, competent to ascertain that critical moment. Therefore some woman, preferably a female relative, ought to be placed near her so that at that very moment she might repudiate the marriage if so inclined, otherwise according to the Muhammadan Law the present marriage would become valid. The applicant's wife, I think, is quite capable of discharging this function. The applicant says, he disapproves of the marriage, and there is no reason to suppose that he will prevent the repudiation. It has been suggested that he is on friendly terms with this tailor's son. He denies it, and I have no reason to disbelieve his statement. I, however, think that having regard to the bitter feeling between the parties and the manner in which this matter and cognate matters are being fought out, some provision should be made for providing a governess, if possible, for the infant and that the guardian whom I intend to appoint—the maternal uncle, i. e., the applicant Syed Mohammad Yakub—should be put on terms.

Mr. Rasul states that there is a Mohammadan lady of position who is keeping a school and that if an application be made to her, she may be in a position to help the guardian of the infant in finding a governess for her. It appears that Babu Panna Lal Dey, the Attorney for the applicant, went and visited this lady and a letter from her has been placed before me that she can recommend a lady of the name of Hamedunnessa Khatun as governess for the infant. It is stated that she will be able to stay with the girl at her house except from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M., when she has to attend the Pardanashin Madrassa, as teacher and that she is able to get this governess on a pay of Rs. 15 a month with free board and lodging. The applicant through his Counsel undertakes to appoint her, or failing her, a proper person who would be able to remain with this girl and assist her with her studies and live with her as a companion. The property of this infant yields an income of about Rs. 150 a month; she can well afford to pay for a suitable governess. I also make it a condition that the applicant will at all convenient times allow the female relatives of the infant to visit her and also such male relatives as the custom of the country and the custom of the family may allow, that he will offer no difficulties in the way of their communicating with her, or coming to see her. I appoint him guardian of the person and property of the infant on the above conditions. The guardian will have to give proper security to the satisfaction of the Court.

It was said that in respect of certain properties belonging to the infant's paternal estate, the applicant's interest was adverse. The applicant explained that certain properties were acquired by the father of the minor in the applicant's name and that thereafter he made a deed of gift of these properties to him. The matter has been adjudicated upon in the administration proceedings, and I do not think that his interest in these properties is such as to disqualify him from being the guardian of the property of the infant upon his furnishing proper security. The Court has ample jurisdiction, should sufficient ground be made out, to change the guardian, when necessary in the interests of the infant. For the present, I see no reason to disallow the application.

Application allowed.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 3, 8, 185—Private land, meaning of—Conversion of ryoti into private land—Degree of proof—Onus—Letting lands as kambattam, whether amounts to conversion—Landlord cultivating lands himself—Presumption.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Section 8 of the Estates Land Act does not impose retrospectively an absolute prohibition of the conversion of ryoti into private land not to be found in the definition, or in the section specially dealing with evidence as to what is private land. It is necessary that an actual conversion should be proved by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Merely calling the lands kambattam and letting them on terms which negative occupancy rights, with a view to prevent the assertion of such rights, is not sufficient to convert them into private lands within the meaning of the definition.

The burden is on the zemindar to show that the suit lands come within the definition in section 3 as forming part of his domain or home-farm lands. Though the fact that the lands have been let as kambattam, is evidence under section 185 that they are private lands and though the provisions of section 188 do not apply to Civil Courts, still the fact that the lands really were at some time domain or home-farm lands must be strictly proved Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The object of the Act is to prevent the conversion of ryoti into kambattam land. The definition section and section 8 clearly show that the legislature demands the strictest proof of a land being kambattam.

The proviso to section 185 is not in the nature of an exception and raises the irrebuttable presumption in favour of a landlord who has by his own servants or by hired labour cultivated the land for 12 years preceding the Act that it should be regarded as his home-farm land.

First appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 22 of 1910.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This case raises a question of considerable importance as to what constitutes private land under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908. The Subordinate Judge has decided the question very largely with reference to speeches made while the Bill was passing through the Council, in which private lands were said to represent lands which were granted free of assessment by the Muhammadan Government to the zemindars as part of their remuneration for their services. However this may be, what the Court has to see is whether the land in question comes within the definition in section 3 (10) of the Act, where private land is said to mean "the domain or home-farm land of a landholder by whatever designation known such as kambattam khas, seri, or pannai."

Here it may be well to note that the word "domain" in this connection is explained by Webster, citing Shantore, as meaning "the land about the mansion home of a lord and in his immediate occupancy." Section 185 prescribes certain rules of evidence as to whether any land is a private land or not; and provides that land shall be deemed not to be private land until the contrary is shown. That it is the intention of the Legislature that this should be strictly proved is also to be gathered from the provisions of section 183 as to ascertaining and recording whether any land is a private land, in which the Revenue Officer is directed to disregard any agreement or anything contained in any compromise, or in any decree proved to his satisfaction to have been obtained by fraud or collusion, and not to register the land as private unless it is proved to be such by satisfactory evidence of the nature prescribed in section 185. Under that section, regard is to be had to local custom and to the question whether the land was before the first day of July 1898 specifically let as private land, and to any other evidence that may be produced. Then we have the proviso: "Provided that all land which is proved to have been cultivated as private land by the landholder himself by his own servants or by hired labour with his own or hired stock for twelve years immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to be the landholder's private land."

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar very properly relied on the fact that this provision is enacted by way of proviso to the body of the section and not by way of exception, and argued that it should not be construed as inconsistent with the body of the section, and, therefore, that the fact that the land had been so cultivated by the proprietors would have been evidence that the land was private land, apart from the proviso. This is, no doubt, a sound principle of construction and was recently applied by the Privy Council in Maha Prasad Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh (1); but it is scarcely necessary to rely upon it because it is expressly provided in the body of the section that the fact that the land has been let as private land is evidence of its being such, and the case of its being cultivated as such by the owner himself is, of course, much stronger. For the respondent, however, it is contended that once it is shown that the land in question was at one time ordinary ryoti land or seri, as it is called in the district in question, evidence that subsequently it has been dealt with as private land, though admissible under section 185, is of no avail, because by virtue of the provisions of section 8, which are retrospective, the land must be taken not to be private land, unless the conditions of the proviso to section 185 are satisfied. As to this it may be observed that, if this be so, the proviso should rather have appeared as an exception to section 8.

Now it is well-settled that retrospective enactments must be strictly construed, and it is, therefore, necessary to examine carefully the provisions of section 8 to see if they really have the result contended for. Sub-section (1) provides that whenever before or after the commencement of the Act the entire interests of the landholder and the occupancy ryot in any land in the holding have become united in the same person in the circumstances specified in the section, such person shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall hold it as a landholder, and sub-section (3) further provides that such merger shall not have the effect of converting ryoti land into private land. I do not think the latter provision is of much importance, as it only provides that the merger in question shall not convert ryoti land into private land, and cannot be read as enacting that such land shall not be converted into private land by being subsequently cultivated or let as such. This effect must be produced, if at all, by virtue of the provision in sub-section (1) that in such a case the owner "shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall hold it as a landholder;" but for this provision a landholder who had acquired the kudivaram rights in a holding could have escaped from the operation of the Act by purporting to let the lands in his capacity of a ryot, seeing that ryots are free to sublet their lands on what terms they please, whereas the powers of a landholder are governed by the provisions of the Act. This provision, that the owner shall not hold the land as a ryot, was intended to guard against this mischief, and is not, in my opinion, of itself sufficient, if the section be construed strictly, to prevent the owner from subsequently converting such land into private land by cultivating or letting it as such. We have then to see whether the further provision that after such merger the owner shall hold the land as a landholder has that effect. Now "landholder" is defined in section 3 (5) as meaning a person holding an estate, and the definition of estate in section 3 (2) is such as to include both ryoti and private land; and as already pointed, out private land is defined as "the domain or home-farm land of a landholder." In this state of things and construing the sub-section strictly, as we are bound to construe it, I do not think it can be said that a landholder holding land as private land is not holding it as a landholder rather than as a ryot, for that is the distinction contemplated in the section. This appears to be in accordance with the opinion expressed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Upadrasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Sitaramudu (2).

In the decision in Chintamreddi Sanyasi v. Sri Rajasagi Appala Narasimha Raja Garu (3), to which I was a party, the provisions of section 8 are not referred to in the judgment, but as appears from a reference to the printed papers that was a case of immemorial waste being cultivated as private land, and not a case in which the interests of a landholder and an occupancy ryot had become merged in the manner specified in section 8. I have come to the conclusion that the effect of section 8 is not to impose retrospectively an absolute prohibition of the conversion of ryoti into private land not to be found in the definition, or in the section specially dealing with evidence as to what is private land; and I may say that, if the Legislature had intended to exclude from the category of domain or home-farm land, lands which had been cultivated as such for a century or more on the ground that such land had at some remote period been held as ordinary ryoti land, it would, I think, have expressed its intention in clear and unambiguous language. While I feel bound to arrive at this conclusion, I think that it is very necessary that an actual conversion from ryoti into private land should be proved by very clear and satisfactory evidence.

We have next to see whether the evidence in this case is sufficient for the purpose. In this connection it is to be borne in mind that numerous instances have come before the Courts in which subsequent to the decision of Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundara Sunnady (4), zemindars succeeded in inserting in pattas and muchilikas terms negativing the existence of occupancy right, and that one way of effecting this purpose was to deal with the land as kambattam or home-farm land, even though it had never been cultivated by the zemindar himself and there was no intention of so cultivating it. Now in the present case, we find that the earliest accounts of the village of the year 1836 show that it contained 6 puttis or about 102 acres of savaram lands in which the suit lands were not included, and that 800 acres or more than a third of the whole acreage of the village is now classed as kambattam. So too the accounts of 1886, Exhibits 18 and 19, and of 1867. Exhibits 3 and 12 show only 49 acres and 45 acers under cultivation as kambattam in these years. The evidence in the present case shows how the extension came about. The character of the suit lands was called in question in Original Suit No. 10 of 1881 in the District Court of Masulipatam when the District Judge decided that the predecessors of the present owners had executed muchilikas agreeing to hold the land as kambattam, but did not knowingly consent to the change from seri to kambattam. The High Court in Exhibit J set aside his decree on the ground that the only defence set up by the defendants was that they had not executed the muchilikas. This was all that was decided, but the learned Judges observed that the District Judge found that the zemindar was at liberty to change seri into kambattam on the occurrence of a vacancy and had overlooked the fact that such a vacancy had occurred in 1874 on the death of Korrapati Venkanna in whose name the lands then stood. It may fairly be inferred that no documents were then preferred in evidence in which the land was treated as kambattam prior to 1875 and the documents relied on in the present case are even later. In that case the learned Judges put the onus of proving that the land was seri on the defendants, and held they had not discharged it. As the law now stands, the burden is on the zemindar to show that the suit lands come within the definition in section 3, as forming part of his domain or home-farm lands. There was no evidence in that case that he had ever cultivated them himself. The earliest evidence that they had been treated as kambattam related to 1875, shortly after the decision in Chokalinga's case(4), after which the zemindars endeavoured to get their ryots to contract themselves in one way or another out of their occupancy rights, a process which apparently explains the extraordinary increase in the amount of land classed as kambattam in recent years. The evidence that the zemindar cultivated these lands in recent years is negatived by the karnam, who otherwise shows himself favourable to the zemindar. He says that out of 2300 acres in the village 800 are classed as kambattam and that of these the zemindar cultivates 200 acres himself but not always the same 200 acres. It is not shown that he ever cultivated the suit lands. On the contrary the evidence is that they have always been cultivated by tenants.

Though the fact that the lands have been let as kambattam is evidence under section 185 that they are private lands, and though the provisions of section 183 do not apply to the Civil Court still, as I have already said, I think the fact that the lands really were at some time domain or home-farm lands should be strictly proved. Once it is shown as here that they were ryoti down to a certain date, the effect of section 8 is that even if the zemindar subsequently acquired the kudivaram right, that would not of itself convert them into private land, and we have to see whether what has happened subsequently is sufficient to convert the land into private lands, that is to say, into domain or home-farm lands. It does not seem to me that calling the lands kambattam and letting them on terms which negative occupancy right with a view to prevent the assertion of such rights, is sufficient to convert them into private lands within the meaning of the definition.

The Subordinate Judge has found, and I agree with him, that the suit lands were never cultivated by the zemindar as part of his home-farm lands, and it seems to me that his treatment of them as kambattam was merely colourable for the purpose of defeating the occupancy rights of the tenants. In some parts of India lands of this kind are known as sir lands and this is one of the terms mentioned in the definition. In Budley v. Bukhtoo (5) it was held that sir land is land which a zemindar has cultivated himself and intends to retain as resumable for cultivation by himself even when from time to time he demises it for a season. I think that this test may well be applied here, and that as the plaintiff has failed to satisfy it, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff sues for a declaration that the lands in suit are his home-farm lands. The defendants claim them as their jeraiti. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit.

I see no reason to differ from the conclusion at which the lower Court has arrived. The Subordinate Judge found that from the year 1884, the lands were treated by the plaintiff as his kambattam or home-farm lands and that they were held as seri or jeraiti lands from 1866 to 1883 by the defendants and their predecessors. The appellant has convinced us that in the year 1879 the lands were treated as kambattam. Exhibit J, the judgment of the High Court, Exhibit V, the cultivation account for 1880, Exhibit XIII, the hisab account for 1879, show that from the year 1879 onwards the plaintiff dealt with the lands as his kambattam. The Subordinate Judge's finding must be modified to this extent. As regards the earlier period, discussed by the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 11 of his judgment, Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar contended that the documents commented upon do not support his finding. I see no force in this argument. Exhibit X, the Adangal Account of 1868, is against this contention. Whenever land is mentioned as kambattam in this account, the zemindar is entered as owner and the person actually cultivating the field under him is entered as being the cultivator. The two entries referred to by the Subordinate Judge fully support this view. With reference to the plaint lands, the zemindar is not entered as owner. Exhibit XVIII, the landvari account of the plots in 1866, shows the defendant's predecessor as the owner. Exhibit XIX is to the same effect. Exhibits III and XII, the accounts for 1867, are of the same character as Exhibits XVIII and XIX. Exhibit XI for the year 1874, which is an account of seri lands, shows that one Korapatti Venkanna was the owner of the plaint lands. Even if we are not prepared to accept the suggestion that this Venkanna was a relation of the defendants, the entry shows that the zemindar was not the owner. The learned Vakil for the appellant suggested that the entries in these documents, especially in Exhibit X, may be due to the fact that the persons entered as cultivators were let in for the first time by the zemindar. There is no trace of this explanation in the evidence; on the whole, I see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion that from 1866 to 1874, the lands were held and enjoyed as seri.

On these facts, the question for determination is, whether lands once enjoyed as seri with tenant rights can be converted by the zemindar into his kambattam. The question is not free from difficulty. The only sections that have a bearing upon this point are 3 (10), 6, 8, 181 and 185. Section 3 (10) defines "private land." The meaning of the word domain is not given in the Act. The learned Chief Justice pointed out in the course of the argument that it was synonymous with demesne. In the Encyclopedia Brittannica, Volume III, it is explained as follows:—"Demesne (Demenie, Demain, Domain, etc.) that portion of the land of a manor not granted out in free-hold tenancy, but (a) retained by the Lord of the Manor for his own use and occupation or (b) let out as tenemental land to his retainers or 'villani'. This Demesne land, originally held at the will of the Lord, in course of time came to acquire fixity of tenure and developed into the modern copyhold (see Manor). It is from demesne as used in sense (a) that the modern restricted use of the word comes, i. e., land immediately surrounding the mansion or dwelling-house, the park or chase." I have no doubt that it is in a similar sense that the Legislature has used the expression. The special incidents of such property are that it must have been an appurtenance to the general holding and should have been in the personal occupation of the zemindar. Some indication of its characteristics is to be found in the fifth report relating to the Madras Presidency. In giving instructions to Collectors regarding the properties to be taken into account in making the Permanent Settlement with the zemindars, one of the items to be included is thus described:—"All private lands at present appropriated by the zemindars and other landholders to the subsistence of themselves and families, as well as all lands held by private servants and dependants, will be considered as forming part of the Circar land, and, therefore, responsible for the public Jumma." This is practically the definition of private land. Ordinarily a private land must have that character from prior to the Permanent Settlement, except in certain cases to which I shall refer later on. The theory is that prima facie a jeraiti or seri land cannot be converted into private land. This view is strengthened by the last explanation to section 6, which lays down that an occupancy right in land is not lost by the tenant becoming the landholder. The character of the holding remains whatever may be the change in the position of the owner of it. Then we come to section 8; clause (1) of that section deals with the merger of occupancy right in certain cases. A great deal of argument was directed towards the clause, "by transfer, succession or otherwise." I think there can be no doubt that a bare surrender will not come under the expression "otherwise," because a surrender without more does not confer a right to the property. I had to consider this question at some length in Venkata Sastrulu v. Sitaramudu (2). I adhere to the view therein expressed that if the surrender has been accepted and acted upon, it would amount to a mode of acquisition and would come under the expression "otherwise." In that view, clause 3 of section 8 will preclude the conversion of a ryoti land, the occupancy right in which had become vested in the landholder by an accepted surrender, into a home-farm land. I cannot accede to the contention of Mr. Govindaragahava Aiyar that clauses (1) and (3) contemplate a bare merger without more and that when such a merger has been given effect to by treating the land as home-farm land, it will not be obnoxious to the rule enunciated in section 8. Although it may not be competent to Courts to examine the policy underlying an enactment apart from the actual language employed in the sections, it is our duty to give effect to such a policy when it appears clearly from the language employed. The definition section and section 8 leave no doubt in my mind that the Legislature demands the strictest proof of a land being a kambattam. This is made clearer still by section 181 which, while enacting that a landholder can allow his private land to be converted into ryoti land makes no provision for the converse case.

The only other section that has to be considered is section 185. There can be no doubt, as pointed out by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, that the proviso to that section is not in the nature of an exception. Mullins v. Treasurer of Surrey (6) lays down that a proviso is in the nature of a substantive rule and should not be treated as an exception to the proposition stated in a section. See also Mahaprasad Singh v. Ramani Mahan Singh (1). Accepting this position, I think that the first part of section 185 deals with the determination of the question whether a particular field is ryoti or kambattam, where nothing is known about its origin. If it was originally ryoti, the rule of evidence contained in the first part of section 185 can have no application because that would practically abrogate the principle enunciated in section 8, clauses 1 and 3. The proviso to section 185 is really an exception to section 8, clause 3. The object of the proviso is to enable the landlord to say that although the land was seri, he has by his own servants or by hired labour cultivated the land for twelve years preceding the Act and that consequently it should be regarded as his home-farm land. An irrebuttable presumption is to be drawn from such a conduct. If one remembers that a home-farm land is that which has been ordinarily cultivated personally by the landlord at the outset, the meaning of such a reservation in favour of the landholder will be apparent. This conclusion carries out the scheme of the Legislature which seems to be opposed to the augmentation of the private land of the landholders, excepting the special instance mentioned in the proviso to section 185. This view receives support from the observations of the learned Judges who decided Cheekati Zamindar v. Ranasooru Dhora (7). The object of the Estates Land Act is to prevent the conversion of ryoti land into kambattam land, which process had been adopted largely since the decision in Chockalinga Pillai's case (4). My conclusion is in accordance with the decision of Mr. Justice Ayling and myself in Second Appeal No. 275 of 1913. Second Appeal No. 1402 of 1912 decided by Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., is also to the same effect. The decision of the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ayling in Chintamareddi Sanyasi v. Sree Rajasagi Appala Narasimha Garu (3) is not opposed to this conclusion. The land in that case was never ryoti land. It only laid down that a private land can come into existence even after the Permanent Settlement. The proviso to section 185 is intended to enact such a rule.

The decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 141, scope of —Succession vesting jointly in two female heirs—Suit by one on death of another, nature of.

A left him surviving two married daughters B and C and one daughter-in-law D, widow of his predeceased son. D continued to hold certain jote lands left by A to the exclusion of B and C for more than 12 years and then sold the jote to the father of the plaintiff, who in his turn, having got himself recognised as an incoming tenant by the landlord, remained in possession and also the plaintiff after him, until on the death of D the plaintiff was dispossessed by C and her two sons. The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of possession.

Held, that as there was no partition between B and C, Article 141 of the Limitation Act, 1877, could not bar the suit so long as C was alive.

Where succession vests jointly in two female heirs, between whom no partition of the property is made, the suit by one on the death of the other for the property cannot be said to be one for recovery of possession.

JUDGMENT.—One Kirti Narain, who died about the year 1871, left him surviving two daughters Harasundari and Kashiswari and one daughter-in-law Umatara, being the widow of his predeceased son. Certain jote land belonging to the estate of Kirti Narain, which formed the subject-matter of contention in this case, continued to be held by Umatara to the exclusion of Harasundari and Kasiswari, who were the married daughters living in their husbands' house. After Umatara had been in possession for more than twelve years, that is, in the year 1291, she sold the jote to the father of the plaintiff and the father of the plaintiff, having got himself recognised as an incoming tenant by the landlord, remained in possession and also the plaintiff after him until the death of Umatara in 1315, when the plaintiff was dispossessed by Kasiswari and her two sons, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In the suit of the plaintiff for recovery of possession defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had been in possession along with Umatara and that Umatara's daughter had made a gift to him of her 8-annas share so that he had become entitled to the whole 16-anna jote. This part of the defendant's case has been held as not proved and the result of the finding is that Umatara remained in possession adverse to both Harasundari and Kasiswari before the sale and that after the sale, the plaintiff's father and the plaintiff after him were in such adverse possession until dispossessed by the defendants. The Court of first instance held that as regards the 8-annas share of Kasiswari, her claim had been barred by twelve years' adverse possession after Umatara.

As regards the 8-annas share of Harasundari, Kasiswari had succeeded in 1899, that is within twelve years of the suit and with regard to that share plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court has, however, decreed the whole suit of the plaintiff holding that as the zemindars had accepted rent from Umatara, it must be taken that a fresh settlement was made with her and that the zemindars having recognised the father of the plaintiff as an incoming tenant must be taken to have made a fresh settlement with him, so that neither the daughters nor their heirs could have any further claim. It is contended before me in second appeal that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge decreeing the whole suit of the plaintiff is wrong and that in any case the suit as regards the share of Harasundari ought to have been dismissed. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon Article 141 of the Limitation Act of 1877 which provides twelve years from the death of a female as the period within which the suit for recovery of possession is to be brought by a Hindu or a Muhammadan who is entitled to possession of the property on the death of the Hindu or Muhammadan female. The question, therefore, for decision in this case is whether Article 141 has any application to a case of this kind in which succession vests jointly in two female heirs. It is settled law that when there are more daughters than one, they succeed jointly as one with a right of survivorship. In this case there was no partition of the property amongst the two daughters, so that no question that might arise in a case in which such a partition has taken place arises in this case. Apart from the question of adverse possession by Umatara and her alienees, the two heirs must be taken to have been in joint possession and that if they were in joint possession the suit by the survivor could not be one for recovery of possession. Therefore the suit by Kasiswari could not be said to be one for recovery of possession on the death of Harasundari. In this view of the case I think that so long as Kasiswari is alive, Article 141 has no operation. It would be premature now to say whether there would be any right in the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to recover possession after the death of Kasiswari: that would be a matter for consideration when that case does arise. In the present case, however, the plaintiff is, I think, entitled to recover possession of the whole land.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, sustained and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Santhal Parganas Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), ss. 25, 25A, scope of—"Proprietor"—Ownership of mourasi mokarari tenure—Decision of Settlement Court, whether final.

Section 25A of the Santhal Parganas Settlement Regulation III of 1872 is strictly limited to suits where only the rights of zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are in controversy

A person who holds a derivative title under a zemindar cannot rightly be classed as a proprietor within the meaning of that word as used in the expression "zemindars and other proprietors" in section 25A of Regulation III of 1872

The decision of a Settlement Court under section 25, sub-section (1) of Regulation III of 1872 is conclusive, till it has been set aside by some method known to law at the instance of any person prejudicially affected thereby.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that an entry in a Settlement Record in favour of the first defendant is erroneous, for establishment of his own title to the disputed property and for recovery of possession with mesne profits. The lands in suit are situated in village Mihijam appertaining to Taluk Pabiya included in Touzi No. 308 in the Sonthal Parganas. On the 9th September 1876, Raja Ran Bahadur Singh, the then zemindar, granted a mourasi mokarari lease of the lands now in suit to one W. H. Smith, whose representatives are defendants Nos. 2—8 in this litigation. The ninth defendant held a decree against the representatives of Smith, in execution whereof the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors was sold and was purchased by the first defendant, Chatterjee, on the 5th August 1899, for a sum of Rs. 2,500. The plaintiff, Mookerjee, claims to have purchased shares in the property from some of the representatives of Smith by private conveyances on the 22nd July 1898 and 9th February 1899. Mookerjee asserts that he has acquired a preferential title to four-ninths of the property held in mourasi mokarari lease by Smith, while Chatterjee contends that he has acquired a good title to the whole of that property.

It is the common case of the parties that on the 29th April 1908, the Record of Rights of village Mihijam was finally published according to the provisions of section 24 of Regulation III of 1872. This Record of Rights contained an entry in respect of the disputed property to the effect that Chatterjee was then the owner of the mokarari by purchase for Rs. 2,500. The plaintiff seeks a declaration in this suit that this entry was erroneous, and that he himself was entitled to have his name recorded in respect of a four-ninths share. He subsequently amended the plaint by the insertion of an allegation that the entry in the record had been fraudulently and collusively secured by the first defendant; but no particulars of the fraud and collusion were set out, as required by rule 4 of Order VI of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and no question of fraud was raised in any of the twenty-one issues settled in this suit. The defendant resisted the claim, on the ground, amongst others, that the suit was barred under section 11 of Regulation III of 1872. The Subordinate Judge has given effect to this contention and the substantial point in controversy in this appeal is whether his view is correct in law.

Section 11 of Regulation III of 1872 is in these terms: "Except as provided in section 25A, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court under these rules; but the decisions and orders of the Settlement Courts made under these rules, regarding the interests and rights above-mentioned (that is, mentioned in section 9), shall have the force of a decree of Court." An endeavour has been made on behalf of the plaintiff to escape from the effect of this section by reliance on a two-fold ground, namely, first, that the present case falls within the scope of section 25A, and, secondly, that as the plaintiff was not an objector in the Settlement proceedings, there has been no decision by the Settlement Court regarding his interest in the lands.

As regards the first branch of this contention, reference has been made to section 25A which is in these terms: "Where only the rights of semindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, a suit may, unless it is barred by section 13 of Act XIV of 1882, be brought in a Court established under Act XII of 1887, to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, within three years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights or of the final order of the Revenue Court. But no such suit shall be brought in any Court after the expiration of three years from such date. If in any such suit, it is found that the finding of the Settlement Officer is erroneous, the record shall be amended accordingly." As the present suit was instituted on the 19th July 1910, it is within time, because the Record of Rights was finally published on the 29th April 1908; but the fundamental question remains, whether this is a suit of the description contemplated by section 25A. That section is strictly limited to suits where only the rights of semindars and other proprietors as between themselves are in controversy. It has not been argued that the plaintiffs and the contesting defendant are semindars; but the view has been pressed on behalf of the appellant that the parties are proprietors within the meaning of section 25A, and in support of this position reference has been made to the cases of Sonet Koer v. Himmut Bahadoor (1), Bejoy Chunder v. Kally Prosonno (2) and Megh Lal v. Raj Kumar Thakur Gridhari Singh (3). The first of these cases is an authority for the proposition that lands belonging to a semindari, granted by the semindar under an absolute hereditary mokarari tenure, do not on the death of the grantee without heirs revert to the semindari; nor does the semindar, under such circumstances, take by escheat a tenure subordinate to and carved out of his semindari. The second and third cases recognise the doctrine that where a grantor has transferred to his lessee a heritable, transferable and perpetual interest, there is in substance no reversion; the ownership of the land is intended to pass entirely to the grantee and no rights are reserved in the grantor except the right to receive the rent. This principle is of no assistance to the appellant; it does not show that the expression "other proprietor" was intended to include a mourasi mokarari tenant. It is argued, however, that the term "proprietor" is used in a very flexible sense and that a wide significance has been given to it in a variety of Statutes on different subjects; but plainly no safe guidance can be received from definitions given in Statutes the scope whereof was entirely different from that of the Regulation before us. Nor is any help derived from the ordinary definition to be found in Lexicons. "a proprietor is one who holds something as property or has the exclusive right or title to the use or disposal of thing; an owner" (Oxford Dictionary, Volume VII, page 1484). Our attention has finally been invited to different sections of the Regulation. Section 12, which authorises an inquiry by the Settlement Officer into landed rights, speaks of "the rights of the zemindars and other proprietors, the rights of the tenants or raiyats, the rights of the manjhis or other headmen as against both the proprietors and the tenants." This unquestionably does not support the contention of the appellant; on the other hand, this indicates that there may be tenants other than raiyats under "zemindars and other proprietors." Section 13, clause (c), mentions "under-proprietors:" it is difficult to appreciate who these under-proprietors can be, if permanent tenure-holders are treated as proprietors. The section also refers to occupiers or owners of a village; it is argued that the term "owners" is used in contradistinction to occupiers, and thus includes not only zemindars but also permanent tenure-holders and under-tenure-holders. But even if this were conceded, it would not follow that these persons were proprietors. Section 17 speaks of manjhis or village headmen, while section 18 deals with raiyats or occupiers; but neither section justifies the inference that a permanent tenure-holder is a proprietor. Section 20, which authorises the Settlement Officer to exercise his discretion in the adjustment of rents, speaks of proprietors, farmers, headmen and raiyats, but does not support the theory that permanent tenure-holders are proprietors. Finally, section 28 which was introduced in 1908 defines the lability of proprietors and other persons for default in certain specified matters; the provisions of this section do not show that the term "propietor" has the significance sought to be attached thereto by the appellant. We are consequently brought back to section 25A and are left to construe it without the assistance of any such statutory definition of the term "proprietor" as is to be found in the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1868, the Bengal Land Registration Act, 1896, and the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Now, if we examine closely the terms "zemindars and other proprietors" in section 25A, it is plain that zemindars are proprietors, and the inference may fairly be drawn that the words "other proprietors" are intended to apply to persons who have some at least of the characteristics of a zemindar; one of these is that the zemindar holds his property directly under Government. It is well-known that the Legislature has always recognised that there are proprietors of land other than zemindars. This is clear from Regulations I of 1793 and VIII of 1793, in which the expression "zemindars, independent talugdars, and other actual proprietors of land" frequently recurs as also the phrase "the actual proprietors of the soil, of whatever denomination, whether zemindars, talugdars or chaudhris." Section 5 of Regulation VIII of 1793 specified the five classes of talugdars who were to be considered actual proprietors of land, while sections 16, 17 and 18 laid down rules respecting mokarari leases of lands, according as they were, or were not held by proprietors. It is indisputable, consequently, that the Legislature has recognised persons other than zemindars as proprietors who held their lands directly under Government. It is not necessary for our present purpose to attempt an exhaustive enumeration of the rights and obligations of such proprietors and to ascertain in what precise way, if any, their position was differentiated from that of zemindars. But one negative test may be safely formulated, namely, that a person who holds a derivative title under a zemindar cannot rightly be classed as a proprietor within the meaning of that word as used in the expression "zemindars and other proprietors" in section 25A of Regulation III of 1872. If the contrary view were maintained, it would follow that in the event of a contest between the admitted zemindar and a person who alleged himself to be mokararidar under him, but whose status was denied by the zemindar, the matter would be open for investigation by the Civil Court, notwithstanding a decision thereon by a Revenue Court, in other words, the Civil Court would be called upon to decide a question of the existence of relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, a question obviously intended by the Regulation to be determined by the Settlement Court and the superior Revenue Authorities. In the case before us, the question in controversy between the parties is, whether the mourasi mokarari lease-hold interest of Smith has, by devolution, passed entirely to Chatterjee or has vested partly in Mookerjee and partly in Chatterjee. Smith derived his title as permanent tenure-holder from the admitted zemindar and was in no sense of the term a proprietor. We cannot possibly hold that in the present suit only the rights of two proprietors as between themselves are in controversy. The view we take, namely, that a permanent tenure-holder who has derived title from a zemindar is not a proprietor within the meaning of section 25A of Regulation III of 1872 is in harmony with that adopted, explicitly or impliedly, in a long series of decisions of this Court, amongst which may be mentioned Nadiar Chand Singh v. Chunder Sikhur Singh (4), Ram Churn Singh v. Dhaturi Singh (5), Ramranjan v. Nanda Lall (6), Kangal Chandra Mandal v. Madhu Sudan (7), Ram Ranjan v. Satish Chandra Singh (8), Mir Mozuffur Ali v. Kali Prosad (9), Digambar Das v. Jatindrabala Dasi (10), Digambar Das v. Harendra Narayan (11) and Nemo Deo v. Parbati Kumari (12). Before we leave this point, we may add one observation with reference to two subsidiary reasons assigned by the appellant in support of his contention. It was said, in the first place, that he was not aware of the Settlement proceedings; if so, his remedy is by an application to the Settlement Court or to the superior Revenue Authorities to re-open the matter. It was said, in the second place, that the defendant has, under section 25A of Regulation II of 1886, taken steps to acquire the holdings of raiyats in the village, on the assumption that he had the status of a proprietor. This is clearly immaterial. If the defendant is not in law a proprietor, as we hold he is not, he cannot create a jurisdiction in the Civil Court contrary to the provisions of sections 11 and 25A of Regulation III of 1872. We hold accordingly that section 25A does not cover the present suit, as the question in controversy does not relate to the rights of proprietors as between themselves.

As regards the second branch of the contention of the appellant, it has been argued that there was no "decision" by the Settlement Court, because the plaintiff was not represented there and no contest took place between him and the defendant. This position cannot possibly be supported, for if the contention of the appellant were to prevail, any person might defeat the provision of section 11 by his omission, it might be a deliberate omission, to appear before the Settlement Authorities [Mozuffur Ali v. Kali Prosad (9)]. It was incumbent on the Settlement Court to ascertain and record the various interests and rights in the land under sections 9, 10 and 12 of Regulation III of 1872. It did ascertain such rights and decide that Chatterjee was the owner by purchase of the mourasi mokarari tenure originally held by Smith; indeed, under section 14 it was bound to inquire into, settle and record all the rights in the land, even though such rights might not have been urged by the parties interested. This decision is conclusive under section 25, sub-section (1), till it has been set aside by some method known to law at the instance of any person prejudicially affected thereby. The inference follows that the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the suit is barred by section 11 of Regulation III of 1872. The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs to respondent Chatterjee.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Kistna, dated the 14th of April 1914, in Interlocutory Appeal No. 485 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 44 of 1899, Godavari District Court.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Petitioner.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan and Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Dealing first with Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1154 of 1914, we observe that the decree has already been sent for execution to the District Court of Kistna.

No doubt the decree in Original Suit No. 44 of 1899 was passed by the District Court of Godavari. That Court has now lost jurisdiction, the items of property, with reference to which it had jurisdiction under section 19, Civil Procedure Code, having been transferred to another Court. Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) dealt only with pending execution proceedings. But the principle stated in it is applicable to proceedings at their institution. With reference to it and section 37, Civil Procedure Code, we must hold that the Godavari District Court has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute; jurisdiction will then lie with the Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit, in which the decree was passed, if it were not instituted. It is not disputed that the suit properties are distributed between the jurisdictions of at least three Courts of which the Kistna District Court is one, each of which would have jurisdiction under section 19 to try the suit and each of which, therefore, might have jurisdiction to execute this decree.

We, therefore, must decide the question on the grounds of convenience. It is no doubt the case that petitioner is interested under the decree only in the Nidadavole Estate, of which he alleges that no part is within the present original jurisdiction of the Kistna District Court though this is not admitted by respondents. But, on the other hand, though the decree of the Privy Council disposes of two suits, there is no reason for regarding it as dealing only with one estate in petitioner's interest. Respondent is also entitled to consideration and will share both in the Nidadavole and Medur Estates. It is conceded that the division of the permanently settled portion of both will have to be made by the Collector of Kistna District. It is further we think material that (1) the Receiver of the estates has in fact been working under the Kistna District Court and (2) the District Judge, whose process runs direct throughout the District, will deal with the matter more conveniently than the Subordinate Judge of either Bezwada or Ellore, to the latter of whom petitioner contends that the decree should be transmitted. It is, moreover, advisable in view of the magnitude of the interests involved that an Officer of the standing of the District Judge should be entrusted with the case. In these circumstances we do not think that reason has been made out for modification of the order already passed transmitting the decree to the Kistna District Court. We, therefore, follow the previous order and direct transmission of the decree to that Court at petitioner's instance also. Petitioner will pay respondent's costs, two sets.

The decision in Appeal against Order No. 176 of 1914 follows that in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1154. The appeal against the order is dismissed with costs; two sets.

Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Claim by one proprietor against another for establishing occupancy rights—When decree of Civil Court cannot be registered in Revenue Court—Return of plaint—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 77 and 100.

A suit by one of the proprietary body against another for declaring that the former is the occupancy tenant of land belonging to the latter falls under section 77 (3) (d) and is consequently triable only by a Revenue Court. It is immaterial whether the dispute has arisen out of partition proceedings about the land. When a suit of this nature has been decided by a Munsif having no Revenue powers his decree cannot be registered as that of a Revenue Court by the Chief Court. The ordinary course in such a case is to return the plaint for presenting it to a competent Revenue Court.

Ram Jas v. Ralla, 1 Ind. Cas. 465; 25 P. R. 1909; 39 P. W. R. 1909; 70 P. L. R. 1909, referred to.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, in this case pleads that he and defendant No. 31 are occupancy tenants of the land in suit, and seeks a declaration of his rights as occupancy tenant.

I am at a loss to understand how the lower Courts have entertained the case, for it appears to me clear that the cognizance of the Civil Courts is barred by section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, this being a suit by a tenant to establish his claim to occupancy rights. The fact that plaintiff is also one of the landlords of the joint khata of which the land in suit forms a part makes no difference whatever. This suit is brought by plaintiff in his capacity of tenant of the land which is in his possession, and he is clearly seeking to establish his claim to occupancy rights which has been denied. It is quit incorrect to say (as has been urged before me) that plaintiff is objecting to partition, for reference to the plaint will show clearly that he has no objection to the partition of the proprietary rights, and only wants his possession of the land in suit to be preserved on the ground that he and defendant are occupancy tenants. The case, in my opinion, falls under section 77 (3) (d) of the Tenancy Act, and is triable only by a Revenue Court.

The Court of first instance was that of a Munsif who has no powers at all on the Revenue side. I do not think that I should order the decree of that Court to be registered as the decree of a Collector of the first grade, for if such a course is improper in the case of a suit being tried by an Officer whose powers on the Revenue side are too low [Vide Ram Jas v. Ralla(1)], it would seem to be still more improper in the case of a suit being tried by an Officer who has no powers at all on the Revenue side. I accept this appeal, and set aside all the proceedings and direct the plaint to be returned by this Court to the plaintiff for presentation, if so advised, in a Revenue Court of competent jurisdiction.

I leave the parties to bear their own costs in all Civil Courts, for if defendants had raised the question of jurisdiction in the first Court, it is quite possible that that Court would have returned the plaint.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code Act (XIV of 1882), s. 335—Order under s. 335, effect of, if not set aside within one year.

An order passed under section 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, is conclusive as between the parties and, if not set aside by a suit instituted within one year, it cannot be questioned in any subsequent suit as between the same parties, whether the possession given to the auction-purchaser is actual or symbolical.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 42 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Srirangam, in Original Suit No. 455 of 1910.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sue to recover possession of their share in the family properties by partition by metes and bounds. The defendant is the purchaser in execution of the share of the father of the plaintiffs. The 1st defendant obtained a decree against the plaintiffs' father. The plaintiffs put in a petition under section 335, Civil Procedure Code. The defendants contended that the house is the self-acquisition of the 1st defendant; but the Court held that it is the joint family property of the plaintiffs and their father and that the 1st defendant is entitled only to the share of the plaintiffs' father. He was accordingly placed in joint possession of the house. No suit was brought by the defendants to set aside the order within a year. The present suit is by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the share of family properties by partition. The District Munsif held that the suit property belonged to the plaintiff and his father and in execution the entire family property passed to the auction-purchaser, and on this ground dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge held (1) that the question as to what passed in the execution sale is not concluded by the previous order, as the possession there given is only symbolical and not actual, and (2) that the entire family properties passed to the auction-purchaser. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. The present appeal is against that decree in the case.

Mr. K. Jogannadha Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It does not seem to us material what was the nature of the possession which the plaintiffs obtained under the order, Exhibit C, since we declined to hold that that order was without legal effect. Exhibit C whatever the result of the direction it contained as to delivery to the plaintiffs, also included an adjudication as to their and the 1st defendant's rights in the property. That adjudication was, under section 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force, conclusive between the parties.

The 1st defendant has argued contra, on the ground that the finality of this adjudication resulted from his failure to sue to establish the right which he claimed to the present possession of the property, and that as he had not been evicted, he had no cause of action on which to sue. We do not accept this. The plaintiffs had been given such joint possession as the Civil Procedure Code enabled the Court to give them; and the 1st defendant's possession had been affected in its character, though it had not been terminated. We think that the words of the section are wide enough to cover the suit to establish the 1st defendant's right to sole possession, which he should have brought.

In the first case referred to by the lower Appellate Court, Ibrahim Mullick v. Ram Jadu Rakshit (1), it is not clear how the symbolical or formal delivery which was in question could have had any legal meaning, since none of the circumstances authorising such a delivery are mentioned as in question; and it is not necessary to find any other foundation than this for the decision. In the second, Mahadev Sakharam Parkar v. Jamu Namji Hatley (2), the nature of the possession obtained was material with reference to Article 138, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act, not in the connection now in question.

In these circumstances we dissent from the decision of the lower Courts on issue 8 and hold that the 1st defendant is precluded from disputing the title of the 1st, 2nd and 4th plaintiffs who were parties to Miscellaneous Petition No. 31 of 1907. The third plaintiff was not a party to that order and it has not been shown how he can have the benefit of it.

No argument has been addressed to us with reference to issue 7. The result is that the decision of the lower Courts must be set aside, except as against the 3rd plaintiff, the suit being remanded to the District Munsif's Court, with directions to pass a preliminary decree for partition awarding two shares in the suit property to the 1st defendant and one share each to the 1st, 2nd and 4th plaintiffs. A final decree must then be passed in due course of law. We do not deal at this stage with issues 3, 4 and 5 which will appropriately be considered in connection with the final decree or any appeal against it. The 1st defendant will pay the costs of the 1st, 2nd and 4th plaintiffs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The 3rd plaintiff will pay his own costs throughout. The District Munsif will provide for other costs in his final decree.

Appeal allowed; Suit remanded.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Document creating immediate interest in grantee, whether compulsorily registrable—Payment of rent—Proof of tenancy—Rent suit at request of defendant, when not collusive.

A document specifying the boundaries of a certain plot of land, fixing the rent and the terms of the tenancy and stating that a lease is granted to the grantee who undertakes to execute a kabuliat within a specified period, is in substance a lease purporting to create an immediate interest in the grantee in the land demised and is, therefore, compulsorily registrable.

It is open to a party to establish a tenancy by proof of the payment of rent to the landlord.

If there is a real contract of tenancy and rent is really due, a rent suit cannot be said to be collusive, though instituted by the landlord at the instance or request of the defendant.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Jessore, dated the 18th February 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, Narail, dated 31st January 1911.

Babu Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Jnanendra Nath Sarkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The plaintiff and the defendants claim title from the same source and each of them relies upon an amalnama. The question in controversy is whether the amalnama, dated the 27th December 1904 and produced by the plaintiff, is admissible in evidence. No question arises as to the amalnama produced by the defendants, because the Subordinate Judge has found that the genuineness of that amalnama has not been established. The amalnama of the plaintiff describes the land as situated within certain specified boundaries and fixes the rent and the terms of tenancy. It further states that a lease is granted to the grantee and that the grantee undertakes to execute a kabuliat within a period of one month. This document is in substance a lease and as such was compulsorily registrable. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the plaintiff to support the contrary view upon the cases of Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali (1) and Dwarka Nath v. Ledu Sikdar (2), which were considered in Sheik Elahi Bakhsh v. Sheik Hukum Bakhsh (3). It was laid down in the case last mentioned that where a document is in substance an agreement to lease or a lease, that is, where it is something more than a mere authority to the grantee to take possession of the land, it is compulsorily registrable under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. On behalf of the plaintiff reliance has also been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pertab Chunder Ghose v.

(2) 33 C. 502.

(3) 20 Ind. Cas. 907; 19 C. L. J. 464; 18 C. W. N. 38.

Mahendra Nath Purkait (4), and it has been argued that the document before us falls within section 17, clause (h), of the Indian Registration Act and is, therefore, not compulsorily registrable. There is no force in this contention. No doubt the document recites that the grantee has undertaken to execute a kabuliat in favour of the landlord. But it does not state that no interest would vest in the grantee till the execution of another document by the grantor in supersession of the informal document executed at the time. In the document in the case before the Judicial Committee the tenants conjointly promised that they would sign and have registered kabuliats in respects of rents at the rates mentioned for the old lands which they had and for the excess land, if any, found on measurement. Sir Richard Couch stated that the evidence of the plaintiff himself showed that the document was not intended to be the final agreement, and held that it fell within the description of clause (h) of section 17, that is, was a document merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create or declare any such right. Here, the document purports to create an immediate interest in the grantee in the land demised and, therefore, is in essence a lease which is compulsorily registrable. The amalnama has consequently been rightly held by the Subordinate Judge to be inadmissible in evidence.

The next question which requires consideration is whether the Subordinate Judge has properly considered the question of the existence of a tenancy right in the plaintiff, irrespective of the amalnama. As was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sonet Koer v. Himmut Bahadoor (5), recognition of interest by receipt of rent would constitute some kind of tenancy requiring to be determined by notice or otherwise. It was consequently open to the plaintiff to establish a tenancy right by proof of payment of rent to the landlord. This the plaintiff sought to do by production of two rent receipts and a rent-decree obtained by the landlord against him. The defendants impeached the genuineness of the receipts, but the Subordinate Judge has not come to any finding upon the question raised. The receipts were also challenged on the ground that the payments for which they were granted are not mentioned in the plaint in the subsequent rent suit and are consequently fictitious. This contention the Subordinate Judge has overruled, without a specific finding that credit was allowed by the landlord in respect of the payments indicated by the rent-receipts. In so far, therefore, as the rent-receipts are concerned, there is no finding by the Subordinate Judge whether they are genuine and if genuine, whether the payments alleged were actually made. As regards the rent-decree the Subordinate Judge has rather loosely described it as collusive. The real question in controversy is, whether the decree was fictitious in the sense that a suit for rent was brought although there was no pre-existing contract of tenancy on which rent was due. If there was a real contract of tenancy and if rent was really due, the rent suit would not be collusive though instituted by the landlord at the instance or request of the defendant. This part of the case consequently requires careful examination. The Subordinate Judge further appears to have based his judgment upon circumstances of suspicion. If fraud is alleged by the defendants, particulars of the fraud must be set forth and the charge substantially proved as laid. The Subordinate Judge must re-examine the fundamental question in the case, namely, whether there was a real contract of tenancy with the plaintiff. If there was a real contract of tenancy, he must also ascertain the truth of the allegation of the plaintiff that rents were paid in respect thereof as indicated by the receipts. Besides, if there was rent due when the rent suit was brought, the decree cannot be discarded as collusive because instituted at the request of the defendants. We further observe that the Subordinate Judge has not properly considered the rent-receipts produced by the defendants. He has found that the amalnama of the defendants has not been proved to be genuine; but whether genuine or not, it must be discarded on the same ground as the amalnama produced by the plaintiff. But in so far as the receipts obtained by the defendants are concerned, their genuineness and reality must be examined. If the plaintiff establishes a real tenancy, the case for the defendants must be investigated; and the defendants will succeed if they prove that they had a prior tenancy or that the claim of the plaintiff is barred by limitation. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge is essentially defective and cannot be upheld.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that the points indicated in this judgment may be re-tried upon the evidence on the record. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Pre-emption—Rival pre-emptors—Collusion with vendee to be strictly proved before pre-emption suit dismissed

Before the suit of a pre-emptor is dismissed on the ground that he is acting in collusion with the vendee and in the latter's interest, it will have to be shown by the strictest evidence that his object is really to secure the property for the vendee. His motive to annoy and defeat his rival pre-emptors is not sufficient.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of the Ferozepur Division, dated the 23rd of November 1911.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute with which this appeal is concerned is one between rival pre-emptors and arose as follows :—

On the 16th of March 1910 Dana Singh sold the land in dispute to Kishen Singh, vendee, for an alleged consideration of Rs. 5,000. On the last day of limitation Harnam Singh and Sundar Singh, who are proprietors in the village and in the patti, brought a suit for pre-emption, claiming that the price had not been fixed in good faith and offering to pay Rs. 2,000 or market value. On the same day and immediately after the institution of the first suit, Amar Singh, brother of the vendor, also instituted a suit for pre-emption offering to pay the full price of Rs. 5,000. The rival pre-emptors were impleaded as co-defendants against each other in the suits, both of which were tried together with the consent of the parties.

It is not denied that Amar Singh's right of pre-emption is superior to that of his rivals, but his claim has been dismissed by the District Judge and by the Divisional Judge on appeal, on the ground that he is acting in collusion with the vendee and in the latter's interest. The grounds upon which this opinion is based are—

(1) that Amar Singh has expressed his readiness to pay the full amount of Rs. 5,000 in respect of land which, according to his own statement made in another suit in 1906, cannot be worth more than about Rs. 750;

(2) that Amar Singh is deep in debt and will find difficulty in raising the money for purchasing the property; and

(3) that he filed the suit in a hurry and with the obvious intention of defeating the rival pre-emptors.

The learned Divisional Judge has referred to certain rulings of this Court, but, despite the principles therein laid down, holds that this is a very exceptional case and that consequently those principles do not apply.

In our opinion, the grounds upon which the Courts have held that suit to be collusive are devoid of any real force and do not prove that the pre-emptor is seeking the benefit not of himself but of the vendee. It is quite possible that his motive is to annoy and defeat his rivals and, in any event, it would have to be shown by the strictest evidence that his object was really to secure the land for the vendee. In our opinion, having regard to the rulings of this Court [see Brij Nath v. Jita (1), Ramsukh Das v. Fazal-ud-Din (2), Jiwan Singh v. Sher Singh (3), Manohar Lal v. Pars Ram (4), Ahsan Ullah v. Jowahir Lal 5), Mahmud Bakhsh v. Hassan Bakhsh (6) and Sheo v. Jawahir Singh (7)], the claim of Amar Singh should have been decreed and we accordingly accept his appeal.

He will be granted a decree for pre-emption conditional on his paying into Court a sum of Rs. 5,000 within 90 days from the date of this decree. In the event of his failing to do so, his suit shall stand dismissed and plaintiffs, Harnam Singh and Sundar Singh, will be granted a decree for pre-emption conditional on payment into Court of Rs. 2,500 within 30 days after the expiry of the said period of 90 days. In default, their suit also to stand dismissed. We direct that the costs of all parties shall be borne by themselves throughout this litigation.

Grove losing its character as such and brought under cultivation, resumption of—Ordinary tenant land—Trees still standing on land previously grove, right of grove-holder as to.

A grove-holder becomes an ordinary tenant in respect of the grove-land losing its character as such and brought under cultivation, but retains his right in the trees that still remain standing thereon.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 18th June 1913, upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated 20th January 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated 12th November 1912.

Babu Behari Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—First as to the grove. The Assistant Collector saw the number himself and satisfied himself that it did not retain the character of a grove and was under cultivation. In these circumstances, it cannot be held that appellant has any right to hold rent-free in perpetuity or to have rent assessed as under-proprietor. He retains his rights in the trees, but the land becomes ordinary tenant land on which he has to pay rent as a tenant.

There remains the question of the muafi, not grove. Appellant appears to have held at the first Regular Settlement a number of other numbers as muafi which are not now in his possession. It cannot, therefore, be presumed that the sanad he produces refers to the present muafi or that the muafi itself is an old one.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Where two persons jointly lease a house, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, they are jointly and severally liable to pay the rent, and it is open to the landlord to sue one or both of them.

If the landlord sues one of them only, under Order I, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has the power to order that the other should be made a co-defendant, but it is not bound to do so, and in case there is no clue to his whereabouts, it would not be proper for the Court to insist that he should be made a party Petition for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 5th July 1913.

Mr. Morton, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Raghunath Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Mr. Livingstone, and a certain Mr. Dick jointly leased a bungalow in Lahore from Feroz Din, plaintiff-respondent, for one year from 1st October 1912 at a rental of Rs. 80 a month, plus Rs. 8 a month for the mali's pay. The suit out of which the present application for revision arises was brought by the plaintiff against Mr. Livingstone alone for Rs. 88 on account of the rent for the month of May 1913. It was stated in the plaint that the other tenant had left Lahore and there was no clue to his whereabouts. The defence was that the landlord was not entitled to bring the suit against one of the two joint tenants and to realise the whole rent from him. The Court below, on the authority of section 43 of the Indian Contract Act, disallowed defendant's objections and decreed the claim.

Mr. Morton, on behalf of the petitioner, refers to the ruling reported in volume XII of the Calcutta Law Journal at page 642 [Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhudro (1)]. In that case an earlier ruling of the Calcutta High Court printed at page 591 of the same volume [Sir Rameswar Singh v. Jaideb Jha (2)] was referred to, in which it was held that it was competent to a plaintiff-landlord to maintain his suit against any number of several joint tenants. In the ruling cited by Mr. Morton the Judges were of opinion that the rule was stated in too comprehensive terms in the earlier ruling and they went on to state, "we may add that even if it could be laid down that ordinarily a landlord may make one of several joint tenants responsible for the whole rent, the doctrine would be inapplicable to the present case for two special reasons." The learned Judges then went on to state the special reasons which existed in that case. They did not lay down that a landlord must always sue all his joint tenants in one suit.

"When two or more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one or more' of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise." It was laid down in Muhammad Askari v. Radhe Ram Singh (3), that the effect of this section was to exclude the right of a joint contractor to be sued along with his co-contractors, and that the rule laid down in the cases of King v. Hoare (4) and Kendall v. Hamilton (5) is no longer applicable to cases arising in India. Similarly in Dick v. Dhunjee Jaitha (6) it was held that section 43 of the Contract Act takes away the right of a joint debtor to be sued jointly. But the learned Judge went on to point out that it was open to the defendant to apply to the Court for joinder of a person who ought to have been included in the action as a co-defendant and that the Code of Civil Procedure gives the Court absolute discretion to add or to refuse to add a party. In Jag Lal v. Shib Lal (7) it was held that in a suit upon a contract made by a partner on behalf of the partnership the promisee can compel all or any one of such partners to perform the whole of the promise, and that non-joinder of a co-promisor is no ground of defence to such a suit.

In the present suit it is clear that Mr. Livingstone and Mr. Dick jointly leased the house from the plaintiff and, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, I must hold, in accordance with the authorities, that they are jointly and severally liable to pay the rent and that it was open to the plaintiff to sue one or both of them. No doubt under Order I, rule 10, of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had the power to order that the other tenant, Mr. Dick, should be made a co-defendant, but the Court was not bound to do this and, as there is no clue to Mr. Dick's whereabouts, it would not have been proper for it to insist that he should be made a party.

The application for revision is, therefore, rejected. No costs are allowed, no certificate having been filed.

Revision rejected.

Waqf—Muhammadan dedicating properties for expenses of mosque and maintenance of family, how far valid—Musalmans Waqf Validating Act (VI of 1913), retrospective effect of.

Where a Muhammadan made a waqf of his properties for the expenses of a mosque and for the maintenance of his children:

Held, that the waqf so far as it related to the expenses of the mosque was valid, but not for the maintenance of the children, as it was not properly endowed for religious purposes.

The Mussalmans Waqf Validating Act, 1913, has not a retrospective effect.

Mr. A. Basul (with him Dr. A. M. Suhrowardy), for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. S. K. Chakravarti, D. N. Basu and B. C. Ghose, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to have a towliatnama or waqfnama, dated the 12th Aswin 1297, executed by one Abdul Khansama declared invalid, and for partition of the properties therein mentioned according to the Muhammadan Law, should it be held to be invalid either wholly or in part. The partition is to be of such part as may be declared not legally affected by that instrument. So far as the appearing defendants are concerned, no question has been raised as regards the correctness of the facts stated in the plaint, either with regard to the pedigree set out therein or the dates of death and the subsequent devolution of the shares of the parties named; but inasmuch as defendants Nos. 5 and 6 have not appeared and some others have not put in their written statements, I give leave to the plaintiff to prove the facts stated in the plaint, so far as the pedigree and devolution of shares are concerned by filing an affidavit. Such affidavit is to be filed before the decree is drawn up.

It appears that Abdul Khansama executed a waqfnama on the 17th October 1880. So far as that waqfnama is concerned, I do not think there can be any doubt that it was a proper endowment. It is stated by some of the parties that there is a suit pending in the Alipore Court relating to this document. But the plaintiff asserts that that suit has been recently withdrawn—a fact which is not admitted by the defendant Sukur Jan. But whether that be so or not, I am not called upon to construe that document. Having regard to its tenor alone, it does not seem to be an illusory dedication. With the subsequent dealings with the property by the creator, whether they were treated by him as subject to a valid waqf or not, I am not concerned. I am not dealing with those contentions in this suit. Nothing in connection therewith has been brought before me in this suit. As regards the second deed, the question is how far it is a good dedication. It seems to me to be an illusory dedication, excepting in respect of the charitable trusts specifically mentioned therein. It begins by saying that "provision for the livelihood and support of one's children and the destitute is also reckoned amongst religious deeds under the Muhammadan Law," and that he, therefore, makes a charitable waqfnama "for children and the poor in the name of God." He constitutes himself the first mutwalli by this deed, and lays down certain rules which are to govern the management of the so-called dedicated properties. Rule (1) states "that out of the income of the properties, in the first place, Government revenue and taxes shall be paid and repairs to the mosque and other buildings shall be effected, when necessary." The "other buildings" do not refer to the mosque, but to other buildings belonging to the estate. Rule (2) runs thus: "out of the surplus remaining after deducting the charges of collection, the expenses of and in connection with the mosque at Narkeldanga founded under the first deed shall be paid in accordance with the list given in schedule 'kha,'" rule (3): "that out of the amounts of profits from the waqf properties which will remain after deducting the expenses, etc., in paragraphs 1 and 2, members of his family shall get monthly allowances as stated in schedule 'ga.'" Rule (4) goes on to say that "out of the surplus, certain sums are to be paid by the mutwalli for specially important matters relating to the dedicated property and on occasions of joy and grief of the mutwallis and others." Rule (5) says that in the event of his or their children being totally extinct, the amount of maintenance will vest in the poor. Then there is a provision that in the event of the monthly allowance lapsing, the mutwali for the time being is to distribute t according to the provisions of the Muhammadan Law. Then elaborate rules are laid down for the appointment of mutwallis. He recites the earlier endowment and says that it is to be treated as part of the present waqf. Then in paragraph 28 he says that his heirs (naming them) are to get their respective shares according to the Muhammadan Law in the property in his "khas" possession, and the surplus is to be similarly divided amongst them, after deducting all costs from the amount of the income of the waqf properties. I think that the dedication for waqf purposes of property yielding an income of Rs. 316 is good. This amount should be set apart, namely, Rs. 300 mentioned in schedule "kha" and a sum of Rs. 8 for the salary of a sircar for making collections and Rs. 8 for the salary of the person who is to be the manager amongst the mutwallis. Properties sufficient to yield the above income and also for the upkeep of the mosque at Narkeldanga are to be set apart, and also such amount as may be necessary for the payment of the Government revenue and taxes. By upkeep I mean repairs, etc., because all other expenses are provided for in schedule "kha." With regard to the rest of the property, I consider there has been no proper dedication. It was intended, and the only intention appears to be, to tie up the property for the benefit of his children and heirs and as such, cannot be considered to have been properly endowed for religious purposes. The properties mentioned in the first waqfnama, I am told, are quite sufficient for the expenses of the mosque; and since that document has been made part of the present document and since all those properties are included in the document under construction, I have made the order aforesaid. The parties are declared entitled to the shares mentioned by learned Counsel. An affidavit is to be put in, showing that the shares have been correctly calculated. As there is no contest in respect of the shares and it is only a matter of arithmetical calculation, I allow such an affidavit to be put in. Since the institution of this suit, the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act of 1913 has been passed. It was passed in March 1913, and it seems to me to have prospective effect from that date. I do not think it has any retrospective effect. It does not seem to have been intended that it should have retrospective effect. The managing mutwalli, namely, the first defendant, will get credit for all payments made by him to the co-sharers. The mesne profits are only to be calculated for the last six years. In setting apart the property to meet the above valid charges, the Commissioner of partition is to take into account the properties purchased by Sukur Jan in execution of decrees obtained by her in other Courts and also the sale certificates she holds, that is to say, that, unless absolutely necessary, those properties are not to be set apart for the above purposes. There will be a decree for partition as regards the rest of the property according to the shares declared. Liberty to the parties to name the Commissioner of partition hereafter. Costs up to date are to be paid out of the estate of Abdul Khansama. Costs of partition will be according to the shares of the parties respectively. Costs of the taking of the accounts above mentioned will be dealt with after the report. Liberty generally to the parties to apply. All the costs are to be taxed on scale No. II as of a contested action. Copies of the affidavit relating to the working out of the shares and pedigree are to be given to the parties appearing for the purpose of verification. It is to be filed as soon as practicable.

Order accordingly.

SIKHDAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Minor—Mutation proceeding—Compromise by mother on behalf of minor sons—Suit by minor for setting aside compromise—Leave of Court not obtained—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Documents evidencing family settlement—Petition of compromise declaring interests of parties in property exceeding Rs. 100 in value—Compromise not for minor's benefit validity of.

In the course of mutation proceedings, a petition was filed setting out the terms of a compromise arrived at between the parties. The petition was signed on behalf of the minor plaintiffs by their mother and mutation was made in accordance with the terms of the petition. On a suit by the minors to set aside the compromise and for possession of their proper share in the property:

Held, (1) that as Order XXXII, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to proceedings under section 35 of the Land Revenue Act, the compromise could not be set aside merely on the ground that the Revenue Court did not give the plaintiffs' mother and guardian leave to enter into it on their behalf.

(2) that written instruments are not exempt from registration merely because they evidence or carry out a family settlement; nor does the mere fact that a document is thrown into the form of a petition or is presented to a Court along with a petition exempt its registration, if it is otherwise compulsorily registrable.

(3) that a petition of compromise presented to a Court which declares the respective interests of the parties in property exceeding Rs. 100 in value must be registered before it can be used as evidence of title, unless it is acted upon judicially by the Court.

(4) that the mere fact that the compromise was not made for the benefit of the minors was enough ground for setting it aside.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated 10th April 1913.

FACTS.—The parties are step-brothers. The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain property, on the allegation that the compromise entered into between the defendants (their step-brothers) and the plaintiffs' mother in a mutation case was not binding on the plaintiffs. The defence was that the plaintiffs were bound by the compromise. The Courts below decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Defendants-Appellants:—The compromise, being simply an acknowledgment of the rights of the parties, must be taken to be a settlement of doubtful family disputes. It did not consequently require registration. Pearey Lal v. Kokla Kunwar (1) and Kokla v. Pearey Lal (2).

Moreover, Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to an application made in a mutation case. Even if it is assumed that it does, it will have to be presumed under the circumstances of this case that the compromise was arrived at with the implied permission and authority of the Court. It is clear that the parties at first came to an oral agreement and then put in an application stating that the matter had been settled between the parties. I rely on the following rulings.

Aman Singh v. Narain Singh (3); Kaulesra v. Jorai Kasaundhan (4); Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Chajju (5); Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (6); Madan Lal v. Chuttan Singh (7); Ram Nirunjun Singh v. Prayag Singh (8); Rameshwar Prosad Singh v. Lachmi Prosad Singh (9); Jasimuddin Biswas v. Bhuban Jelini (10); Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (11); Birbhadra Nath v. Kulpataru Panda (12); Midnapore Zemindari Co., Ltd. v. Gobinda Mahto (13); Vithaldas v. Dattaram (14); Krishna Tanhaji v. Aba Shetti Patil (15); Lingappa Ningappa v. Sangawa (16); Ramdas Chabildas v. Chabildas Lalloobhoy (17); Prannal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (18); Doraiswamy Pillai v. Thungasami Pillai (19); Rajinder Narain Rai v. Bijai Govind Singh (20); Amir Chand v. Narsingh Narayan Singh (21).

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Respondents:—Here there is no question of any oral agreement. The compromise has been reduced to writing and under section 17 (b) of the Registration Act, it ought to have been registered.

I rely on Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Chajju (5), Bhagwan Sahai v. Harchain (22), Rustam Ali Khan v. Musammat Gaura (23).

BHAROSA v. SIKHDAR.

In order to avoid registration, it must be shown that the compromise was incorporated in a decree. Biraj Mohini Dossee v. Kedar Nath Karmakar (24).

The compromise does involve a relinquishment of right in property worth more than Rs. 100.

Further, it is a question whether in a joint Hindu family the mother can represent her sons when the eldest son is the karta of the family.

Dr. S. N. Sen, in reply:—The plaintiffs have not suggested anywhere that their mother did not represent them.

The compromise is either an ordinary petition or a document settling family rights. In either case, it does not require registration.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Mangli Kurmi by his wife Rukya, who is the fourth defendant. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are his sons by another wife. Mangli died in September 1911. In the course of the mutation proceedings consequent upon his death a petition was filed on January 4th, 1912, setting out that the parties had agreed that the names of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 should be entered in respect of Mangli's zemindari property and that the names of the plaintiffs should be entered in respect of 3 bighas malikana, the plots being specified. The petition was signed on behalf of the plaintiffs by their mother, the fourth defendant. The plaintiffs were then and still are, minors. Mutation of names was made in accordance with the petition as regards the zemindari. There is nothing to show what was done about the 3 bighas.

In June 1912 the plaintiffs brought the present suit to set aside the compromise and for possession of their shares in the zemindari. The Munsif gave them a decree for 2/5ths of the property and his decree was confirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge who held that the petition of compromise was not admissible in evidence not having been registered, that the sanction of the Revenue Court was necessary to the validity of the compromise but was not obtained and that the plaintiffs' mother had no power to enter into the compromise on their behalf as it was not for their benefit.

Order XXXII, rule 7, does not apply to proceedings under section 35 of the Land Revenue Act, therefore, the compromise cannot be set aside merely on the ground that the Revenue Court did not give the plaintiffs' mother and guardian leave to enter into it on their behalf.

The learned Vakil for the defendants-appellants contended, in the first place, that documents evidencing a family settlement do not require registration, at all events where, as in the present case, the compromise does not purport to transfer property from one party to another but is based on the assumption that there was some kind of antecedent title in the parties and the compromise acknowledges and defines what that title is, and reference was made to Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (6) and Piarey Lal v. Kokla Kunwar (1) and on appeal Kokla v. Peary Lal (2). The former case (6) deals with the effect of a compromise on titles set up by disputants, but it does not lay down that all compromises are based on the assumption that a party has some antecedent title to the property allotted to him. Some compromises certainly rest on no such assumption. It often happens that property is conveyed by one party to another in consideration of the abandonment of a claim by the other. I am not satisfied that the compromise in the present case was based on any such assumption and the decision of the Privy Council is certainly no authority for the proposition that documents giving effect to a family settlement are exempt from the Registration Law. In the case decided by this Court a petition not unlike the one now in question had been filed in some mutation proceedings. Griffin, J., decided that it did not require registration, because neither of the parties thereto purported to convey any property and the petition simply contained a statement that they agreed that each should be recorded in respect of one-half of the property. The appellate judgment is as follows; "In our opinion it must be presumed from the whole proceedings, commencing with the petition for mutation, the order of the Revenue Authorities recording the names in accordance with the petition and the subsequent sales upon the strength of this record that the parties entered into a family arrangement, (24) 12 C. W. N. 854; 35 C. 1010; 8 C. L. J. 90.

On these grounds we think that the decree of the learned Judge of this Court ought to stand." Nothing was said about the question of registration. I am disposed to think that the real ground of the decision was that as sales had taken place on the strength of the record made with the consent of the plaintiffs, it was too late for the plaintiffs to go back on what had been done. Otherwise it is difficult to account for the fact that the Court did not refer to the case of Sadar-ud-din Ahmad v. Ghajju (5), in which both learned Judges had taken part, or to the case of Rustam Ali Khan v. Musammat Gaura (23) which was precisely in point.

Written instruments are certainly not exempt from registration merely because they evidence or carry out a family settlement, see Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (18), and I know of no authority for the proposition that a document which would otherwise require registration need not be registered if it is thrown into the form of a petition or is presented to a Court along with a petition. In Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran (25) their Lordships of the Privy Council said that section 17 of the Registration Act did not apply to proper judicial proceedings, whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties or of orders made by the Court. But that observation has never been understood to mean that the Registration Act does not apply at all to any document presented to a Court. In the Madras case (18) cited above a razinamah had been presented to a Civil Court with a petition that a decree might be passed in accordance with it. The Privy Council held that in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially by the Court, it was a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration and the order pronounced in terms of it constituted res judicata, binding upon the parties who gave their consent to it. The razinamah set out the terms of an "agreement of union relating to other lands which had not been filed, but as the decree of the Court did not refer to those lands their Lordships held that as regards them, the parties must be relegated to the agreement of union which not being registered was inoperative." There has been a difference of opinion between this Court and the Calcutta High Court as to the precise meaning of this ruling of the Privy Council as regards a point which does not arise here [see Raghubans Mani Singh v. Mahabir Singh (26) and Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (11)], but both Courts have decided that a petition of compromise presented to a Court which declares the respective interests of the parties in property exceeding Rs. 100 in value, must be registered before it can be used as evidence of title, unless it is acted upon judicially by the Court [See Kashi Kunbi v. Sumer Kunbi (27) and Rustam Ali Khan v. Musammat Gaura (23)].

In the present case the petition of compromise was acted upon by the Revenue Court, at all events as regards the zemindari interests of Mangli, but no decision of a Revenue Court in a mutation proceeding can render a question of title res judicata. The Privy Council were referring to the decree of a Civil Court when they said that the order pronounced upon the razinamah constituted res judicata and, in my opinion, Knox and Piggott, JJ., were right in deciding in Rustam Ali Khan v. Musammat Gaura (23) that an order of a Revenue Court upon a petition of compromise in mutation proceedings could have no such effect.

There remains another point which was strongly pressed by Dr. Surendranath Sen. He contended that the law did not require a compromise of the kind now in question to be in writing, and that the proper view to take of the case was that the parties settled the terms of the compromise before they signed the petition and that the petition was not intended to carry out the compromise but only to inform the Court of it. He also relied upon the judgment of Banerji, J., and myself in Abu Saffan v. Aminullah (28). In that case it was alleged that two ladies had renounced their shares in the property of a deceased person in 1903. All that we held was that an unregistered petition of 1904 might be used as evidence of the relinquishment said to have taken place in 1903.

(25) 90 A. 171; 25 I. A. 9; 2 C. W. N. 129.

When the terms of a compromise are

(26) 2 A. L. J. 564; 28 A. 78; A. W. N. (1905) 195.
(27) 5 Ind. Cas. 234; 32 A. 206, 7 A. L. J. 206.
(28) S. A. No. 565 of 1913 (unreported).

found to be set out in a document, it cannot be lightly assumed that the compromise was complete before the document was signed. In most cases the signing of the document by both parties is intended to indicate that pourparlers have come to an end and the parties are at last at one. The importance of having written evidence of the terms of a compromise is well-understood, litera scripta manet; verbum ut inane perit. It was never suggested in the Courts below that the completion of the compromise preceded the signing of the petition, and it would be a mere invitation to the parties to give false evidence to allow such a case to be set up now. The petition was, I have no doubt, intended to prove the terms of the compromise and I doubt whether oral evidence of them would be admissible with reference to section 91 of the Evidence Act.

Lastly, it has been found that the compromise was not for the benefit of the plaintiffs. That finding, if sound, is alone sufficient to dispose of the plaintiffs' case.

I dismiss the appeal with costs, fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

APPAJI BHARMAPPA UMRANI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

THALEGAUDA SATYAPPA UMRANI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation—Exclusion of time spent in obtaining conciliator's certificate—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 48—Mode of computation.

The plaintiff's possessory suit in the mamlatdar's Court having been dismissed on the 28th September, 1906, he applied on the 24th September 1909 for a conciliator's certificate which was issued to him on the 24th August 1910. He then filed the present suit to recover possession of the land:

Held, that in computing the period of limitation the time to be excluded according to section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturits' Relief Act, 1879, must be reckoned by days, and that even excluding the days between the day of the application and the day of the grant of the certificate, the plaintiff's suit was barred by time.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Belgaum, in Appeal No. 134 of 1912, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge at Athni, in Civil Suit No. 326 of 1910.

Mr. M. N. Bhat, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. K. Parekh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this suit is barred by limitation. The mamlatdar's order was passed in favour of the defendant for possession on the 28th of September 1906, and from the date of that order the plaintiff had three years to sue. He did not, however, sue within three years, but just before that period expired applied to the conciliator for a certificate under Chapter VI of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. His application was made on the 24th of September 1909, and the conciliator's certificate was issued on the 24th of August 1910. Section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act says:—"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any such suit or application the time intervening between the application made by the plaintiff under section, 39 and the grant of the certificate under section 46 shall be excluded." We have recently held, and it is also conceded in argument, that the time to be excluded must be reckoned by days, and the days between the day of the application and the day of the grant of a certificate are, therefore, to be excluded under section 48. If those days are excluded, the plaintiff is out of time by three days. The suit is, therefore, barred, without reference to the question whether he can file the suit on a Monday if the time expired on a Sunday. We, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout upon the plaintiff.

Appeal allowed.

RAMESHAR DAT AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —APPELLANTS

versus

Thakur SHYAMA KUMAR SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant, relationship of—Rent assessed —Collection of rent, failure in, effect of.

If rent is once assessed on land, failure to collect it does not destroy the relationship of landlord and tenant which has once been established.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 27th September 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Hardoi, dated 9th May 1913.

FACTS.—In 1880 the defendant's father issued a notice of ejectment against the plaintiffs' father, which was contested on the ground that the land mentioned therein was the muafi of the latter, and was ultimately cancelled by the Revenue Court. Subsequent to the cancellation of the notice the former sued the latter for recovery of possession in the Civil Court, which decreed the claim on the 15th of July 1881 holding that the land was not a muafi; but this decree was never executed, and the plaintiffs' father continued to be in possession of the land. In 1912 the defendant issued a notice of ejectment on the plaintiffs, who filed a suit to contest that notice on the ground that the land was their muafi. The defendant pleaded that the land was not a muafi, for after the passing of the Civil Court decree the plaintiffs' father had agreed to pay an annual rent of Rs. 7 and did in fact so pay every year. The Court of first instance, finding that no agreement to pay rent had been arrived at and that no rent had actually been recovered, held that the land had been held as muafi since 1881 and that the defendant's only remedy was to proceed against the plaintiffs under the Resumption Chapter of the Oudh Rent Act, and cancelled the notice of ejectment. When the case came up in appeal before the Commissioner, he found that the agreement to pay rent had been entered into although the rent was never recovered in accordance with that agreement, but that this fact could not convert an ordinary tenancy into a muafi, and thus upheld the notice. The matter was further brought in appeal before the Board, and it was contended that the relation between the parties did not remain as that of landlord and tenant but became as that of grantor and grantee.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, Chaudhri Ram Bharose Lal and Babu Manni Lal, for the Appellants.

Pandits Gokaran Nath Misra and Bansi Dhar Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the view taken by the Commissioner. The Civil Court decree of 1881 was admittedly not executed, but it was not appealed and it was a final decision that as the law stood in 1881 the land was not 'muafi'. It appears that the rent of Rs. 7 was attested at Settlement, and under these circumstances the fact that it may never have been actually collected does not affect the issue.

If rent is once assessed on land failure to collect does not destroy the relationship of landlord and tenant which has once been established.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MESSRS. DAVID SASSOON & Co.—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss 39, 75—Rescission of contract—Compensation for loss caused thereby—Measure of damages—Notice of insolvency, effect of.

A bare notice of insolvency does not necessarily and in all cases amount to a declaration of intention not to fulfil obligations. It is a question of fact in each case.

Where a purchaser of goods failed to take delivery of goods under a due contract and the vendors, on receiving notice of the insolvency of the purchaser, served him with a notice that they put an end to all the forward contracts and received neither a reply to the notice nor any offer to pay for or take delivery of the goods;

JAMES FINLAY &CO., LTD. v. DAVID SASSOON & CO.

Held, that the vendors had validly rescinded the contracts and were entitled to exact compensation for the loss occasioned thereby.

Per Crouch, A. J. C.—The great underlying principle by which the Courts are guided in awarding damages is restitutio in integrum and the exact cost of effecting a complete restitutio in integrum is the difference between the original contract rate and that at which the vendor can sell to a fresh purchaser goods of the same quantity and quality and of the same shipment.

Per Hayward, A. J. C.—The election to take advantage of the repudiation of a contract goes only to the question of breach, and not to the question of damages, which must be estimated by the difference between the contract price and the market price at the day or days appointed for performance, and not at the time of breach Appeal against the decision of Pratt, J. C., reported in 19 Ind. Cas. 653; 6 S. L. R. 187.

The Hon'ble Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tekchand Udhavdas, R. B., for the Respondents.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Insolvent.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—This is an appeal under section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, against the order of the Judicial Commissioner, dated the 27th June 1912, dealing inter alia with two appeals numbered respectively 2 and 5. Appeal No. 2 was against an order of the Official Receiver holding that Messrs. James Finlay & Co. were justified in rescinding their contracts in January; Appeal No. 5 was against an order of the Official Receiver allowing damages to Messrs. James Finlay & Co. The learned Judicial Commissioner dismissed the Appeal No. 2, and in Appeal No. 5 modified the order of the Official Receiver by directing that damages should be ascertained according to the rates ruling at the dates of actual arrival of the goods.

This appeal is filed by Messrs. Finlay & Co., no other party has filed an appeal or put in objections. The only ground of appeal taken is that the learned Judicial Commissioner erred in assessing damages according to the rates ruling at dates of arrival instead of according to those ruling at date of rescission. But Mr. Tekchand has, under Order XLI, rule 22, been allowed to support the order on the ground that there was no valid rescission of the contracts in January.

The facts of the case are very simple. Jiwanji Pirbhoy had made several forward contracts for the purchase of sugar with Messrs. James Finlay & Co., the dates of shipment being at various times between January and December 1911. Towards the end of December 1910 there was a heavy fall in the market price of sugar and Jiwanji Pirbhoy, who had bought very largely, was unable to meet his liabilities and suspended payment. On the 9th January 1911 Messrs. Forbes, Forbes, Campbell & Co. filed a petition in insolvency; and in that petition it was alleged that Jiwanji had failed to take delivery of due contracts, that he had suspended payment and given notice of his intention to appoint trustees for creditors. These allegations were admittedly true. Interim Receivers were appointted on the 19th January. Messrs. Harchandrai & Co., on behalf of Messrs. Finlay & Co., wrote to the Receivers stating that, owing to Jiwanji Pirbhoy's insolvency and consequent inability to carry out the outsanding sugar contracts of different shipments with their clients, their clients put an end to all the said forward contracts and claimed damages, being the differences between the contract rates and market rates then ruling of those shipments, in order to avoid the risk of further reduction in the market and of additional damages. No reply was ever received to this letter. No offer to pay for the sugar or to take delivery was ever made by the Receivers or by the insolvent. Large quantities of sugar arrived in January, February and March under forward contracts of the insolvent, but delivery was taken in no case. On the 21st May Jiwanji Pirbhoy was adjudicated insolvent. Early in June the market rate of sugar began to recover and rose steadily during July and August. At dates of arrival the rates were practically on a level with the contract rate.

The Official Receiver admitted the claim of Messrs. Finlay & Co., calculated according to the rates ruling on the 19th January when they put an end to the contracts.

We agree with the Official Receiver and with the learned Judicial Commissioner that the letter of 19th January effectually put an end to the contracts. If any purchaser under a forward contract gives notice to his vendor that he will be unable to take delivery at due date or that he has no intention of doing so, the vendor can put an end to the contract under section 39, Indian Contract Act. A bare notice of insolvency does not necessarily and in all cases amount to a declaration of intention not to fulfil obligations; it is a question of fact in each case. But where, as in this case, the market has fallen and a vendor under forward contracts receives notice of insolvency and no accompanying or subsequent intimation that delivery will be taken at due date, and there are no circumstances indicating that he is likely to take delivery, and such vendor serves the insolvent with a written notice that he puts an end to the contracts and that notice is accepted without any protest, I consider that the vendor has rightfully rescinded the contract and is entitled to compensation.

On rescission Messrs. Finlay & Co. were entitled to compensation for any loss they had sustained. The great underlying principle by which the Courts are guided in awarding damages is restitutio in integrum. The law endeavours, so far as money can do it, to place the injured person in the same position he occupied before the occurrence of the wrongful act which consitutes the cause of action. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume X, section 559).

The law in India is stated in sections 73 and 75 of the Contract Act. Plaintiff is entitled to receive compensation for the loss or damage which naturally arose in the usual course of things from the breach or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from it. And in estimating the loss, the Court must take into account the means which existed for remedying the inconvenience caused by the breach.

Let us apply these clear provisions of law to the present case. It is admitted, and it is a fact of which this Court has judicial knowledge, that sugar is bought and sold daily in Karachi in very large quantities under forward contracts, that the market rate for any particular shipment can always be ascertained, and that sugar of any particular shipment can always be readily sold at or about such market rate.

On rescission, therefore, of a forward contract for the sale and purchase of sugar in Karachi, the vendor can at once remedy the inconvenience arising from his purchaser's default by making a fresh contract and the exact loss arising from the breach, the exact cost of effecting a complete restitutio in integrum, placing him in the same position as before repudiation, is the difference between the original contract rate and the rate at which he can sell to a fresh purchaser goods of the same quantity and quality and of the same shipment.

Let us approach the question from another direction. It is a well-established rule that where a purchaser of goods fails to take delivery, no re-sale is necessary to give the vendor a right to exact damages, if the goods have an ascertainable market value. At due date the vendor has a right to receive the contract price. If, however, instead of paying it the purchaser makes default and leaves the goods in his hands, the vendor simply assesses the goods at the then market value, credits him with the amount and claims the difference between this amount and the contract price. The goods are in effect taken over in part discharge of the liability to pay the contract price.

But if the contract be for future delivery and the purchaser intimate at an early date his intention not to take delivery and the vendor rescind, the contract is thereby annulled, there is no longer any obligation to give or take delivery and at due date there can be no breach. It is not disputed that in such case the vendor has an immediate right of action. Let us imagine that he institutes his suit on the day of rescission. If the interest in the goods which the defaulting purchaser has transferred to the vendor by the rescission is saleable at an ascertainable market rate, he must credit the defendant with its value at such rate, and however certain it may be that at due date the rate will be lower, he cannot assess damages at such lower rate, for the Court is bound by section 73 of the Contract Act to take into account what means he has of remedying the inconvenience. Here again, we have a simple sum in arithmetic. Before rescission, the purchaser was under liability to pay the contract price at due date. On rescission he comes under an immediate obligation to settle up accounts, and he can claim credit for the value of what he has handed back. He has no right to ask the vendor to delay settling the account in the hope of a rise in the market, for the goods are no longer his, all risk respecting them is now on the vendor, and it is obvious that he cannot both free himself from all liability in the event of a further fall in the rate and at the same time retain the benefit of a rise.

If, on rescission, the goods were absolutely unsaleable until due date and no fresh forward contract could be effected, the vendor would then have no alternative but to wait until due date before he could ascertain the exact amount of his loss. It would be practically impossible to settle up accounts until it was known to what credit the defaulting purchaser was entitled. The vendor would still have his immediate right of action and could, if he chose, at once go into Court, but no direct evidence in proof of his actual loss would be available until after due date, and if the trial took place earlier the assessment would be reduced to conjecture.

It appears, then, that if we apply to the facts of this case the law as contained in the Contract Act, Messrs. Finlay & Co. are entitled to damages as assessed as at date of rescission, as allowed by the Official Receiver. It appears also that in deciding the question whether damages should be assessed as at date of rescission or as at due date, the determining element is the possibility of immediately effecting a fresh forward contract at ascertainable rates, for the nature and extent of the inconvenience which arises from the repudiation and the means of remedying it depends on this possibility.

The learned Judicial Commissioner has, however, ruled that Messrs. Finlay & Co. are entitled only to damages as assessed at due dates, subject to abatement if they could have covered their loss by other prudent contracts. If damages be so assessed, Messrs. Finlay & Co. get nothing at all, notwithstanding that they had some hundreds of tons of sugar thrown on to their hands at a time when the market was in a state of extreme depression. It has been admitted by the learned Pleaders for the respondents, that the rule laid down works partially to the debtor and renders the position of the creditor one of great uncertainty. It may be conjectured, therefore, that there is some error either in the statement of the rule or in its application to the facts of this case. We must endeavour to ascertain its origin and thus fix the limits of its appropriate application.

In applying the law as to compensation for breach or rescission of contract to particular kinds of action, rules derived from judicial decisions have been formulated for determining what in each case is the damage which will be regarded as flowing naturally from the act complained of. These rules are described as "the measure of damages." They are, however, more properly rules for the computation of the loss commonly arising in such action. In many cases this measure affords a means of exact, or approximately exact, computation of the amount to be recovered. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume X, sections 571 and 606.) But where the rule has been derived from judicial decisions based on facts which differ in essential details from those under consideration, such rule cannot be safely applied without modification. In the case of rescission of contracts the measure of damages is ordinarily stated in the text-books to be "such damages as would have arisen from the non-performance of the contract at the appointed time." The cases which are invariably cited in support of this rule, the cases from which the rule has been derived, are Hochster v. De la Tour (1), Frost v. Knight (2), Brown v. Muller (3) and Roper v. Johnson. (4). The most recent of these cases was decided more than 39 years ago, and it is wholly improbable that any Judge or Counsel concerned in any one of them had ever contemplated the possibility of forward contracts being effected under the facile conditions which now obtain in the Karachi sugar market. The first case merely established the right of immediate action at law on rescission. In Frost v. Knight (2) defendant had promised to marry plaintiff as soon as his father died. During his father's life-time he absolutely refused to marry plaintiff. It was held that the lady could at once institute a suit and claim such damages as would have arisen from the non-performance of the contract at the appointed time, subject to abatement in respect of any circumstances which may have afforded means of mitigating the loss. It was stated that a jury would, of course, take into account whatever plaintiff had the means of doing, and as a prudent person ought in reason to have done, whereby the loss would have been diminished.

In Brown v. Muller (3) defendant failed to deliver a quantity of iron at due dates. There was no rescission, and the only question before the Court was whether plaintiff could assess damages at a date, subsequent to all due dates, when he actually bought against the contracts. It was held that he was entitled only to damages as on due dates. In Roper v. Johnson (4) defendant had agreed to deliver 3,000 tons of coal during May, June, July and August. On the 11th June defendant definitely refused to deliver any coals, and an action for breach was instituted on 3rd July. Between May and July the price rose enormously. Herschell, Q. C., for defendant contended that the true and only mode of estimating the loss was by ascertaining the difference between the contract price and the price at which plaintiff might have obtained a new contract on the day of admitted breach. But there was no evidence that such new contract could have been made and all that was urged on behalf of defendant was that "forward contracts were by no means rare". It was held that in the absence of evidence that plaintiffs could have obtained a new contract on such terms as to mitigate their loss, the true measure of damages was the sum of the differences between the contract price and the market price at the several dates of delivery.

We find then, on examination, that the rule which has been applied to the facts of this case has been derived from decisions in which the essential element of this case—that a fresh forward contract could have been easily effected on rescission—was entirely outside the consideration of the Courts. Though the four cases above referred to are generally cited as establishing the rule, it was really formulated by Cockburn, C. J., in Frost v. Knight (2) and it is not difficult to understand that a rule laid down in 1872 as a guide for the computation of damages for breach of promise to marry may lead to error when applied to the rescission of a forward contract for the sale and purchase of sugar under modern commercial conditions.

We are now, I respectfully and with all deference suggest, in a position to understand how the application of the rule has resulted in what may be fairly termed legal paradoxes. Though Messrs. Finlay & Co. are entitled under the Contract Act to compensation, none is awarded to them under the rule; though the fundamental principle of all Contract Law is that it shall work reciprocally, the debtor can under the rule insist on having the damages assessed as at due dates if the rate then be favourable to him, without being under any corresponding obligation to do so if the rate be unfavourable. This puzzling result has been arrived at by the application of an inappropriate rule for the computation of the loss suffered.

I would amend the order of the lower Court by ordering that Messrs. Finlay's claim be admitted to proof as assessed by the Official Receiver.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—These appeals raise two questions, whether appellants validly rescinded their forward contracts for sales of sugar on the purchaser's insolvency and whether appellants in that case were entitled to damages calculated on the difference between the rates of those forward contracts and the market rates at the dates of rescission for similar forward contracts, or to damages calculated on the difference between the rates of those forward contracts and the actual market rates at the dates for performance of those contracts.

With regard to the 1st question, I concur with my learned brother that the appellants have correctly been treated by the learned Judicial Commissioner as having in all the circumstances validly rescinded their forward contracts; with regard to the 2nd question, I find myself unfortunately unable to concur with my learned brother that the appellants were entitled to damages calculated on the difference between the rates of those forward contracts and the market rates at dates of rescission of similar forward contracts. It appears to me, on the contrary, that the appellants have correctly been held by the learned Judicial Commissioner to have been entitled to damages calculated on the difference between the rates of those forward contracts and the actual market rates at the dates for performance of those contracts.

The appellants have strenuously contended that they were placed in a very awkward position by their purchaser's insolvency on a falling market and that they were practically forced, as prudent merchants in order to save further loss to all parties, to rescind and re-sell their sugar at the market rates available on the dates of rescission for similar forward contracts. The appellants, Messrs. Forbes, Forbes, Campbell & Co., had even sought at the original hearing to produce evidence to prove a trade custom whereby rescission implied agreement to accept as the measure of damages the market rates available on the date of rescission for a similar forward contract. They have developed that plea here into a trade custom, whereby rescission assented to by the parties must be treated as a re-sale between the parties at the market rates available on the date of rescission for similar forward contracts. They cannot, in my opinion, be permitted at this stage to raise this developed plea and adduce evidence of such a trade custom. Moreover, in these particular cases it would not serve their purpose, as the insolvent's representative, the Receiver, distinctly repudiated as the measure of damages the market rates available on the dates of rescission for similar forward contracts. If parties should assent to such a re-sale, no doubt they would be bound by such re-sale and such assent might, no doubt, be shown to be common. But it would be quite another matter to show that parties would be bound by such re-sales even when expressly repudiating as the measure of damages the market rates available on the dates of rescission for similar forward contracts. That alone would cover these particular cases and would be far in excess of even this developed plea of trade custom.

Now the appellants must, of course, be admitted to have been placed in very awkward position and they are entitled to all sympathy for having been so unfortunate as to have selected for their sugar an insolvent purchaser. But that cannot be permitted to modify the established rules for assessment of damages and distribution of loss among the victims, however innocent, of a fallen market. Their insistence on an unavailing trade custom was in itself an indication of the weakness of their legal position which on demand they were unable to fortify by a single authority, English or Indian. The rules of law would in fact have apppeared to me to be perfectly well established and not to have admitted of doubt, had it not been for the contrary view of my learned brother. The right to rescind was established by the case of Hochster v. Dela Tour (1) and has been embodied in section 39 of the Indian Contract Act. The right to damages on rescission was laid down in Frost v. Knight (2) in these words: "such damages as would have arisen from the non-performance of the contract at the appointed time." That is merely an application of the ordinary rule in case of breach of contract laid down in Brown v. Muller (3). The same rule was also expressly stated in Roper v. Johnson (4) in these words: "Although the plaintiff may treat the refusal of the defendant to accept or to deliver the goods before the day for performance as a breach, it by no means follows that the damages are to be the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day of the breach. It appears to me.....that the election to take advantage of the repudiation of the contract goes only to the question of breach, and not to the question of damages; and that when you come to estimate the damages, it must be by the difference between the contract price and the market price at the day or days appointed for performance, and not at the time of breach." These are the decisions underlying the rules as to damages laid down in section 73, Illustrations (a) and (o), and section 75 of the Indian Contract Act and followed in the case of Cooverjee v. Rajendra Nath (5). For these reasons it appears to me that the damages have correctly been assessed by the learned Judicial Commissioner on the difference between the contract rates and the actual market rates at the dates for performance of those contracts. It only remains to add that these general rules do not appear to be affected by anything contained in the Provincial Insolvency Act. There can lastly, in my opinion, be no question but that the evidence for determining those actual rates should not be limited to the uncertain forecast, which in these cases proved entirely erroneous, made by merchants at the dates of rescission of what would probably be the actual rates, but should include the best evidence available of those actual rates at the time of trial, in accordance with the fundamental principles of evidence that the best evidence only shall be accepted by the Court.

The decisions of the learned Judicial Commissioner should, therefore, in my opinion, be affirmed and these appeals dismissed without order as to costs, as the main question was not contested by the nominal respondents in this Court.

BY THE COURT.—As we differ in opinion as to the decision in these appeals, the orders of the lower Court are affirmed under section 9B, clause 2, of the Sind Courts Act, all parties paying their own costs of these appeals, subject to any application that the parties may make under the proviso to that section to the Judicial Commissioner.

A kabuliat never given effect to does not affect the rights and liabilities otherwise existing with regard to the land mentioned in it.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Meerut, dated 1st September 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Meerut, dated 28th March 1913.

Mr. Mohammad Haidar Hussain, for the Appellant.

Babu Mangal Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M. (March 3rd, 1914).—Appellant in this case, according to the evidence, held the land in question for a period of 13 years. It is claimed by the respondents that he has not got occupancy rights, because he was from 1309 to 1315 holding under a kabuliat for seven years executed by his brother, Hargyan. The names of both brothers before the execution of the kabuliat were entered in the papers.

The first question for decision is whether the present appellant is bound by the kabuliat executed by his brother. A similar question was decided by Messrs. Tweedy and Reynolds in a judgment of which there is a copy on the file. The finding was that where it is not shown that the tenure had its origin in the kabuliat, it could not be considered that the brother of the person who executed the kabuliat was bound by it.

In the present case, moreover, there are facts not noticed by the Commissioner which very greatly support the claim of the appellant. The area now in suit is 38 bighas 12 biswas rented at Rs. 197. The kabuliat was for an area of 63 bighas 1 biswa at a rent of Rs. 410. There has not been produced in Court any vestige of evidence to show that the two brothers ever held the 63 bighas entered in the kabuliat or paid the rent mentioned in it.

It is in these circumstances clearly impossible to assume that the appellant ever held under the kabuliat in question, or that the kabuliat was in fact given effect to.

I would allow this appeal, cancel the order of the Commissioner and restore that of the Court of first instance, with costs on respondents throughout.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I cannot find the copy alluded to of a judgment by Mr. Reynolds and myself and I cannot agree with the opinion which it is said to contain, that when the tenure has not its origin in the kabuliat the brother of the person who executed is not bound by it.

It seems to me to be sound law and common sense that when one member of a family takes a written lease from the zemindar in which he alone is entered as a tenant and is alone responsible for the rent, one of two things must happen. The other members of the family are not tenants at all during the period of the lease or they are governed by its terms. There is no third course possible. As a seven years' registered lease is excluded from the 12 years necessary to acquire a right of occupancy, this lease, if acted on, is fatal not only to any claim which Hargyan might make but to his brother's claim also.

But it is argued that the kabuliat was never acted on and I agree that there is ample evidence of this in the difference of area and the difference of rent. Under these circumstances it must be presumed that the tenancy of Marey, which undoubtedly existed in 1308, continued right on.

I agree to the proposed order.

Hindu Law—Adoption, validity of—Question involved in suit to recover immoveable property not raised—Res judicata—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), Sch. II, Art. 129.

Where in a suit instituted against a widow to recover possession of immoveable property, a ground of defence as to the invalidity of an adoption was open to her but was not raised, she must be held to have raised it and the question as to adoption deemed to be res judicata in any subsequent suit between the reversioners to her husband's estate and the alienees.

Under the Limitation Act of 1871 it was imperative that a suit for the recovery of immoveable property which involved the displacement of an adoption should be filed within 12 years from the date of the adoption or at the option of the plaintiff, from the death of the adoptive father.

Where, therefore, a suit to set aside an adoption open to a widow is not brought within the period of limitation, a reversioner or any other member interested to dispute the validity of the adoption cannot file a suit after the period of limitation is over, as the right of suit cannot be revived.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for the recovery of the properties which belonged to his maternal grandfather, one Gopala Row. Plaintiff's case is that Gopala Row and Srinivasa Row were two undivided brothers; that Srinivasa Row having died leaving behind him a widow named Kapila Bai, Gopala Row became solely entitled to the property and he (Gopala Row) died leaving his widow Kaveri Bai and a daughter Ammani Bai; that Ammani Bai predeceased her mother and that Kaveri Bai died in 1896. The plaintiff claims to be entitled to the properties left by Gopala Row. He says the properties in Schedules A and B attached to the plaint were left by Gopala Row at his death. The properties in Schedule C are said to have been purchased by his widow, Kaveri Bai. Some of the properties are now in the possession of certain alienees and the plaintiff says that these alienations are not binding on him. The Subordinate Judge held that the properties in Schedule B never belonged to Gopala Row, and as to the properties in Schedules A and C the plaintiff's claim is barred. The plaintiff appeals.

We have no hesitation in holding that it has not been proved that the properties in Schedule B ever belonged to Gopala Row or that they were inherited by Kaveri Bai,

The properties are now in the possession of defendants Nos. 21 and 22. Their ancestors, Srinivasa Row and Rama Row, acquired these properties by purchase from Chenga Bai and Appaji Row. In one of their title-deeds, Exhibit XVII, it is recited that Chenga Bai got the property by partition. That must have been a partition between her husband and his brothers. Appaji Row is one of those brothers. These recitals show that the plaintiff's case that Chenga Bai must have got the property for her maintenance by an arrangement with Kaveri Bai is not true. We accordingly confirm the Subordinate Judge's finding and dismiss the appeal so far as the properties in Schedule B are concerned.

We will next consider whether the plaintiff has proved his title to the property in Schedule C. These properties did not belong to Gopala Row at the time of his death. The Subordinate Judge finds, and we see no reason not to accept that finding, that they were purchased by Raghunatha Row, who was adopted by Kapila Bai after Srinivasa Row's death, mainly out of the ancestral funds in his hands. The plaintiff's case is that the adoption of Raghunatha Row by Kapila Bai is invalid, because the property had already vested in Gopala Row and after him in his widow Kaveri Bai, and that Kapila Bai, the widow of Srinivasa Row, was, therefore, not entitled to make any adoption to her husband, Srinivasa Row, according to the decision in Adivi Suryaprakasa Row v. Nidamarty Gangaraju (1). Assuming that the adoption of Raghunatha Row is invalid in law, the Subordinate Judge holds that that question is now res judicata and it is not open to the plaintiff to deny the validity of that adoption. The facts on which that plea has to be decided are briefly these. In 1870 Raghunatha Row entered into an arrangement with Kaveri Bai by which he reserved a moiety, that is, the lands in Schedule C for himself and he gave the other moiety of the lands to Kaveri Bai. After his death his natural son, Lakshmana Row, brought Original Suit No. 48 of 1893 for the recovery of the moiety, that is the lands in Schedule C which Raghunatha Row had reserved for himself and which he had entrusted to Kaveri Bai. In that case the question was raised, whether Raghunatha Row's adoption is true and whether it is invalid. It was found by the Subordinate Judge that the adoption was true in fact; that all the relations including Kaveri Bai treated him all along as a validly adopted son of Srinivasa Row and Kapila Bai; that Raghunatha Row had lost all his rights in his natural family; that he took no share in his natural father's property; and that when his natural father and mother died he took no part in the funeral ceremonies, but performed the sradhas only of his adoptive father, and that on his own death the members of his natural family did not perform his funeral ceremonies. He held that the grounds alleged for setting aside the adoption were not good in law and upheld the adoption. He further held that Kaveri Bai appeared to be also estopped by her conduct from questioning the validity of such adoption. He accordingly directed the defendants including Kaveri Bai, to surrender possession of the properties to Lakshmana Row. The question is whether the plaintiff is barred by these proceedings from claiming the C Schedule properties. It is contended that there is no bar, because Kaveri Bai was held estopped on account of her conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption, and, therefore, it cannot be said that she represented the estate of Gopala Row, that is to say, the reversioners who might become entitled to the property. It will be observed from the above extract that the estoppel was only an additional ground for the Judge's decision. That she, as the widow in possession of the estate, was competent to represent it there is no doubt. If she had precluded herself from raising the contentions which are now put forward on behalf of the plaintiff, then it might be that the plaintiff's claim would not be barred. But she raised all the contentions which she thought necessary to put forward, and it was open to her to have raised the questions which are now put forward by the plaintiff in order to impeach the validity of the adoption. It is also to be observed that the reasons given for the estoppel were reasons applicable not only to Kaveri Bai but also to all the members of the family who treated Raghunatha Row as a member of their family.

It is next contended that the plaintiff is in any event entitled to the properties in A Schedule. These properties were in the possession of Kaveri Bai. She alienated them to one Subramanian Chetti in February 1855. Raghunatha Row, the adopted son, brought a suit, Original Suit No. 75 of 1866, for the recovery of the property from the alienee. He received Rs. 5,000 in satisfaction of his claim and allowed the suit to be dismissed. It is partly with the money so received and partly with other money which belonged to the estate that Raghunatha Row, according to the Subordinate Judge, purchased the properties in Schedule C. It is contended before us that as the plaintiff keeps possession of a moiety of the properties in Schedule C, it is not open to him to deny the right of those who paid that money to uphold the alienation of the properties in Schedule A. In answer it is contended by the appellant's Pleader that this point was not raised in the lower Court and though C Schedule property is now found to have been purchased in Raghunatha Row's name, there was no issue raised on the question as to the source of the purchase-money. This, no doubt, is so. I accordingly proceed to consider the ground on which the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

It has been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri (2) and in Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (3), as explained by the Full Bench of this Court in Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal (4), that under the Limitation Act of 1871 it was imperative that a suit for recovery of immoveable property which involved the displacing of an adoption should be filed within twelve years from the date of adoption, or, at the option of the plaintiff, from the death of the adoptive father. In this case that period expired in 1867 and according to the Act of 1871 the suit should have been filed before 1873. The right of the widow or the plaintiff's mother, Ammani Bai, to set aside the adoption, therefore, became barred in 1873 and taking into consideration the facts found, that Raghunatha Row was treated as a member of the family by all the members thereof, it seems to be clear that after 1873 it was not open to the widow, or reversioners or any other member interested to dispute the validity of the adoption.

It is unnecessary in this view to consider what the result would be if the case was governed by the Limitation Act of 1877 or if Raghunatha Row had not, in fact, been adopted. For the plaintiff to succeed it is necessary for him to displace Raghunatha Row's adoption and the ruling of the Privy Council as explained by the Full Bench in Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal (4) is, therefore, applicable. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff's claim to this property also is barred by limitation.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—On the question of limitation in respect of the A Schedule properities, while agreeing that plaintiff's claim is time-barred, I think that it is unnecessary to consider this case in the light of the Articles of the Limitation Act of 1871, seeing that the right of the plaintiff in this suit and his predecessors-in-title had been already extinguished before that Act came into force in 1873.

Of the two Privy Council decisions referred to by the Subordinate Judge in support of his finding on the 15th issue, Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri (2) and Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (3), in the Jagadamba's case (2) Act IX of 1871 was the Act to be considered, because as stated at page 317 that was the Limitation Act in force in 1873 and 1874 when the suits concerned in that case were commenced; and in the latter it was observed at page 495 that the Limitation Act of 1871 applied to the time when the period of limitation was running.

Here the period of 12 years from the date of adoption which was in 1855, expired in 1867.

The Act in force in 1867 was Act XIV of 1859, which allowed six years from the date of adoption for suits to declare an adoption invalid and 12 years under clause 12 of section 1 from the date of adoption in suits for the recovery of immoveable property which involved the validity of an adoption. Vide Ratnamasari v. Akilandammal (4); Srinath Gangopadhya v. Mahesh Chandra Roy (5).

If in 1867 the period of limitation expired, it becomes unnecessary to consider the effect of the later Acts for limitation of suits, as the right of suit could not be revived by them. Vide Appasami Odayar v. Subramanya Odayar (6).

On all other points and on the general result of this appeal, I agree with my learned brother.

Jurisdiction, Ecclesiastical and Civil, in Lower Burma—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 9— Kathanabaing.

The Civil Courts in Lower Burma have jurisdiction to entertain and try suits of Ecclesiastical nature.

The Government has recognised the authority of kathanabaing in Upper Burma, but not in Lower Burma.

Mr. May Oung, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ng Po Han, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is one between two Burman Buddhist priests. The appellant sued the respondent to recover possession of certain lands of which he has been in possession for a considerable number of years and for possession of certain religious manuscripts. The lands appear to be lands that have been occupied by members of the Buddhist priesthood for a long period of years, and the points at issue between the parties appear to involve points of Burmese Buddhist Ecclesiastical Law. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that Civil Courts should abstain from deciding points which fall within the sphere of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction. In appeal it is urged that there are no Ecclesiastical Courts in Lower Burma and that the case is triable by a Civil Court. In Upper Burma it has been ruled that the Civil Courts are bound by the decisions of the Buddhist Ecclesiastical Authorities in matters within their competence and that they should also abstain from deciding points which fall within the sphere of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. It has been brought to our notice that Government has recognised the authority of the Taung Win Sayadaw as kathanabaing of Upper Burma (Burma Gazette, General Deparment, Notification No. 255 of the 22nd October 1903, page 715); but Government has not recognised the authority of the kathanabaing in Lower Burma as appears from the record of the proceedings of the Legislative Council on the 6th April last (Burma Gazette, Part III, pages 72, 73). There are, therefore, no Ecclesiastical Authorities in Lower Burma. Section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that the Courts shall, subject to the provisions herein contained, have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognisance is either expressly or impliedly barred. This is a suit of a civil nature. It is a claim to certain lands and manuscripts.

The Civil Courts, in our opinion, clearly have jurisdiction to decide the suit and should do so. The appeal is allowed with costs and the decree of the District Court is reversed. The District Court will proceed to decide the suit on its merits, and the costs in that Court will follow the final result. The appellant will receive a certificate under section 13 of the Court Fees Act authorising him to receive back from the Collector the full amount of fee paid on the memorandum of appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Muhammadan Law—Dower fixed at time of marriage—Dispute as to amount fixed—Wife unable to prove amount asserted by her—Decree according to admission of husband—Customary dower, when allowed—Verbal contract of dower—Evidence—Procedure.

Where the wife alleges that her dower was fixed at the time of marriage, but she cannot prove the amount asserted by her, the Court is bound to pass a decree for the sum admitted by the defendant, inasmuch as the wife is entitled to the customary dower only in cases where admittedly no dower was specified at the time of the marriage.

The rules of procedure and evidence laid down by the Muhammadan Law to be followed in deciding disputes as to dower between the husband and the wife which are at variance with the Statute Law on the subject, cannot be followed by Courts in British India.

A verbal contract for a dower of a large amount can be admitted only if proved by most clear and satisfactory evidence.

Shah Nujmooddeen Ahmed v. Beebee Hosseinee, 4 W. R. 110, referred to.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Attock, dated the 28th February 1912.

Mr. Fasal-i-Hussain, for the Appellant.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Musammat Karam Begam, who is respondent in this Court against her husband, Fazl Khan, appellant, for recovery of her prompt dower. The allegations in the plaint are that the plaintiff's dower was fixed at the time of the marriage, that the amount which the defendant agreed to pay was Rs. 10,000 and 100 gold mohurs, being of the value of Rs. 25 each, that half of this amount was prompt dower and that the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to Rs. 6,250. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the dower was fixed at Rs. 100 and one gold mohur of the value of Rs. 18 and that the prompt dower was, therefore, Rs. 59, which the defendant was willing to deposit in Court. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the amount mentioned in the plaint had been fixed as plaintiff's dower and, after inquiry by a Commissioner into the amount of mehr-ul-misl, or customary dower, fixed it at Rs. 3,000 and consequently passed a decree for Rs. 1,500 on account of prompt dower.

The defendant has preferred a first appeal from this decree and the point pressed before us is that the District Judge had, on the pleadings, no authority to go into the question of customary dower.

Before dealing with this contention, it is necessary to decide the question raised by Mr. Gobind Das for the respondent in support of the decree of the lower Court that the evidence on the record proves that the amount stated in the plaint was agreed upon at the time of the marriage. After giving our careful consideration to the arguments of the learned Pleader, we have no hesitation in concurring with the District Judge that the plaintiff's allegation has not been established. There is no document in support of it, and the oral evidence is meagre and interested and it is contradicted by the witnesses examined by the Commissioner.

A verbal contract for a dower of a large sum can be admitted only if proved by most clear and satisfactory evidence [Shah Nujmooddeen Ahmed v. Beebee Hosseinee (1)], and evidence of this character is wholly wanting in the present case. On the material before us, we are unable to come to a finding in favour of the plaintiff, and must accept the view of the District Judge that the amount of dower as stated by the plaintiff has not been proved.

We now come to the real point in the case, viz., on the allegations in the plaint is the Court authorized to determine the amount of mehr-ul-misl and pass a decree for the sum so determined? As stated already, the plaintiff clearly alleged in the plaint, and this allegation was repeated in the statement of the plaintiff's agent before the settlement of issues, that the dower had been fixed, and on this point the defendant was at one with the plaintiff. Both the parties were agreed that this was a case of fixed dower and no issue, therefore, arose as to whether there was an express contract between the parties specifying some dower. The dispute was confined to the amount said to have been fixed, each party stating its own figure.

Now, Muhammaden Law lays down the rule that, if no dower is specified at the time of the marriage, the wife is entitled to a proper dower, i.e., to an amount to be fixed by the Court after taking evidence as to what has usually been settled on other female members of the wife's father's family. Can we in this case say that no dower was specified? We think not. When it is admitted that the dower was stipulated for but the amount alleged by the plaintiff has not been proved, then it is clearly not a case in which no dower was specified.

The only authority which has a direct bearing upon the point before us is a judgment of the Calcutta High Court reported as Shah Nujmoodeen Ahmed v. Beebee Hosseinee (1). In that case, the plaintiff failed to prove her allegation that the dower promised by the husband was Rs. 65,000, and the High Court, though being of opinion that the allegation of the defendant that the amount was fixed at Rs. 1,000 was not established, passed a decree for that sum simply because it was admitted by the defendant. As regards the point whether the Court can pass a decree for customary dower, the learned Judges observed that, as the case was put on a distinct contract, the Court was right in trying it on that issue only, and they did not therefore, determine the amount to which the plaintiff might have been entitled with reference to the customary dower. Mr. Gobind Das has not been able to show any reason why that judgment, which in our opinion contains a correct exposition of the law, should not be followed. He has referred us to certain passages in the Hidaya, which lay down rules of procedure and evidence to be followed in deciding disputes as to dower between the husband and the wife. But these rules, which are at variance with the Statute Law on the subject, cannot, it is manifest, be followed by Courts in British India.

The present case is undoubtedly based upon a contract entered into between the husband and the wife, but the term which deals with the amount of dower has not been proved. A finding against the plaintiff as to her allegation about the sum stipulated to be paid does not lead to the conclusion that no contract of dower was entered into or that no sum was fixed. The contract is there, and in the event of the plaintiff not proving the amount asserted by her the Court must, according to the rules of procedure, pass a decree for the sum admitted by the defendant. In this view of the law, it appears to us that the discussion as to customary dower, which could only be allowed if there were no express contract, is beside the point and we, therefore, consider it unnecessary to deal with it.

For the aforesaid reasons, we accept the appeal of the defendant and, in modification of the decree of the District Judge, we pass a decree for Rs. 59, the sum amditted by the defendant. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we direct that the parties bear their own costs in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 37—Taluk in existence from before Permanent Settlement, division of—Portion of such taluk transferred—Protection of such portion.

When a portion of a taluk existing from before the Permanent Settlement is transferred and it is subsequently held in proportionate jama under a name different from the original taluk, but the subsequent transfer and descent thereof can be traced from the original taluk, the portion so transferred is also protected under section 37 of Act XI of 1859.

What the effect of the division of a taluk is must depend upon the intention of the parties.

Second appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge of Noakhali, dated 24th May 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, at Feni, dated 28th June 1909.

Babus Dhirendra Lal Kastagir and Probodh Kumar Das, for the Appellants.

Babus Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JANGLI MAL v. PIONEER FLOUR MILLS.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession brought by an auction-purchaser at a revenue sale. It is now admitted that the land which is the subject of the suit formerly appertained to Taluk Rahmat Rafi, which was in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement. From Exhibit B it appears that in the year 1222 B. S. this taluk was divided into two. A new taluk called Radha Benode was created and the other portion of the taluk was still called Rahmt Rafi. The rent of the old taluk was proportionately assessed on these two taluks. The land in this suit appertains to the portion that was allotted to Taluk Radha Benode. The Court of first instance held that this taluk existed from the time of the Permanent Settlement and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit for khas possession, on the ground that the defendants were protected by the provisions of section 37 of Act XI of 1859. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the Taluk Radha Benode must be held not to have been in existence before the division of the old taluk in 1222, and as it was not in existence from the time of the Permanent Settlement the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, decreed the suit.

On behalf of the appellants the case of Nobendra Kishore Roy v. Durga Charan Chowdhury (1) has been cited. The facts of that case closely resemble the facts of the present case. It was there held that when a portion of a taluk existing from before the Permanent Settlement was transferred and the said portion was subsequently held in proportionate jama under a name different from the original taluk, but the subsequent transfer and descent thereof can be traced from the original taluk, the portion so transferred is also protected under section 37 of Act XI of 1859. That ruling, in our opinion, is binding on us as regards the decision of the present case.

For the respondents it is contended that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal. We are unable to accept this contention. As has been pointed out in the case of Mulluk Chand Das v Satish Chandra Das (2) what the effect of the division of a taluk is must depend upon the intention of the parties. Had the learned Subordinate Judge come to a finding that the intention of the parties in 1222 was that the division of the old taluk changed the incidents of the tenure we should be bound by such a finding, But as he has come to no finding as to the intention of the parties we are not unable in second appeal to form our own conclusion, and the conclusion we arrive at is that judging from the circumstances of the case there was no intention to alter the condition of the tenure.

We accordingly decree this appeal and reverse the finding and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Court of first instance.

The appellants are entitled to their costs in all Courts.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 3, 6 (e), 130—Breach of contract—Damages—Insolvent estate, transferee from purchaser of, right of, to sue for damages—Transfer of right to sue—Actionable claim.

A transferee from the purchaser of rights in an insolvent estate from the Receiver, cannot enforce a claim for damages on an unfulfilled contract in favour of the insolvent.

A right to sue for damages for breach of contract is not an actionable claim and cannot be transferred.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 7th February 1911.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, R. B., for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Shiv Narain and Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple. In August 1907 the defendant Company of Lahore contracted for delivery of various large consignments of flour to a Delhi merchant, named Shambhu Nath,

There were some deliveries and the contract then fell through. The defendant's explanation, not so far accepted by the plaintiff, is that the contract required delivery at Lahore within fifteen days, and that Shambhu Nath was bound to make all arrangements for freight to Delhi; that he failed to make such arrangements and consequently did not take delivery; and that the defendant ceased, therefore, to be liable for Shambhu Nath's losses, if any, through non-delivery in time.

Shambhu Nath took no action for recovery of damages on breach of contract, and became insolvent in 1909. In August 1910 the Receiver of the insolvent's estate at Delhi sold Shambhu Nath's rights under the contract to one Hardwari Lal for Rs. 1,000, and he re-sold immediately to the present plaintiff for the same sum filing the present speculative suit for damages, about Rs. 12,000, shortly afterwards.

The District Judge has dismissed the suit, finding that it did not lie. He referred to various rulings, but not to the one which is exactly in point, contained in Abu Mahomed v. Satish Chandra Chunder (1). Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant is unable to dispute the applicability of the ruling now quoted, and has, therefore, confined his argument to an attempt to show that the law has not been there laid down correctly so far as Indian Courts are concerned.

The circumstances of the Calcutta case are precisely similar, in that the plaintiff there, as here, was a transferee from the purchaser of rights in an insolvent estate from the Official Assignee of Bombay through an intermediate purchaser and was seeking to enforce a claim for damages on an unfulfilled contract. The learned Judges discussed the matter with reference to the terms of sections 3, 6 (e), and 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, and though this Act is not in force in the Punjab, we consider that we should follow its provisions in a case like the present not otherwise specifically covered by law.

Put shortly, plaintiff's difficulty is that his suit does not embrace an "actionable claim" to debt as defined in section 3 of the Act, inasmuch as by section 6 (e) a mere right to sue cannot be transferred. Section 130 takes the matter no further, as it merely prescribes the procedure by which transfer of an actionable claim shall be effected, without fresh definition of the crucial words "actionable claim." In every case of the kind it has, therefore, to be determined whether the claim is actionable or not. We have no hesitation in saying that, in the absence of other authority, we should follow the learned Judges of Calcutta, and that we must, therefore, hold the present claim to be not actionable, because it is expressly prohibited by section 6 (e).

We are not impressed by Counsel's argument by analogy from the provision of the Insolvency Act constituting a Receiver in insolvency an assignee with right to sue. The law there gives statutory permission to the Receiver by section 120 (d) of the Insolvency Act, with an express limitation that even he can only sue as assignee with leave of the Court. The analogy, such as it may be, cannot hold good in the case of the present plaintiff.

We observe further that the present case is even stronger than that discussed in the Calcutta ruling, as here there has been delay of over three years before instituting the suit for damages. That, however, touches plaintiff's case on the merits, and the point need not be discussed in view of our finding that he has no right to sue at all.

The plaintiff's appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs to the defendant-respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

NATESA MOOPPAN v. RAMACHANDRA IYER.

A promissory note obtained by a Pleader from a client in respect of out-fees disbursed by him is invalid, if not filed in Court under section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879, but that does not estop the Pleader from obtaining a decree for the sums actually spent by him Krishnasami v Kesava, 14 M 68, Anantayya v. Padmayya, 16 M 278; 2 M. L J. 247, followed.

A promissory note, even though it cannot be sued upon on account of not having been filed in Court, may still operate as an acknowledgment of liability and the dismissal of a suit on the note does not bar a fresh suit on the original cause of action, but interest at the rate specified in the note cannot be recovered.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Munsif of Tanjore, in Small Cause Suit No. 1900 of 1912.

Mr. V. Rathnasamanadhan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant is the petitioner. The plaintiff, who is a Vakil practising in Tanjore, sued to recover Rs. 136 with costs and further interest alleged to be due on a promissory note dated 28th July 1909 for Rs. 100 executed by the defendant in his favour. The defendant, while admitting execution, pleaded that there was no consideration for the promissory note, that it was obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and that the note is void as the plaintiff did not file it in Court as required by section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. It was also alleged that the suit was barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, as the plaintiff had obtained another promissory note in respect of fees due to him and had not included this claim in the suit (Original Suit No. 351 of 1912) filed on that promissory-note. The District Munsif found against the defendant and passed a decree for the amount. There is no evidence to show that the promissory note was either without consideration or was executed owing to the exercise of undue influence. The defendant examined himself and two witnesses. His first witness, who is plaintiff's gumashta, states that the plaintiff had paid Rs. 60 which was payable b the defendant to the Commissioner an that the promissory note was executed in respect of that sum and also of other sundry items due to the plaintiff. The defendant, who examined himself as his second witness, says that the plaintiff was paying batta, out-fees and all charges in connection with the suit which he (defendant) filed and in which he had engaged the services of the plaintiff. He states that the plaintiff told him that Commission fees had to be paid and that he executed the note at plaintiff's request. Defendant's third witness says nothing about the promissory note. The plaintiff deposes that Exhibit A was executed in consideration of Rs. 60 paid by him as Commissioner's fees, that out-fees to the extent of Rs. 15 or 20 had been spent by him in respect of batta, etc., and that the defendant had also borrowed from him Rs. 15 or 20 in cash. There is, therefore, ample evidence to show that the promissory note was executed for consideration, and I agree with the District Munsif in holding that the promissory note was executed by the defendant to secure moneys actually due by him to the plaintiff.

It has been argued by the Counsel for the petitioner that plaintiff has not produced any accounts and that consequently his case ought to be disbelieved. I cannot help remarking that the plaintiff ought to have kept proper accounts and that professional gentlemen who do not keep accounts lay themselves open to a great deal of misconception and suspicion, however honest they may be: but in the present case the defendant admits that the plaintiff was paying out-fees payable by him. His statement that the note was executed by the exercise of undue influence and without consideration is false and, under these circumstances, I do not think that the fact that the plaintiff did not keep proper accounts exonerates the defendant from liability to pay the debt actually due.

The next question is as regards the validity of the promissory note, having regard to section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. It has been held in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar (1) that a promissory note obtained by a Pleader in respect of out-fees disbursed by him fell within section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, as being an agreement respecting the amount of payment for charges incurred or disbursements made by the Pleader in respect of the suit in which he had been retained, and that the note was invalid if it was not filed in Court. In the present case it is admitted that the note was not filed in Court and, therefore, the note cannot be sued on. This, however, would not deter the plaintiff from getting a decree in respect of the sums actually spent by him, and in the case above cited a decree was passed for the amount so spent notwithstanding the fact that the promissory note was invalid. In Krishnasami v. Kesava (2) it was held that the fact that the promissory note which was sued upon was invalid owing to its not having been filed in Court as required by the Legal Practitioners Act, did not prevent the Court from decreeing the sum which was reasonably due for fees. A similar view was taken in Anantayya v. Padmayya (3).

The District Munsif found on the evidence that the sum of Rs. 100 claimed by the plaintiff was actually due by the defendant, and I do not think he erred in passing a decree for the amount. It is argued that the claim to recover moneys alloged to be due would be barred by limitation, as the suit on the promissory note was filed on the last day allowed by the law of limitation. The plea of limitation was not raised in the lower Court and in the present case it involves a mixed question of law and fact, as the dates when the payments for out-fees were made do not appear. The question will also arise as to when the proceedings in the suit in which plaintiff was engaged as a Vakil terminated.

There is nothing to prevent the promissory note from operating as an acknowledgment of liability, even though it may not be sued upon owing to its not having been filed in Court as required by the Legal Practitioners Act.

I do not see how it can be said that the present suit is barred by rule 2, Order II, of the Civil Procedure Code. The cause of action in this suit is different from the cause of action in the previous suit and the plaintiff was not bound to join both causes of action in one suit.

(2) 14 M. 63.
(3) 16 M. 278; 2 M. L. J. 247.

I am, however, of opinion that the District Munsif erred in allowing interest at the rate stipulated in the promissory note as the note was not enforceable. There was no contract to pay interest apart from the note and plaintiff has not proved notice in writing so as to bring the case within the Interest Act.

I modify the decree of the lower Court by passing a decree for Rs. 100 with interest from date of decree at 6 per cent. and proportionate costs throughout.

Petition partly allowed;
Decree modified.

JUDGMENT.—Mansab Ali was the owner of an eight-pies share in Nasir Kadauri. He died in 1891, leaving a widow Musammat Rasulan, two sons Babar Ali and Subhani and a daughter Musammat Hamidan.

IMAM UDDIN v. MUMTAZ UNNISA.

On his death mutation of names was effected in respect of a five-pies share in favour of Babar Ali and Subhani and of the remaining three-pies share in favour of Musammat Rasulan. Babar Ali and Subhani were minors and Musammat Rasulan was managing the property on their behalf. Musammat Rasulan had a distant cousin Himayat Ali, who, it is said, helped her in the management. At the last Settlement Himayat Ali got the three-pies share standing in the name of Musammat Rasulan transferred to his name. Subhani attained majority in September 1908 and sold a five-and-half-pies share in the said property to the plaintiff-appellant on the 6th May 1909. Himayat Ali meanwhile died and was succeeded by his widow, who is the defendant-respondent. The present suit was filed by the assignee of Subhani for possession of the three-pies share standing in the name of Himayat Ali, on the allegation that Himayat Ali fraudulently got his name entered in respect of that share and that the claim was within time from the date when Subhani attained majority. The defence was that Himayat Ali was in possession of the said property by purchase from Mansab Ali.

Both the Courts below found that the alleged purchase was not proved. The Court of first instance held that the possession of Himayat Ali was not adverse to the rightful claimants, because he was acting as a manager for Musammat Rasulan, the guardian of the minors. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that the possession of Himayat Ali was adverse both to Musammat Rasulan and to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff. That finding cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The only question for consideration is whether under the circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act in extension of the period of limitation provided for such a suit.

In Rudra Kant Surma Sircar v. Nobo Kishore Surma Biswas (1), which was followed in Mahadev Ram Mistia Sutar v. Babi Chimnaji Sutar (2), it was held that an assignee is not entitled to the privilge conferred by section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act on minors. The privilege conferred by the section is personal, except in so far that, when the disability continues up to the death of the person entitled to the privilege, his legal representative may, under clause (3) of that section, institute a suit or make an application within the same period after his death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed. That privilege is not, however, transferable, and an assignee must file the suit either within the ordinary period provided for the suit, or on the date of the transfer if the transferor's right subsist till that date. The reason is that persons suffering from disability are exempted from the ordinary rules of limitation, because the law considers them incapable of judging properly when a suit should be filed or otherwise looking after their interests. A person who purchases or otherwise acquires their right to sue, either during the continuance of their disability, in execution of a decree against them, or from their guardians, or after the cessation of their disability, is capable of looking after the rights acquired and enforcing them within the ordinary period of limitation.

The transfer of the right of a person under disability to any property does not, as observed by Mitra, carry with it his rights, if any, to future exemption from the ordinary rule of limitation (Mitra on Limitation, Volume I, page 352). In Baluk Dayal Singh v. Basant Ram (3), Strachey, C. J., and Banerji, J., held that where a sale was effected by a minor in respect of a cause of action accruing during his minority in favour of a person who was sui juris, the latter was not entitled to claim exemption accorded to the minor but was subject to the ordinary rules of limitation. The above rule of law was referred to with approval by Chamier, A. J. C., in Matadin v. Ali Mirza (4). In Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar v. Siva Subramanya Pillai (5), Ayyar and Best, JJ., doubted the correctness of the decisions in Rudra Kant Surma Sircar v. Nobo Kishore Surma Biswas (1) and Mahomed Asrad Chowdhry v. Yakoob Ally (6), and observed that those decisions involved the apparent anomaly that a minor could not transfer his title to property, though at the date of transfer it was a subsisting interest so far as he was concerned. Adverting to this remark, Batty, J., said in Mahadeo Ram Mesta Sutar v. Babi Chimnaji Sutar (2):—"This last mentioned criticism, however, suggests the reflection that what the provision under discussion operates to discourage is the transfer by minors, not of property or title undisputedly in their possession, but only of choses in action, in respect of which it is quite intelligible the Legislature might be unwilling to provide any exceptional privilege. The difficulty which arises in such cases, as pointed out in Rudra Kant's case (1), may well be avoided by purchasers entering into a contract for purchase when the chose in action has been reduced into possession, instead of taking an absolute transfer of property which is not in the minor's possession. It is conceivable that the Legislature may have been unwilling to favour speculative purchases from minors of claims awaiting the result of litigation in cases where, but for the assignor's minority, those claims would have been annihilated or on the verge of annihilation by the efflux of time."

It is unnecessary, however, to go so far, for a title is subsisting on the date of the transfer and a suit is filed to enforce it on that very date; there is nothing which can deprive an assignee of what is a valid title on that date from enforcing it in his favour. Where the benefit of a privilege is claimed by an assignee for the period antecedent to the transfer in his favour, he does not claim it in his own right but only as an incident validating the transfer or as proof of the subsistence of the rights conveyed. To hold otherwise would be to deny to the person suffering from disability the right to transfer subsisting titles on attaining majority or through his guardian; and to extend the privilege beyound the date of the transfer would amount to allowing the alienee to sleep upon his rights with impunity so long as the alienor continues to be under legal disability and for three years thereafter.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Oudh Rent Act XXII of 1886), ss. 107G, 107H —Groves entered as "maorusi" in column "of tenants' groves"—Under-proprietary right, accrual of.

Section 107G or section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act applies to plots entered at the time of the First Regular Settlement as "maorusi" in the column of "tenants' groves", if the landlord fails to establish his right to resume them.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 23rd September 1913.

JUDGMENT.

TWEEDY, J. M. (January 30th, 1914).—The groves were entered as "maorusi" in 1864, and there is evidence that before the holders in 1864 there was one Gaya Din in possession. The groves were in Patti Bhup Singh, and I do not think (although the decree of the Civil Court of 1906 may give colour to the claim) that the original holders had proprietary rights in them. They were entered in the column of "tenants' groves", but assuming that proprietary rights do not exist we have the fact that the respondent did not prove his right to resume and that being the case, either section 107G or 107H applies. The Deputy Commissioner has, I think, rightly found that there is evidence that the plots were held rent-free for fifty years and by two successors to the original grantee and, therefore, section 107H will apply.

I would, therefore, decree the appeal with costs and restore the finding of the Deputy Commissioner.

Although a person who is not made a party in an application made under section 10 of the Guardians and Wards Act and to whom notice ought to have been issued under section 11 (a) (i) of the Act as a person interested in the result of the application, cannot, under section 47 (a) of the Act, file an appeal from the order passed on the application, yet he can file a petition for revision of that order under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Sections 13 and 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act are wide enough to cover an inquiry into any of the matters which can legitimately form the subject of opposition to the grant of a certificate of guardianship to a particular individual.

Application against the order of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated 28th October 1914.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Applicant.

Babus Bisheshwar Nath and Piarey Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Additional District Judge of Lucknow, appointing Baij Nath, the opposite party, a guardian of the person and property of Musammat Sahodra, a minor girl aged about thirteen or fourteen years. The application was originally put in as a petition of appeal, but as the applicant was no party to the order appealed from, it was treated by the learned Judicial Commissioner as a petition in revision, by his order dated the 11th November 1914.

The applicant claims to be the husband of Musammat Sahodra. It appears that Musammat Sahodra is possessed of moveable and immoveable property, valued at Rs. 35,000. Her parents died long ago. On the death of her step-mother, with whom she was living since the death of her parents, disputes arose between the maternal and paternal relations of the minor in regard to her custody and guardianship, culminating in certain criminal proceedings instituted by Baij Nath, the maternal uncle of the minor, against her paternal relations, which will be found reported in Baij Nath v. Emperor (1).

On the termination of the criminal proceedings, Baij Nath applied to the District Judge of Lucknow for his appointment as a guardian of the person and property of the minor. The girl was at that time in the custody of Jagan Nath, to whom she was made over by the trying Magistrate while the criminal proceedings were pending. Baij Nath did not mention the present applicant, Jhandeshur, among the near relations of the minor in his application under Act VIII of 1890, for his contention is that the minor was never married to him. He, however, gave in the last paragraph of his petition a brief history of the whole case, and stated that the paternal relations of the minor, with a view to usurp the property of the minor, were giving out that they had married her to Jhandeshur. The suggestion on behalf of Jhandeshur seems to be that the girl was married to him by her paternal relations after she left the custody of Baij Nath. The Court below issued no notice of the application to Jagan Nath, who had the custody of the girl, as required by section 11 of Act VIII of 1890, or to Jhandeshur who was described in the petition as claiming to be her husband. Jhandeshur had thus no opportunity of establishing the fact of his alleged marriage. The marital relation being disputed, we are not in a position to adjudge whether Jhandeshur is the proper person to be appointed a guardian of the person or property of the minor in preference to her maternal uncle, Baij Nath. Jhandeshur is himself a minor and is represented in this Court by his next friend, Manna Lal. For the purpose of determining guardianship, the disputed question of marriage requires to be tried in this case.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party contends that no application for revision of an order passed under section 7 of Act VIII of 1890 lies under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for an appeal lies from that order under section 47, clause (a), of the said Act. But sections 13 and 17 are wide enough to cover an inquiry into any of the matters which can legitimately form the subject of opposition to the grant of a certificate of guardianship to a particular individual, and any orders passed in regard to the appointment or refusal to appoint a person as a guardian in the course of such inquiry are either open to an appeal qua the persons to whom notices should have been sent or who had a right to offer opposition under section 47 (a) of the Act, or are open to revision qua such persons as may not be entitled to appeal under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the allegations made by the present applicant in regard to his marriage were true, he was certainly a person to whom a notice ought to have been issued under section 11, clause (a) (iv), of Act VIII of 1890, before a certificate was granted to the opposite party. The powers conferred by section 39 of the Act may not provide an adequate remedy to the applicant to have the matter re-opened by the Court which granted the certificate.

We, therefore, allow the application and, setting aside the order passed by the Court below, direct that the case be reinstated under its original number and disposed of after issuing notice to Jagan Nath and hearing him and the present applicant in the manner provided by law. No order is made as to the costs.

Application accepted.

THE MANAGER OF NANDIGAM ESTATE —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1884), s. 73—Mortgagee with possession, whether an intermediate landholder—Tenant's right to pay cess to him.

A mortgagee with possession is as much a landholder as any lessee and is intermediate between the ultimate landlord and his tenants within the meaning of section 73 of the Local Boards Act, and the tenants' right to pay him, recognised in that section, cannot be abrogated by a contract to which they were not parties.

Section 73 in its amended form confers on the tenant a right to pay the cess to the intermediate landholder, irrespective of the question whether the intermediate landholder is bound to reimburse the landlord or not.

Per Tyabji, J.—The question whether if the mortgagee became entitled to collect half of the cess in his capacity as intermediate landholder he was at liberty to retain it himself or was bound to pay it or account for it to the mortgagor, is not relevant to the rights and liabilities existing between the landholder and the tenant.

The notion of transfer of property is not an ingredient in the notion of an intermediate landholder whose right to collect the cess from the tenant is not dependent on his paying to his landlord; that might form the subject of an express or implied contract.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The appellants are defendants, tenants of an estate of which plaintiff is the Court of Wards Manager. The question is whether defendants are bound to pay plaintiff the portion of the road-cess for which they are responsible under section 73, Local Boards Act (V of 1884 amended by VI of 1900) or can and should pay a mortgagee under Exhibit I. The lower Appellate Court has held that they must pay plaintiff with reference to the terms of both Exhibit I and section 73.

The material portions of section 73 provide that (1) every landholder must pay the local tax (except that leviable as water-tax, which is not in question here) directly to Government, (2) the landholder can recover a specified portion of the tax from "any person, holding lands with or without right of occupancy as an intermediate landholder, or an under-tenure created, continued or recognised by the landholder", (3) the intermediate landholder can recover from the tenants occupying the land half the tax payable by the landholder in respect of that land.

Some attempt was made to argue that the mortgagee under Exhibit I was a transferee of the title to the mortgaged property and, therefore, became the landholder during the term of the mortgage. But this does not appear to have been put forward in the lower Courts. The property is part of a permanently settled zemindari, and it is not alleged that it has been separately registered. In Exhibit I moreover, the mortgagor, plaintiff's predecessor, expressly undertook to continue the payment of peshkush. In these circumstances attention may be confined to the plea that the mortgagee is an intermediate landholder.

The lower Appellate Court has first held generally that the mortgagee is not an intermediate landholder within the meaning of the Act, but has given no general reason for doing so. To us it is clear that a mortgagee with possession is as much a landholder as any lessee and that he is intermediate between plaintiff and his tenants. Our difficulty is caused by the further reference to an under-tenure. That expression is not defined in the Local Boards Act; nor, so far as we have been shown, is it part of the legal or revenue phraseology of this Presidency. It is argued, on the one hand, that an under-tenure involves the idea of a tenancy, a holding under a landlord for rent or service, and, therefore, cannot include a mortgagee with possession. On the other hand, it may be said that it involves only a holding and is not restricted to holdings of any particular description. And this is in accordance with the only other use of the word in India to which we have been referred, that in sections 3 and 5 Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), where a tenure is defined as the interest of a tenure-holder or under-tenure-holder, and a tenure holder as meaning primarily "a person who has acquired from a proprietor a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or establishing tenants on it." This definition is wide enough to cover the mortgagee in the present case, since under Exhibit I he was put in possession to collect rents and profits estimated at an amount which would extinguish the debt within the term fixed. Mortgagees in possession, equally with lessees, are entitled to recover rent by summary process: Vellayan Chetti v. Tiruvakone (1), and it is a further reason for adopting defendants' construction that in accordance with it the amendment to the Act in 1900 would afford a comprehensive remedy for the mischief against which that amendment would be supposed to have been directed, by protecting tenants against the landholder's separate demands for cesses in mortgaged, as well as leased, estate; for no reason has been suggested for the restriction of the protection afforded to the latter. So far then as argument can be based on the wording of section 73, the conclusion must be that the mortgagee is an intermediate landholder and defendants are entitled to pay him.

The learned District Judge next dealt with Exhibit I, laying stress on the absence of reference to payment of cess and the exclusion of the mortgagee's liability for taxes and holding that "assuming the mortgagee is an intermediate landholder within the meaning of section 73, the right to receive one half of the cess from the tenant is dependant on the liability of the landlord (or presumably the intermediate landholder) to pay it and his having paid the whole cess." But in construing Exhibit I, it is to be remembered that it is dated 1897, before any explicit liability for any part of the cess was placed on the intermediate landholder by Act VI of 1900 and before the tenant's right to pay him was recognised by Statute; and accordingly no clear recognition of that right is to be looked for in the document. One of its terms is no doubt that plaintiff's predecessor shall pay the peshkush to Government, and it is not contended that that does not cover the payment of cesses payable with it. But, if the landholder is liable directly to Government for cesses under Exhibit I, that is only what section 73 provides; and his being so cannot affect the right of the tenant to pay the intermediate landholder or the landlord's duty to recover from the latter referred to later in the section. There is further underlying this argument, and that based on Exhibits III, IV and VI to which reference will be made, the fallacy involved in the failure to recognise that section 73 in its amended form confers a right on the tenant. When it has been found that an intermediate landholder, such as the section contemplates, exists, that right cannot be affected by a contract, such as Exhibit I, between plaintiff's predecessor and a third party, the mortgagee; nor, created (as it is) unconditionally, can it depend on any payment having been made by the former to Government or by the latter to the former. It is accordingly immaterial whether plaintiff is entitled to be reimbursed by the mortgagee the sums which (it is not denied) he has paid Government or whether, as defendants contend, he is not entitled to reimbursement under the terms of Exhibit I.

At this point plaintiff's contention, that the change in the law effected by Act VI of 1900 cannot modify the relation between him, his mortgagee and defendants created by Exhibit I in 1897, calls for notice. It is of course the case that the rights of the parties to a contract are to be judged by their intention at its date and "by that law by which they intended or rather may justly be presumed to have bound themselves:" Lloyd v. Guibert (2). But this principle can affect only the parties. It cannot affect strangers to the contract, such as the defendants, or deprive them of statutory rights.

Plaintiff relies next on the fact that in Original Suit No. 54 of 1905 he was refused a decree against the mortgagee for the amount of the payments he had made to Government for cess for certain faslis prior to those now in question. It is not clear how this was relied on in the lower Appellate Court. But it is not alleged that this decision is res judicata between plaintiff and the present defendants, who were not parties to it. Here argument is based on the principle stated in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (3) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State (4) that judgments, whether in rem or in personam establishing a relation between the parties to them, are conclusive against third parties in the absence of fraud on the latter, and that principle must be accepted by this Court, though its validity was doubted in Peari Mohun Shaha v. Durlavi Dossya(5). There is, however, the fundamental objection to its application to the present case that it extends only to adjudications which would be res judicata between the parties to them, and that the judgment in Original Suit No. 54 was not of that description. It has not been printed, but the lower Appellate Court's account of it, on which we must depend, shows that the mortgagee, who succeeded, could not have appealed against the merely incidental finding on the point now in question and that finding dealt, not with defendant's statutory right, but with the existence of an assignment to the mortgagee of the right to collect from them.

The existence of such an assignment, as is evidenced by Exhibits III, IV, VI, is the next matter in issue. The last mentioned document can be dealt with shortly, because the lower Appellate Court found on the evidence that the circumstances in which it was prepared were not established. Exhibits III and IV are prior leases of the property, the unexpired term of the former having been transferred to the mortgagee under Exhibit I. The cess was, no doubt, specified in them as one of the items making up the total payable by the lessee, and it is argued by defendants that this total being the basis on which the amount of rent, Rs. 2,600, to be credited annually against the mortgage-debt is estimated in Exhibit I, the cess must be supposed to be included in that amount and appropriated to the mortgagee, plaintiff being, therefore, bound to pay Government from his own pocket. The lower Appellate Court was, I think, right in holding that this inference was not justified. For the cess is only Rs. 71-1-6 per annum, whilst the total rent under Exhibit III was Rs. 2,391-1-9 and the method by which the amount fixed in Exhibit I, Rs. 2,600, a round figure, was arrived at is beyond conjecture. Plaintiff, on the other hand, relies on the lower Appellate Court's statement that "the non-mention of the right to get the half share of the cess from the tenants in Exhibit I prima facie suggests that it was not included in the rights conferred on the mortgagee", as a finding of fact which cannot be contested in second appeal. But the very guarded language used by the learned District Judge regarding what is really the construction of a document precludes my taking this view; and on the merits I cannot find that anything is established in favour of either side.

In these circumstances the foundation of our decision must be our conclusions that the mortgagee is an intermediate landholder within the meaning of section 73 and that the tenants' right to pay him recognised in that section cannot be abrogated by a contract to which they were not parties. The appeal must be allowed, the decision of the lower Appellate Court being set aside and that of the Deputy Collector restored with costs in both Courts.

TYABJI, J.—The plaintiff seeks to recover land cess from the defendants, claiming that he is landholder and the defendants his tenants under section 73 of the Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884). The defence is that the defendants are not bound to pay the cess to the plaintiff, but to the person who has a usufructuary mortgage of the land under Exhibit I dated 3rd November 1897. The material portions of section 73 are as follows:—"Every landholder shall pay to the Collector ..the local tax .(provided that in all cases when a person holds as an intermediate landholder on an under-tenure recognised by a landholder it shall be lawful for the landholder to recover from the intermediate landholder the whole of the tax less one-half of the tax assessable on the amount of...quit rent payable by the intermediate landholder to the landholder) provided (also) that, in the case of lands occupied by tenants, it shall be lawful for the landholder, (or the intermediate landholder, as the case may be) to collect and recover from his tenant one-half of the amount payable by the landholder in respect of the land so occupied." The portions enclosed in ( ) were inserted by Madras Act VI of 1900 and came into force on 1st April 1901, about 3½ years after the execution of the mortgage, Exhibit I.

The scheme of the section is that though the whole of the tax is recoverable by the Collector from the landholder, yet half of the tax has to be borne ultimately by the tenant and the other half either entirely by the landholder or, where there is an intermediate landholder, partly by the landholder and partly by the intermediate landholder. To effect this division between the two latter, it is provided that wherever there is an intermediate landholder, the one-half tax payable by the tenants shall be recovered by the intermediate landholder and not by the landholder.

It is urged, in the first place, that the plaintiff has no locus standi because the mortgagee is the landholder: that, as stated in one of the grounds of second appeal, "Exhibit I is in effect an absolute transfer of property for a term." It is admitted, however, that the plaintiff was, prior to the mortgage, the landholder. There does not seem to have been such a complete transfer of the ownership as to pass to the mortgagee all the rights which the mortgagor had in the property. As pointed out by my learned brother (whose judgment I have had the benefit of reading) though the property is part of a permanently settled zemindari, it is not alleged to have been separately registered and the land tax is specifically payable by the mortgagor. The deed refers to itself as khanda gutta which literally means ("fixed rent"), "deed with possession" and also a "mortgage possession." This contention, therefore, cannot succeed. It does not seem to have been put forward in the lower Courts.

Therefore, whether the plaintiff can recover the half cess payable by the tenants depends solely upon whether the mortgagee answers to the description of an intermediate landholder. All the rest of the arguments addressed to us or contained in the judgments of the lower Courts centre round this one question.

The expression "intermediate landholder" appears from section 73 to connote (a) the holding of land (b) as an intermediate landholder (c) on an under-tenure (d) created, continued or recognised by a landholder (e) payability by him of kattubadi, jodi, poruppu (or) quit-rent, (f) that when he exists the tenant is his tenant. The last appears from the second proviso.

The expression "intermediate landholder" indicates prima facie a person who is (1) landlord of the tenants, (2) a tenant of the ultimate landholder. His dual capacity is recognised in the direct reference to under-tenure, and the assumption that rent is payable by him on the one hand, and by the fact that the tenants are referred to as his tenants on the other. It is also referred to in Nellayappa Pillian v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (6) for another purpose. It is true that if no rent is payable by the intermediate landholder to the landholder, there is no unsurmountable difficulty in working out the provisions of the sections. The intermediate landholder will, in that case, have to pay the whole tax to the landholder or, in other words, bear the whole tax himself.

With reference to the expression "under-tenure" I have been unable to come across its use or recognition in any English or American text books on the Law relating to Landlord and Tenant, or anywhere else except in the Bengal Tenancy Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1885). The definition contained in that Act has been cited by my learned brother; it consists of the equivalent of (d), (a) and (f) above, with reference to which there is no dispute before us: the expression "under-tenure" is evidently not used in section 73 in a sense cognate to "under-tenant", which would mean the holding of a tenant under a tenant, or an under-lease. Still inasmuch as in accordance with the strict terminology of English Law even a free-holder is a tenant holding a tenement on a tenancy, and "under-tenure" may with sufficient accuracy be taken to refer to a holding under that of the landholder.

Five other considerations have been suggested to us, three as having some relevance to the connotation of the term "intermediate landholder" and two as otherwise affecting the rights of the parties.

First, there is a remark of the District Judge on which a good portion of his judgment is based: "Assuming the mortgagee was an intermediate landholder within the meaning of section 73, the right to recover one half of the cess from the tenant is (he says) depended on the liability of the landlord to pay it and on his actually having paid the whole cess." This remark has reference to the nature and incidents of the rights concerned. It seems to me necessary to direct attention to the component parts of the three relationships on which the section is explicitly based, and then to annex rights to the holders of the respective relationships, considered with reference to the two relationships entitling a right to claim half the tax. In the case of the landholder the District Judge's remark may be correct: the first proviso refers to the tax paid by the landholder for payment, of which the section specifically provides. But the remark is obviously inapplicable to the intermediate landholder. His right does not depend on his liability to pay the tax. He does not in any case "actually pay the whole cess;" he pays the whole cess with a deduction calculated on the rent payable by him: and he pays not to the Collector, but to the landholder. The learned District Judge's remark, therefore, coupled as it is with the assumption that the mortgagee is an intermediate landholder, seems to me, with the greatest respect, to be unsupportable. The Act provides for the payment of the tax and its apportionment amongst the three persons by reference to their bearing certain relationships to the land and to each other. The payment of the tax to the Government is not laid down as an element in the definition or connotation of any of those relationships and the existence of the relationships is the only condition precedent to the right to recover half of the cess. The payment has been imposed on him who bears one of the relationships, viz., that of landholder; and the liability on the others is quantified by the amount paid or payble by the landholder. The recovery of half of the cess is not dependant on the landholder's liability to pay it in any sense, except that where no cess is payable the portion received from the tenant is half of nothing.

Secondly, in an earlier portion of his judgment the District Judge has remarked that "there is no transfer of property" (to the present mortgagee) "as in the case of an English mortgage or of a mortgage by conditional sale" and that, therefore, the mortgagee cannot, in the present case, be considered to be an intermediate landlord With great respect I am unable to follow this. Assuming that there is no such transfer of property as is referred to, I do not find that as an ingredient in the notion of an intermediate landlord.

Thirdly, it is suggested that if it is shown that as between the mortgagor and mortgagee the former cannot recover anything from the latter, it must be decisive of the question whether the tenants must pay to the one or the other. That, in my opinion, is not the case. It is true that the law assumes that the intermediate landholder (1) recovers half of the tax from the tenants; (2) that he pays something to the landholder; and these two matters are connected with each other and (to the extent stated above) with (3) the landholder's liability to pay the whole tax to the Government. But I apprehend that by the terms of his contract with the intermediate landholder the landholder could either release to the intermediate landholder his right to recover the portion of the tax which the law empowers the landholder to recover, or reserve that right to himself, and the release or the reservation might be either express or it may be implied from the fact that all rights other than those referred to are either expressly released or reserved [Nikka Mal v. Sulaiman Sheikh Gardner (7)]. If the right to recover half cess from the tenant had been purported to be reserved by the landholder to himself, there might have arisen a question whether the tenants would not even in that case be justified in paying it to the intermediate landholder. I shall refer to the legal aspect of this question under the fourth head to which I have alluded. But here I must state that, in my opinion, the contract of 1897 contained no reservation, express or implied, of the right arising from the amendment of the Act in 1900.

On the other hand, the landholder may, it is not disputed, validly agree to allow the intermediate landholder to retain the portion of the tax recovered from the tenant and apply it towards any sum that may be due to him from the mortgagor, and that is what is alleged here on behalf of the tenants. But though the question whether or not such an agreement, express or implied, relating to the application of the money exists between the mortgagor and mortgagee, may affect their pockets, it does not affect the question whether the tenants have to pay to the mortgagee in the first instance or directly to the mortgagor. The District Judge's omission to notice this made him consider that there was here something like an "assignment of the statutory right to contribution" alleged, whereas the question is whether the mortgagee or the mortgagor is the person to collect the tenants' contribution, and that depends solely upon whether the mortgagee became by the contract an intermediate landholder.

The further question whether if he became entitled to collect half of the cess in his capacity as intermediate landholder he was at liberty to retain it himself or was bound to pay it or account for it to the mortgagor, is not relevant to the rights and liabilities existing between the landholder and the tenant. This is illustrated by Ram Awatar v. Tulsi Prosad Singh (8).

The fourth consideration to which I referred above is whether the rights of the parties are affected by the fact that section 73 was amended after the contract, Exhibit A, was entered into. In the case last cited the statutory right of recovering the cess from the tenants came into being after the contract; in our case the incidence of a right existing at the time of the contract was (by an amendment of the law after the contract) shifted from the landholder to the intermediate landholder. I think it unnecessary to consider the general question whether this shifting can be prevented by contract, inasmuch as in the present case there is no attempt to do so. But I may point out that the shifting is brought about by the Legislature and has the effect of a contractual act. It may be that the Legislature intended that the parties should not be at liberty to contract themselves out of this shifting as an incident of a contract, the effect of which apart from this particular term would be to make one of the parties to it an "intermediate landholder:" and that the reason for this curtailment of the right to contract (if the right is so curtailed) is, as pointed out by my learned brother, to afford a comprehensive remedy for the mischief of the landlord's separate demands for cesses on mortgaged lands. See also Vellayan Chetti v. Tiruvakone (1). It may be that the Legislature left no power to the parties to contract so as to bring about a relationship corresponding in other respects to that of an intermediate landholder without annexing to that relationship the rights under section 73. The question, however, seems to me to be a large one and I express no opinion on it, as it seems to me that it has no bearing on the view I take of the case. My view is that the contract did not expressly or impliedly purport to prevent a shifting of the right, which was brought about by a Legislative amendment of the law made three years after the contract had been entered into.

(7) 2 A. 193.

(8) 11 Ind. Cas. 713; 14 C. L. J. 507; 16 C. W. N. 157.

Finally, some arguments before us were apparently based on the assumption (which I cannot grant) that, because in other cases persons called or calling themselves mortgagees or lessees were or were not held to be intermediate landholders or farmers of revenue and because in the present case we speak of a mortgagor and mortgagee, therefore, this case must be decided as being governed by those other cases. The decisions cited to us seems to me, however, to be helpful, not as direct authorities, but as showing in what way the question should be endeavoured to be solved. In Vellayan Chetti v. Tiruvakone (1) a Full Bench pointed out that the question must depend upon the terms of the particular contract giving rise to the relationship between the parties, which in that case also was a mortgage. The fact that a deed refers to itself as a mortgage, does not necessarily make it a mortgage: Nidha Sah v. Murli Dar (9); nor does every mortgagee become or cease to become an intermediate landholder because one mortgagee has been held to be so or not to be so. I proceed to deal with the facts of the case and to examine whether the mortgagee answers to the description of an intermediate landholder.

The mortgage-deed in the present case recites (1) that a sum of Rs. 28,000 was found payable to the mortgagee on a calculation which was, no doubt, satisfactory to the parties. It is then said (2) that the rents of the lands in question including therein (a) kattubadis of inams (b), kists of banjir lands, (c) incomes of banjir lands, (d) fishing tax, (e) etc., are fixed at Rs. 2,600; (3) that the mortgagee "is this day put in possession;" (4) that "the mortgagee" shall collect the said lease amount (i. e., the rents above recited) and enjoy the same for 25 years .. bearing the profit and loss thereof; and on the expiry of 25 years put the villages and the document in the mortgagor's possession on the mortgagee recovering the amount due in respect of this bond in full." (5) Covenants follow on the part of the mortgagor (i) not to offer to re-pay the mortgage-debt prior to the expiry of 25 years, (ii) not to mortgage the villages any further, (iii) to furnish accounts and information, (iv) to transfer an existing lease (which is in evidence as Exhibit III) to the mortgagee. Then after a passage, which I shall set out below, (v) the right to sue ryots in his own name is given to the mortgagee, (vi) also to quarry; (vii) finally the mortgagor agrees to pay the peishkush and in default to pay back the mortgage amount with interest. (6) The portion above referred to is as follows:—

"As by this khanda gutta deed the villages of Damilada and Lingalopada have been given to you for khanda gutta to be enjoyed by you for 25 years for the said sum of Rs. 28,000, you shall not plead then (i.e., at the end of 25 years) that anything more is due to you under the document nor shall we contend that the debt has been discharged earlier."

It seems to me that every part of the connotation of the term "intermediate landholder" has its equivalent in the status given to the mortgagee. There might be some doubt as to payment of rent. But section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act recognises the payment of a premium instead of rent for a lease; and I find it difficult to distinguish from a premium the sum of Rs. 10,000 originally paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, which by a calculation that the parties seem to have considered satisfactory was taken to amount to Rs. 28,000. The relationship of a usufructuary mortgagee is always close to that of a lessee, as may be found by reference to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act regarding them respectively, and to the numerous cases before the Courts in which it has had to be determined whether the relationship that has arisen between the parties must fall under the one description or the other.

I agree with my learned brother that no aid is to be obtained from Exhibits III, IV and VI for the reasons stated by him.

With reference to Original Suit No. 54 of 1905 on the file of the District Court of Ganjam, we have not the judgment before us. Its contents are, however, referred to in the judgment under appeal and the parties before us had to restrict their arguments on what the District Judge says regarding it. From his judgment I gather that in Original Suit No. 54 of 1905 (1) the present plaintiff contended that the mortgagee was on the mortgage liable to pay the cess and had failed to pay it; (2) the mortgagee contended on the other hand that (a) the cess was payable by the mortgagor, and (b) that the half cess recoverable by the mortgagee from the tenants was to be reckoned as part of the income. The only part of the judgment which became res judicata was that the mortgagor was liable to pay the land cess. This is irrelevant to the question before us, whether or not the mortgagee is the intermediate landholder.

I hold, therefore, that the mortgagee in the present case was an intermediate landholder and as such he, and not the mortgagor (the plaintiff), has the right to collect from the tenants the half cess referred to in section 73 of the Local Boards Act. The appeal will succeed with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court. The order of the Special Deputy Collector that each party should pay his own costs in the Court of first instance will stand.

Appeal allowed.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899,) s. 2—Application to file an award—Cause of action arising in part—Jurisdiction.

A "cause of action" consists of every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse, and it arises "in part" within the jurisdiction of a Court, if any fact material for the plaintiff to prove took place therein.

Where a trader entered into a contract at Multan with the agents of a Karachi firm, and the contract was to be completed in Karachi and the money payable thereon was expressly made payable in Karachi:

Held, that the cause of action arose in part in Karachi and that the Karachi Court had jurisdiction to file an award based on a reference contained in the contract.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for Respondents No. 1.

Mr. Asanmal Bulchand, for Respondents No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to file an award under the Indian Arbitration Act. Messrs. Bhagwandas-Hiranand object that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction, on the ground that the contracts forming the subject of the reference were made at Multan, and all money payable under them was impliedly payable in Multan. Mr. Rupchand, who appears for Messrs. Volkart Brothers, relies on the judgment of this Court in the case of Forbes, Forbes, Campbell & Co. v. Chelaram (1). That case, however, was decided before the new Civil Procedure Code came into operation, and can be distinguished from the present one by the fact that evidence was given which justified the Court in holding that the money to which the claim related was both expressly and impliedly payable in Karachi.

The question is whether or not, if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration had been the subject of a suit, such suit could have been instituted in Karachi. If the cause of action, wholly or in part, arose in Karachi, then the arbitrators had jurisdiction.

"Cause of action" is not defined in the new Civil Procedure Code, but there can be no doubt that it consists of every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse, and that the cause of action arises "in part" within the jurisdiction of this Court if any fact material for the plaintiff to prove, such as the payment of money due took place therein. See Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, pages 6 and 7.

Under the contracts which formed the subject of reference, Messrs. Volkart Brothers of Karachi advanced certain sums of money to Bhagwandas-Hiranand and they undertook to receive in Karachi certain consignments of wool belonging to the said Bhagwandas-Hiranand, to ship them to Europe, and to there arrange for their sale; and Bhagwandas-Hiranand on the other hand agreed to pay a certain commission and to re-pay any difference between the amounts advanced on the consignments and the net proceeds of sale. Messrs. Volkart Brothers agreed, in fact, to act as commission agents for the sale of the wool, and all such services as they had to render had to be performed in Karachi. These services consisted of receiving the wool on arrival in Karachi, arranging for its shipment to Europe, corresponding with friends in Europe with regard to its disposal, issuing all necessary instructions, etc. The memos. which contain the contracts, state in terms that the contracts are to be completed in Karachi, and the covenant to re-pay differences is to pay them to Messrs. Volkart Brothers, Karachi. "Karachi" is printed in very conspicuous capitals and underlined. Under the contract, then, the money payable to the claimants is expressly payable in Karachi, and when we find express terms in a contract, we are not at liberty to consider whether or not there was an implied agreement to do something inconsistent with these express terms.

Mr. Asanmal contends that it had been the practice of Messrs. Volkart Brothers for some fifteen years to always make and receive payments to and from Bhagwandas-Hiranand in Multan, and that his clients treated the guarantee-brokers there as the persons with whom they were contracting. But a party to an agreement is always at liberty to have strict performance, or to permit modified performance, and no such waiver or permisison under one contract can be relied on to excuse strict performance under another. To succeed in his objection Mr. Asanmal would have to prove that the express terms of the contract did not embody the real agreement between the parties, and this he has not attempted to prove; he has not even suggested that it was the case.

Let the award stand filed. Costs of these proceedings to be borne by Bhagwandas-Hiranand.

Award filed.

Mortgage—Contract brought about by fraud—Concealment of prior mortgage—Rescission of contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 19, 65—Obligation of mortgagee to return mortgage money.

A contract of mortgage brought about by concealing fraudulently from the mortgagee the existence of a prior mortgage is voidable at the option of the mortgagee.

Where a mortgagor sues for the cancellation of a mortgage document he must pay over to the mortgagee the amount paid by the latter under the contract of mortgage.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 49 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Quilandy, in Original Suit No. 807 of 1910.

Mr. K. P. Govinda Menon, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Govinda Marar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is found that the plaintiffs (respondents) brought about the contract of mortgage by concealing fraudulently from the defendants (appellants) the existence of a prior mortgage to the extent of Rs. 400 on four of the mortgaged items (besides the mortgage-decree for Rs. 800 directing the sale of their lands, which decree was disclosed in the document). Now when a contract has been brought about by fraud, it is voidable at the option of the party defrauded (section 19 of the Contract Act). We must take it that when the defendants refused to perform their part of the contract, namely, to pay the Rs. 800 towards the decree passed for sale of those four items, they must be held to have exercised their option to avoid the contract. The plaintiffs also in this suit repudiate the contract and want a cancellation of the mortgage document. Hence, we need not interfere with the decree of the lower Appellate Court which has rescinded the document evidencing the contract of mortgage.

A rescinded contract has, of course, become a void contract. When a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under it from the other party is bound to restore it to the other party. The plaintiffs have received Rs. 450 from the defendants under the deed. They are, therefore, bound to restore it to the defendants. The plaintiffs are not entitled to any damages for breach of contract, as the defendants were (as we have found) justified (on account of the plaintiffs' fraud) in repudiating the contract.

In the result the lower Appellate Court's decree will be modified as follows :

(1) In paragraph (3) of the decree the words and figures "Rs. 450 and interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of the Munsif's decree" shall be substituted for the words and figures "Rs. 50."

(2) For paragraph 4, the following shall be substituted: "The parties shall bear their respective costs in this and the lower Courts."

Each party will bear his own costs in this Court.

Appeal partly allowed; Decree modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 2 (3), O. XLIII, r. 1 (r)—Order refusing to attach property for disobedience of injunction, whether appealable—Appellate Court, power of, to order imprisonment

An order refusing to attach property for disobedience of an injunction order is an order passed under Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3), and is appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (r), and the Appellate Court has jurisdiction to pass an order of imprisonment in appeal.

Per Oldfield, J.—Disobedience of an injunction order is an act independent of the suit and the injunction and calls, therefore, for a separate punishment.

Venkatasami v. Stridaramma, 10 M. 179; Lachmi Narain alias Munnuji v. Ram Charan Das, 20 Ind. Cas. 653; 11 A. L. J. 613; 35 A. 425; Advocate-General of Bombay v. Ganji Akhai, 19 B. 152, distinguished.

Per Tyabji, J. (dissenting)—Order XLIII, rule 1 (r) is not sufficient to give to the Appellate Court the power which is restricted "to the Court granting the injunction," in other words no appeal is intended to be given as regards the exercise of a power which is annexed to a specified Court.

Shaik Jaharuddin v. Hari Charan Poddar, 22 Ind. Cas. 499; 18 C. W. N. 470, Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan, 25 Ind. Cas. 903; 41 C. 746, followed.

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment and order passed by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller, in Civil Revison Petition No. 772 of 1912, reported in 22 Ind. Cas. 404, on the file of the High Court, preferred against the order of the District Court of North Malabar, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 10 of 1912 (Miscellaneous Petition No. 821 of 1911, in Original Suit No. 952 of 1909 on the file of the District Munsif of Badagara).

FACTS appear fully from the judgment of Miller, J., reported in 22 Ind. Cas. 404.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Sundaram and A. Rangasami, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The District Munsif granted a temporary injunction, and the appellants as they eventually admitted, disobeyed it. Whilst the suit was still pending and the injunction was still in force, the District Munsif was moved to deal with their disobedience; but at the request of the parties he adjourned the petition with the suit, until the latter had been disposed of, when on the 30th September 1911 he dismissed it on the ground that, whether or no disobedience had taken place, the case was not one for punishment. On appeal the District Judge remanded it for re-admission and disposal. The District Munsif then considered it sufficient to express his grave disapproval and order the appellants to pay the respondent's costs. The District Judge, in the order which this Court was asked to revise, imprisoned the appellants for one month. This Letters Patent Appeal is against the refusal of a Judge of this Court to interfere in revision.

It is argued first that no appeal lay to the District Judge because Order XLIII, rule 1 (r), provides for an appeal only against an order under Order XXXIX, rule 2, and the decision of the District Munsif was a refusal to pass such an order. No authority has been adduced for this contention, and it is negatived by Venkatasami v. Stridavamma (1) and Lachmi Narain alias Munnuji v. Ram Charan Das (2). It, therefore, cannot be accepted.

It is said next that the District Judge had no power to pass an order of imprisonment in appeal, because under section 104 (2), Civil Procedure Code, no order passed by him in appeal is appealable and it is inconceivable, especially in view of section 104 (1), (h) that any order directing imprisonment should be final. But all such orders are subject to control by revision; and, even if the competence of Appellate Courts to use their power with discretion were doubtful, no apprehensions would justify a refusal on our part to give effect to the provisions of the Code as they stand.

Another objection to the District Judge's order is that Order XXXIX, rule 2, confers the power to imprison or attach property for breach of an injunction only on the Court granting it, not on the Appellate Court, and that, therefore, the District Munsif alone could take action. In connection with this and other parts of the appellants' arguments it is, no doubt, material that the application of a quasi-penal provision is in question and that such a provision must be construed strictly; and, no doubt, the wording of the Order affords support to this objection. Contra reliance has been placed on section 107; and, when it has been held that an appeal lies against an order refusing to deal with disobedience, it follows that the power to deal with it by imprisonment or attachment is available to the Appellate Court. The reference to "the Court granting the injunction" was first made in the present Code; and, if its introduction needs explanation, one may be found, not in the advisability of restricting the use of these powers to the Court of first instance, but in the necessity for guidance in cases in which it might be doubtful which Court of first instance should use them, as for instance in suits covered by section 19 or 20, since an injunction issued in such a suit is liable to infringement outside the jurisdiction of the Court which granted it.

The appellants contend next that on the date of the District Judge's order no Court was competent to use the powers conferred by Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3), because those powers could not be used then to secure obedience to the injunction, which had been vacated on the disposal of the suit and could, in no circumstances be used to punish for past disobedience. It must be conceded that unless a punitive, and not merely a coercive, use of the Court's powers is legitimate, the order cannot stand. But it has not been shown that only the latter is contemplated. It may be that the Court should require much clearer and stronger reason when it is asked to punish a past infringement, and not also to prevent one in the future. It does not follow that it can use its powers only for the latter purpose. There is no authority cited for that view; and there is some against it. Advocate-General of Bombay v. Ganji Akhai (3) was decided on the original side with reference either to general principles or to section 493 of the Code of 1882, in which the enforcing of the injunction is explicitly referred to. Yet in the judgment the Court's right to inflict punishment for a completed act of disobedience as well as to enforce compliance with its order for the future is recognised. Vide also Seaward v. Paterson (4) and In re A Solicitor (5). It is argued that the punitive exercise of the Court's powers is excluded by implication, because under Order XXXIX, rule 2 (4), attached property cannot be sold and its contumacious owner cannot be damnified, unless and until disobedience has continued for one year, and this postulates that at the date of the sale the injunction is still in force. But the argument takes no account of the facts that (1) imprisonment can be awarded without reference to disobedience continuing, (2) there is no provision for the termination of the imprisonment or attachment (before one year has elapsed), in case either the disobedience or injunction ceases (3) attachment at least in the case of moveables is itself punitive, whether or no it ends in sale. The order, therefore, cannot be held objectionable on this ground.

Lastly it is urged that the reference in Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3), to the Court's power to order attachment of property "and also" imprisonment entails that the latter power shall be exercised only after the former and that, no attachment having been ordered in the present case, the order for imprisonment is illegal. The interpretation adopted by the learned Judge is a reasonable one, that this wording merely permits the exercise of the two powers in the alternative. This would be consistent with the wording of the former Code and with the fact that in section 94 these powers are specified in the reverse order. Moreover, no reason apart from this wording has been suggested for the assumption that one power must be exercised before the other.

Objections to the order on legal grounds thus fail. On the merits there is no valid reason for dissent from the conclusion of the learned Judge, that the order has not been shown to work injustice of any kind, or from his refusal to interfere in revision. I would dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

TYABJI, J.—Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3), provides that "the Court granting an injunction" may order the property of a person guilty of disobeying the injunction to be attached, "and may also order such person to be detained in the civil prison." The question is whether by reason of an appeal lying from orders passed under the said rule the Appellate Court is empowered to pass the order which the Court granting the injunction is thus expressly empowered to pass [See Order XLIII, rule (1) (r)].

Appellate Courts have the same powers as the Courts of original jurisdiction,—Civil Procedure Code, section 107 (2)—and it is argued that consequently the fact that an appeal lies from the order for attachment or imprisonment implies that the Appellate Court has the same powers to order imprisonment as the original Court. But this argument, it seems to me, overlooks the real difficulty. It may be inverted into the contention that inasmuch as the Appellate Court would have the power of imprisonment if an appeal lay and inasmuch as the Legislature has restricted the power of imprisonment expressly to the Court granting an injunction, it follows that no appeal should lie.

The real question seems to be whether (a) the fact that an appeal lies or (b) the insertion of the restricting words, "the Court granting the injunction," is to be considered as laying down the governing consideration. Not without hesitation I am of opinion that Order XLIII, rule (1) (r), is not sufficient to give to the Appellate Court the power which is restricted to the Court granting the injunction, in other words that no appeal was intended to be given as regards the exercise of a power which is annexed to a specified Court.

My reasons for coming to this conclusion are :—

First, the words qualifying "the Court," —"granting the injunction"—are used in marked distinction to the absence of such words elsewhere in Order XXXIX, rule 2. Even in the same sub-rule the word "Court" is later on used in an unqualified manner: release may be directed by "the Court," not "the said Court." It is argued that the qualifying words were intended to prevent the powers being used by a Court to which the jurisdiction was transferred, Sheik Jaharuddin v. Hari Charan Poddar (6). Granting that that is so, it does not follow that there was no other restriction; perhaps the contrary.

Secondly, I am not unaffected by the terms of section 104 (1) (h) and (i), which show (1) that an order imposing a fine or directing an arrest is ordinarily appealable, but (ii) not an order refusing to impose a fine or to direct an arrest, (iii) that an appeal from an order not falling without clauses (a) to (h) can only lie if an appeal is "expressly" provided by the body of the Code or "expressly" allowed by the rules : thus implying that if an order not falling within these clauses is to be appealable for some special reason not within the general principles laid down, some express enactment is contemplated; and this somewhat strengthens my disinclination to consider the words "(Court) granting the injunction" as being made nugatory by the general right of appeal, (iv) clause (h) makes every order imposing a fine or directing arrest appealable: if the Appellate Court has the power to impose a fine or direct arrest, though the Court of first instance refused to do so, then by operation of section 104 (2) the Appellate Court's order will not be subject to appeal : thus the general principles contained in section 104 (1) would be violated, not only as stated in (iii) above, but because an order for arrest will then be entitled to stand though it has not the security of two concurrent decisions upholding it, which is what the principle of the section seems to require by implication. No doubt the revisional powers of this Court may be invoked, but they would not ordinarily entitle the question of facts to be revised.

Thirdly, the right to appeal from an order granting an application for revision [Order XLIII, rule (1) (w)] has been held to be restricted to the grounds referred to in Order XLVII, rule 7, see Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (7), Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 195 of 1910, though the clause granting the review is unrestricted in its terms. In my opinion in regard to this last matter the two rules in question permitted of being reconciled, but I feel bound by authority to hold otherwise. See Aiyarappa Mudaliar v. Gulam Ghouse (8). It seems to me that the reasons in the present connection are at least as strong for holding that it was not intended to entitle the Appellate Court to exercise the powers which are granted specially to the Court granting the injunction.

Mr. Rozario urged another ground based on the construction of the words "may also" in Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3). I agree in Mr. Justice Miller's construction of these words, i.e., that it is meant that the Court shall also have the power to commit, and not that the power to commit is not to be used without ordinary attachment.

For the reasons I have given it seems to me, with great deference, that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to order the detention of the appellants. But as my learned brother is of opinion that the order appealed from should stand, the appeal will be dismissed under clause 36 of the Letters Patent of the High Court.

BY THE COURT.—Under clause 36 of the Letters Patent the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the mortgagor has bound himself to pay the amount of the decree within a certain time by certain instalments. It was a consent decree, not a decree framed by the Court in its discretion under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and we see no reason why the mortgagor should not be held to the terms upon which the decree was passed with his consent. It has been held by Mr. Justice North in Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter (1) that a decree made by consent can only be varied by consent. Here the decree-holder claims

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—It is quite clear in this case that no appeal lies and the preliminary objection must succeed.

This is an appeal against a preliminary decree for partition. Now, before the filing of the second appeal a final decree was passed and there has been no appeal filed against the final decree. What is the result? The result is that the preliminary decree which was passed has been affirmed by the final decree and the final decree is itself not made the subject of appeal.

The case cited to us, [Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (1)], is in point and the case of Ugra Narain Singh v. Basan Narain Singh (2) does not assist the appellant, because it is pointed out there that at the time when the appellant preferred his appeal no final decree had been passed. In this case, however, a final decree has been passed and this is the material difference between the two cases.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s 14—Award made ex parte—Sufficient cause for non-appearance—Court, power of, to set aside award.

If a party shows sufficient cause for his non-appearance before an arbitrator, the Court will set aside an award passed ex parte against him.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for Petitioners and Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—Messrs. Fatamal Nahjimal object to the award on the ground that the arbitrators were guilty of legal misconduct in refusing a postponement asked for on reasonable grounds and proceeding ex parte.

It is clear law that if a reasonable excuse for not attending the appointment can be shown, the Court will set aside an award made by an arbitrator who has proceeded ex parte. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 431.)

It has been admitted that the notice of the hearing for the 4th December was not actually delivered until the 30th November. On receiving it, the objectors formally applied for a postponement, stating that their managing partner was ill and the witnesses were not in Karachi. This application was rejected on the ground that Messrs. Kahn Kahn & Co. did not consent (Exhibit C). On the morning of the 4th December Mr. Kalumal, Pleader for objectors, again wrote to the arbitrators pressing for a postponement, giving as one of the reasons that his client was compelled to be present all day in the Small Cause Court. The postponement was refused; the arbitrators proceeded ex parte, and their award was made on the 5th December.

It has been shown that the Firm of Fatamal Nanjimal consists of three adult partners, two of whom were absent from Karachi on the 4th December. On that date, Chandiram, the managing partner in Karachi, was confined to his house by illness; Dr. Moses Solomon who attended him has been called as witness. Vishindas, the man who was really acquainted with the facts of the case, was compelled to attend the Small Cause Court, and the summons shows that it was not issued until the 1st December. It has been proved that he was actually in the Small Cause Court from noon until about 4. He states that his defence was that the potatoes offered were rotten and that they were not in good condition when shipped. The witnesses whom he proposed to call were persons who had seen the goods on arrival; two of them were absent from Karachi on the date of hearing.

The objectors have, in my opinion, made out a case which any Court would regard as good enough for setting aside an ex parte decree under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code I see no reason why a stricter rule should be enforced in the case of arbitrators. The arbitrators seem to have refused a postponement on several grounds:—Firstly, Messrs. Kahn Kahn & Co. objected; secondly, one of the arbitrators said he was shortly leaving Karachi; thirdly, the date of hearing had been fixed in consultation with Vishindas; and fourthly, the arbitrators, after reading the papers, came to the conclusion that the case was so simple and straightforward that nothing would be gained by hearing the other side. None of these reasons is sufficient for refusing a postponement if one of the parties is really unable to be present and so informs the arbitrator. The arbitrators may feel convinced that nothing that the absent party could say would influence their decision; but this is a feeling which a judicial tribunal cannot entertain without forfeiting its claim to be judicial.

Mr. Hirdaram contends that arbitrators have power to proceed ex parte for good cause; this is true, but in proceeding ex parte for what prima facie appears to be good reason, an arbitrator takes the risk of the absent party being able to convince the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance.

Mr. Hirdaram further urges that objectors have really no case on the merits, and asks the Court to read the contract and correspondence and be convinced of it. But the objectors have not yet submitted their evidence and arguments, and though it may be perfectly true that any defence which they may put forward is excluded by the terms of their contract they must at least be heard.

I set aside the award. I make no orders as to costs.

Award set aside.

Babu Suresh Chandra Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for an injunction to restrain the sale thereof in execution of a mortgage-decree. On the 7th October 1896 the first defendant took a mortgage of the property from the other four defendants. He subsequently sued to enforce the security and obtained the usual mortgage-decree on the 25th August 1899, The decree was put into execution in due course, and a proclamation was served on the 13th August 1908 under which the sale was notified to take place on the 15th September 1908. On the 25th August 1908 the plaintiffs, who are the sons of the mortgagor, commenced this suit for declaration that they were not bound by the mortgage or by the decree made on the basis thereof, and also for consequential relief. The Court of first instance held in substance that the plaintiffs were bound by the mortgage transaction and that they were only entitled to redeem as they would have been if they had been made parties to the mortgage suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision and given the plaintiffs a decree which practically nullifies the mortgage-decree to the extent of their interest in the property. The Subordinate Judge has based his judgment on the ground that the first defendant was not the real mortgagee, that he was only the ostensible mortgagee for the benefit of a real creditor, and that consequently he was not entitled to enforce the security though it stood in his name. In support of this position, he has invoked the authority of the decision in Mohendra Nath Mookherjee v. Kali Prosad Johuri (1). This view has been now assailed on behalf of the first defendant as erroneous, and it has been contended that as the bond stood in his name it was competent to him to sue to enforce the security. In support of this argument reliance has been placed upon the case of Sachitananda Mohapatra v. Baloram Gorain (2), which was accepted as good law in Hara Gobind Saha v. Purna Chandra Saha (3). In our opinion there is no room for controversy that this contention is well-founded.

In the case of Sachitananda Mohapatra v. Baloram Gorain (2) it was ruled that a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage may be brought by the person named in the mortgage deed as the mortgagee, although he was in fact only the benamidar of the beneficial owner, and that such a suit should not be dismissed on the ground that the beneficial owner has not been joined as a party. The learned Judges added that the same point had been brought up for decision to this Court, before and that it had been decided that the contract could be enforced by the parties who had entered into it and that the suit should not fail merely because the beneficial owner was not on the record. The earlier decision to which reference was thus made was apparently the case of Sree Nath Nag v. Chunder Nath Ghose (4) where, as subsequently pointed out in the case of Bhoobuneswar Roy Chowdhry v. Juggessuree Chowdhrain (5), it was ruled that in a case of mortgage where A advanced money taking a bond in the name of B, if a suit was afterwards brought in the name of B, the suit should not be defeated on the ground that he was merely the ostensible mortgagee; A was the person who sought to enforce the mortgage and as the defendant had received the money from A and chosen to contract with B, it did not lie in his mouth to object to the institution of the suit in the same form. It is clear, therefore, that if this suit were resisted by the mortgagor alone, it would not be competent to him to dispute that the ostensible mortgagee was entitled to maintain it. We are of opinion that the sons of the mortgagor who are bound by the mortgage-bond equally with the executant do not stand in any better position. The case of Mohendra Nath Mookherjee v. Kali Prosad Johuri (1), where it was ruled that a benamidar as such is not entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property which stands in his name, is plainly distinguishable and does not touch the question now before us. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Mitter in the case of Gopi Nath Chowbey v. Bhugwat Pershad (6) so long as the benami system is recognised, it is to be presumed in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that a suit instituted by a benamidar has been instituted with the full authority of the beneficial owner, and any decision made in such a suit is as much binding upon the real owner as if the suit had been brought by the real owner himself. Under these circumstances, we must hold that the ground assigned by the Subordinate Judge for his decision cannot be supported.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with one variation. The Court of first instance allowed the plaintiffs to redeem within three months from the 14th June 1909 and directed that in the mortgage accounts interest was to be calculated only up to the date of the judgment. The time fixed for redemption has long since elapsed and we understand that the plaintiffs have not availed themselves of the opportunity afforded to them. In the circumstances of the present case we think that as the decision of the first Court is to be restored, a fresh date must be fixed for redemption. [Noor Ali Choudhuri v. Koni Meah (7), Nam Narain Singh v. Lala Raghunath Sahai (8), Tara Chand Marwari v. Brojo Gopal Mukerji (9).] We accordingly direct that the records be sent down to the Court of first instance and that accounts be taken of the sum due under the mortgage decree up to the date of the account [Kedar Lal Marwari v. Bishen Pershad (10), Gangadas Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitter (11), Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (12)] and that the plaintiffs be allowed to redeem within 15 days of the date when the sum payable for redemption has been notified to them after determination by the Court of first instance. The defendant-appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court of appeal below. If the plaintiffs do not redeem within the time allowed, the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s 19 - Insolvent guarantee-broker—Guarantee deposit - Employer's claim for damages adjudicated by Judge in insolvency proceedings —Suit to recover guarantee deposit after setting off damages, whether can be referred to arbitration—Sufficient cause.

A suit by an Official Receiver of the property of an insolvent guarantee-broker against his employer for the balance of the guarantee deposit with interest, after setting off the amount of damages settled by the Judge in the insolvency proceeding as due to the employer, cannot be referred to arbitration under section 19 of the Act, as the main question of damages cannot now be litigated without the leave of the Court under section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Mr. Asanmal Bulchand, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. Raymond, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Jiwanji Pirbhoy, entered into an agreement for sale of certain sugar as guarantee-broker of Messrs. James Finlay & Co. Jiwanji Pirbhoy failed to sell certain consignments of the sugar and became insolvent. Messrs. James Finlay & Co. proved their claim for damages against him in respect of his failure to sell the sugar before the Official Receiver. The amount of the damages was reduced upon the question of rates admissible by the Judge. The Receiver of the estate of the insolvent Jiwanji Pirbhoy has allowed this amount of damages as a set-off in a suit to recover from Messrs. James Finlay & Co. the balance with interest of 25 thousand rupees, the guarantee deposit. Messrs. James Finlay & Co. want this suit referred to arbitration under the arbitration clause in the agreement with Jiwanji Pirbhoy. It has been objected that there is in the above circumstances "sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred" within the meaning of section 19 of the Arbitration Act.

It seems to me that there is sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration. The main question would appear to be the amount of damages which has already been decided in the insolvency proceedings by the Judge. There appears to be no dispute as to the amount of the guarantee deposit. The main question as to the amount of damages depended upon difficult questions of law, as indicated in the judgment published as in Re Jivanji Pirbhoy (1). Moreover, that main question could now apparently only be litigated with the leave of the Court in view of the section 16, clause 2, of the Provincial Insolvency Act. This amount of damages is closely connected with the counter-claim to recover the guarantee deposit and would appear to have been rightly set off in the suit for the guarantee deposit under section 30 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The insolvency proceedings would, therefore, appear sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration in the discretion vested in me by section 19 of the Arbitration Act. The conclusion is fortified by the cases relied upon in paragraphs 951 and 959 of the first Volume of Halsbury's Laws of England. The application is, therefore, rejected with costs.

Application rejected.

A Court is not competent to appoint a person without his express consent as a guardian ad litem of a minor.

Where, therefore, a guardian ad litem is appointed without his express consent, the minor is not properly represented before the Court and is in no way bound by a decree passed against him and a sale held under such a decree does not pass the right, title and interest of the minor in the property sold.

A stranger purchaser of property in execution of a decree is not affected by the subsequent cancellation of the sale on reversal of the decree, as he cannot be expected to go behind the judgment to inquire into irregularities in the suit; it is sufficient for him to know that the Court had jurisdiction and exercised it and that the order, on the faith of which he purchased, was made and did authorize the sale. But this does not apply when the purchaser is himself a party and has notice, or at least opportunity of knowledge, of all the proceedings therein, on the principle of cessante ratione legis, cessat etipsa lex.

It is essential for the reversal of a sale that the person whose property has been sold must be a party to the proceeding.

Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contemplates a sale of the mortgaged properties but where a sale of the mortgaged properties be impossible, as where the mortgaged properties have been sold for arrears of revenue or of rent or in execution of some decree, the decree must be suitably modified and a Court is competent, in the exercise of its inherent powers, to give appropriate directions for the disposal of the fund which represents the property.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against a decree in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. To appreciate the questions raised herein, it is necessary to examine the relevant facts as they appear on the record.

On the 1st June 1898 Krishna Chandra Mandal (the first defendant) and Dukhbhanjan Mandal (since deceased and now represented by his infant sons, the second and third defendants) executed the mortgage-bond in suit, in favour of Jogendra Narayan Roy and Mohendra Narayan Roy. The principal money secured was Rs. 4,999, which carried interest at 10½ per cent. per annum and was re-payable on the 12th April 1899. On the 12th April 1905 the mortgagees commenced the present suit to enforce their security. They joined fourteen persons as defendants. Of these the first three were one of the original mortgagors and the two infant sons of the other mortgagor. The remaining defendants were persons who, it was alleged, had acquired an interest in the equity of redemption by purchase, settlement, mortgage or otherwise and were consequently necessary parties as entitled to redeem the plaintiffs. On the day that the suit was instituted, the plaintiffs applied for appointment of guardian ad litem of the infants defendants, and proposed their mother as a suitable person. Notices were served upon the infants and the proposed guardian. The mother, however, did not enter appearance and signify her willingness to act as guardian of her sons. Yet the Court proceeded, at the instance of the plaintiffs, to appoint her guardian of the infants for the purposes of the suit. There was no appearance on behalf of the infants at any stage of the suit, but some of the other defendants filed written statements. On the 15th December 1905 the Court proceeded to decree the suit ex parte as against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, on a compromise as against defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, 9, 14, and apparently on contest as against defendants Nos. 4, 8. On the 25th June 1906 the mortgagees applied for an order absolute, whereupon notices were directed to issue upon the defendants. On the 25th July 1906 the first defendant as also the mother of the second and third defendants applied to the Court to set aside the ex parte decree. They alleged that no summons in the suit had ever been served upon them and that there were substantial defences to the claim, and they prayed that the decree might not be made absolute till the matter had been investigated. This application was made by a Pleader on the strength of a vakalatnama given by the mother of the infants on the 24th July 1906 authorising him to take necessary steps to oppose the grant of the application for order absolute. On the 25th October 1906 the Court dismissed the application to set aside the decree, and on the 13th November 1906 made the decree absolute. On the 17th January 1907 the petitioners, who had unsuccessfully applied to set aside the decree, preferred an appeal to this Court against the order dismissing their application. On the 8th January 1908 this Court heard the appeal and set aside the ex parte decree as against the three petitioners and directed the suit to be re-heard in so far as they were concerned. As regards the infants appellants, this Court held that they were not parties to the suit, as no guardian had ever been appointed for them in accordance with law, and they would consequently not be bound by the decree. This Court was not apprised at the time that during the pendency of the appeal, the decree had been executed and the mortgaged properties sold. In fact, on the 4th February 1907, the lower Court proceeded, at the instance of the mortgagees-decree-holders to sell the properties; many of these were purchased by the decree-holders themselves, some were purchased by the defendants other than the mortgagors, a few were purchased by persons who were neither plaintiffs nor defendants and were entire strangers to the proceedings. The sale was confirmed on the 8th April 1907, and on various dates between April and November 1907 possession was delivered to the purchasers. On the 24th March 1908, that is shortly after the ex parte decree had been set aside by this Court, the first three defendants applied to the Court below to set aside the sale. Petition of objection was filed by two only of the purcharers, one of whom was a party to the suit (defendant No. 12). On the 31st July 1908 the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application, on the ground that third parties were not affected by the cancellation of the decree. The suit, which by order of this Court stood revived against the mortgagors, was then taken up for re-trial, and on the 16th December 1908 they filed their written statement. On the 3rd September 1909 the District Judge, who took up the case for disposal, overruled the defences on the merits and made his decree. This decree directs the mortgagors to pay up the mortgagees within three months and on default entitles the latter to take the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged properties purchased by third parties in satisfaction of their decree. A provision is added that, should this prove insufficient, the mortgagees will have the right to realise the balance by sale of the remaining mortgaged properties. The decree, it will be observed, does not specify what is meant by "third party,"—whether it includes only a person who is not a party to the mortgage suit or includes all persons other than the plaintiffs-mortgagees. The mortgagors defendants have now appealed to this Court, and have contended that the decree as drawn up is not in accordance with rule 4 of Order XXXIV of the Code and that, in the events which have happened, all the mortgaged properties should be directed to be sold afresh.

It is plain that the two infants defendants have not been affected in any way by the sale held on the 4th February 1907, because there was at the time no valid and operative decree in force against them. They were not properly parties to the mortgage suit. It was not competent to the Court to appoint their mother as guardian ad litem without her express consent. The Court acted contrary to what was the established rule on the subject. Dhondiba Lakshuman v. Kusa (1), Babaji v. Maruti (2), Isur Chunder v. Nobo Kristo (3), Narsingh Narain v. Jahi Mistry (4), Bal Krishan Lal v. Topeswar Singh (5), Dinabandhu Nandi v. Mashuda Khatun (6). The position, consequently, was that the infants were not properly before the Court, and are in no way bound by the decree of the 15th December 1905. The sale held under these circumstances did not pass the right, title and interest of the infants. Khairaj Mal v. Daim (7), Rashidunnessa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (8), Kishen Chunder v. Ashoorun (9). It is consequently indisputable that every one of the purchasers at the execution sale held on the 4th February 1907 has failed to acquire the right, title and interest of the infants defendants in the mortgaged properties. Such purchasers may have imagined that the infants were bound by the decree and may have paid the purchase-money on the assumption that they were acquiring the interest of all the mortgagors. But that clearly cannot affect the position of the infants, who are bound neither by the decree nor by the sale consequent thereon. It is thus necessary for the protection of the purchasers themselves that the properties should be re-sold on the footing of a fresh decree binding on the infants in the suit as re-constituted.

Apart from this question, the effect of the cancellation of the decree by this Court on the 8th January 1908, upon the sale held on the 4th February 1907 requires examination. Two positions are clear and incontestable, namely, first, that the purchase made by the decree-holders themselves must be treated as cancelled, and secondly, that the purchase made by persons who are not parties to the suit must be treated as unaffected. Nawab Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. Mohammad Ashgar Ali Khan (10), Jan Ali v. Jan Ali (11), Chunder Kant v. Bissessur (12), Mukhoda v. Gopal Chunder (13), Inderjeet v. Pootee Begum (14), Shivlal v.

Shambhu Prasad(15), Janakdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal Bhaya (16), Dorasami Ayyar v. Annasami Ayyar(17). The question arises, however, as to the position of a purchaser who is not a stranger to the suit but is a defendant therein. Is his position analogous to that of the plaintiff or of an absolute stranger to the proceedings? The answer to this question must depend upon the reasons for the rule that a stranger who purchases in execution of a decree is not affected by the subsequent cancellation or reversal of the decree. Sir Barnes Peacock in Nawab Zain-ul-abdeen v. Muhammad Ashgar Ali (10) refers to a passage from Bacon's Abridgment, Tit. Error (M. 3), which runs as follows.—"if a man recovers damages and hath execution by fieri facias and upon the fieri facias the Sheriff sells to a stranger a term for years, and after the judgment is reversed, the party shall be restored only to the money for which the term was sold, and not to the term itself, because the Sheriff had sold it by the command of the writ of fieri facias". This statement of the law is supported by a long series of early cases: Anon. (18), Luddington and Anner's case (19), Beverley's case (20), Eyre v. Woodfine (21), Anon. (22), Hoe's case (23), Methew Manning's case (24), Drury's case (25), Goodyere v. Ince (26), Doe d Emmett v. Thorn (27). An examination of these cases shows that protection is afforded to the purchaser only when he is a stranger to the suit. This is clear when we examine the reasons assigned in support of the rule. Thus in Bennet v. Hamill (28) Lord Redesdale justified the rule on the principle that the stranger who purchases has a right to presume that the Court has taken the steps necessary to investigate the rights of the parties and has on such investigation properly decreed a sale. To the same effect is the observation of Sugden, L. C., in Bowen v. Evans(29). The principle was affirmed by the House of Lords in Bowen v. Evans (30) and Tommey v. White (31) and by the Supreme Court of the United States in Gray v. Brigniardello (32), Beauregard v. New Orleans (33) and Grignon v. Astor (34). The reason for the rule is uniformly stated to be that the stranger purchaser cannot be expected to go behind the judgment, to enquire into irregularities in the suit, and that it is sufficient for him to know that the Court had jurisdiction and exercised it and that the order on the faith of which he purchased was made and did authorise the sale. To the same effect is the observation of the Judicial Committee in Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (35) and Zain-ul-abdin v. Ashgar Ali (10). The reason for the rule obviously disappears when the purchaser is himself a party to the suit and has notice, or at least opportunity of knowledge, of all the proceedings therein. The case is clearly one for the application of the maxim, cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex (when the reason of any particular law ceases, so does the law itself.) The question has been raised in the Courts of the United States, and it has been held that a purchaser at a judicial sale, who is a party to the proceeding and in interest, is not a bona fide purchaser to the extent that will protect his purchase in case of a reversal of the decree by authority of which it is made: Buchanan v. Clark (36). The condition of such a purchaser is unlike that of an absolute stranger to the proceedings who becomes a purchaser under the decree, such stranger is protected, but the sale fails on reversal of the decree as to the purchaser who is a party in interest or to the proceedings. There is only one solitary decision, Gossom v. Donaldson (37), where it was held that the protection afforded to strangers should also be extended to parties to the suit, including the plaintiff-decree-holder himself. This case stands alone, and the extreme view taken therein has been adversely criticised by text-writers. [Kleber on Judicial Sales, sections 201, 202 and 291, Baker v. Baker (38)]. The decision in MacBride v. Longworth (39) is not contrary to this view, as that case turned upon a Statute which afforded protection to all execution purchasers, whether strangers or parties to the suit; in fact the view taken in Buchanan v. Clark (36) is identical with that taken in Hubbel v. Breadwell (40) and Walpole v. Ink (41) (Rorer on Judicial Sales, sections 132-134). It is obviously essential, however, that for the reversal of the sale the person whose property has been sold must be a party to the proceedings. Wither v. Little (42), Little v. Superior Court (43), Withers v. Jacks (44) (Freeman on Executions, section 347). The rule that a stranger purchaser is not affected by the reversal of the decree is based, as the cases show, on grounds of public policy, though it operates harshly upon the person whose property has been sold and who, it may turn out in the end, was not liable at all to the plaintiff. We are not prepared to extend the scope of the rule and to apply it for the benefit of parties to the suit in whose case the reason for the rule has no application. Consequently all the properties which have been purchased by parties to the suit must be re-sold, if necessary, in execution of the decree now to be made.

We may add that we do not feel pressed by the argument that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is not in conformity with rule 4 of Order XXXIV of the Code. That rule, no doubt, contemplates a sale of the mortgaged properties, but the decree must be suitably modified in exceptional circumstances where a sale of the mortgaged properties may be impossible. for instance where the mortgaged properties have been sold for arrears of revenue, for arrears of rent or as here, in execution of a decree; in such cases, where the property can no longer be reached, either in whole or in part, the Court is competent. in the exercise of its inherent power, to give appropriate directions for the disposal of the fund which represents the property.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge discharged, and the case remanded to him in order that the necessary accounts may be taken and the final decree drawn up. An account will first be taken of the sum due to the plaintiffs upon the mortgage of the 1st June 1898. An account will then be taken of the sums realised by the plaintiffs from the properties purchased by them on the 4th February 1907, and of which, it is said, they have taken possession. Both these accounts will be taken up to the date of this judgment. The difference between these two sums will be taken and will be reduced by the sum realized by the sale of the mortgaged properties to strangers to the suit. A decree will be made in favour of the plaintiffs for this reduced sum and the sum decreed will carry interest at six per cent. per annum from this date. The judgment-debtors will be allowed to pay up the money within three months from the date when the decree of the Court below is drawn up and signed. If the amount is not so paid, the mortgaged properties other than those sold to strangers on the 4th February 1907, will be sold by the Court for the satisfaction of the decretal amount, after the usual order absolute has been made. Each party will pay his own costs of the suit up to the present stage. The costs of the inquiry in the Court below will be in the discretion of that Court. The District Judge will be at liberty to take the accounts himself or to transfer the case for disposal to the Subordinate Judge.

We do not at this stage consider the question of restitution by the defendants-purchasers to the mortgagors-defendants on account of their possession of the properties they had purchased on the 4th February 1907. Such question may be determined on application to the Court by which the sale was held. Beni Madho Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Canara, dated 30th September 1913, in Insolvency Petition No. 3 of 1912.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. Balakrishna Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken by the respondent that the hearing cannot proceed, because no notice of the appeal has been given to the creditors other than himself. Section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act specifies the class of persons entitled to appeal. But no provision specifies those entitled to be made, or whom the appellant is obliged to make respondents; and we can obtain no indirect guidance on the point by inference from other parts of the Act. For it is not possible to hold that all other creditors of the insolvent, whether named or not named in the petition and whether they have appeared at the adjudication proceedings or not, are necessarily parties to whom general or special notice of the appeal should issue. We decide to follow the English procedure stated in English Order LVIII, rule 2, vide also In re A Debtor (1) and to hold that only parties directly affected by the appeal are entitled to notice. It has not been shown that any special circumstances exist in consequence of which other creditors than those already on the record can be supposed to be so affected. We, therefore, disallow the preliminary objection.

On the merits the learned District Judge was wrong in holding, as we understand him to have done, that the date of presentation of the petition was the date on which it was erroneously filed in the Subordinate Court, before it was filed in the District Court. He could do so only with reference to section 14 of the Limitation Act; and it has been decided by this Court in M. Duraisami Aiyangar v. Meenakshi Sundara Aiyar (2) that the Limitation Act is not applicable to proceedings under this Act. As the petition can be treated as having been presented on the date of its presentation in the District Court, it has not been presented in conformity with section 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act within three months of the act of insolvency alleged in it. It is, therefore, liable to dismissal. The appeal is accordingly allowed, the petition being dismissed with costs as between the appellant and the first respondent in both Courts. The second respondent, the insolvent, will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises out of an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Agra, directing a prosecution under the provisions of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The prosecution was directed in connection with evidence given in a civil trial. Under the rulings of this Court, such an order cannot be entertained in revision save under the provisions of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is suggested that as the final order directing the prosecution was not made by the same Subordinate Judge who originally heard the case, there was no jurisdiction to make the order. In our opinion this contention is without force. We may mention that the first step in connection with the prosecution was taken by the very same Subordinate Judge who decided the civil case. But on the general question we may refer to Shaikh Bahadur v. Shaikh Eradatullah Mullick (1), where it was held that the expression "Court" in section 476 includes the successor in office. See also Nawal Singh v. Emperor (2). We, of course, express no opinion whatever on the merits. The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 155, 190 (1) (b)—Non-cognizable case reported by Police—Procedure—Police report.

When a Magistrate receives a Police report in a non-cognizable case and has reason for doubting its correctness, he can order an investigation under section 155, Criminal Procedure Code, but he cannot examine the Police Officer who submitted the report as if he was a complainant.

A Police report in a non-cognizable case is a Police report within the meaning of section 190 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code.

Revision against the finding and sentence of the Township Magistrate, Natmauk, in Criminal Summary Case No. 22 of 1904.

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. G. Aiyangar, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This case is similar to the one dealt with in Criminal Revision No. 101 of 1914, and three of the accused were convicted in that case, viz., Saw Ke, the house-owner, Nga Hme and Nga Te. Here, too, the Magistrate passed sentences of imprisonment without the option of a fine. Saw Ke was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment under section 12 (a) for keeping a common gaming house on the 9th February 1914. Nga Hme, Ye Gyan and Nyi Bu were sentenced each to two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 11 for gambling on the same occasion at Saw Ke's house, they having been previously convicted. Nga Te was sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment under section 11 for gambling at the same time and place. Nga Hme's previous conviction, as noted in my order in Criminal Revision No. 101, was one under section 11, dated the 19th January 1903, when he was fined Rs. 15. Ye Gyan's convictions were one under sections 11 and 12 (sic) on the 5th January 1900, when he was fined Rs. 15, and the second under section 10 on the 2nd May 1903, when he was fined again Rs. 15. Nyi Bu was convicted under section 10 on the 3rd August 1904 and fined Rs. 50 and again under sections 11 and 12(sic) on the 22nd July 1913, when he was fined Rs. 10, BHAGUBHAI DWARKADAS v. EMPEROR.

The gambling in the present case was similar to that in Criminal Revision No. 101: the stakes were Re. 1. Here the Magistrate said: "It appears that accused Saw Ke has been carrying on different kinds of gambling for some time past in the neighbouring villages of Natmauk." But there is nothing to show that there was any evidence to that effect.

The sentence on Saw Ke is reduced to a fine of Rs. 100 with 21 days' rigorous imprisonment in default. The sentence on Nyi Bu is reduced to a fine of Rs. 50 with ten days' rigorous imprisonment in default. The sentences on Ye Gyan, Nga Hme and Nga Te are reduced in each case to a fine of Rs. 30 with seven days' rigorous imprisonments in default.

The Magistrate who first dealt with this case entertained it on a Police report by a Head Constable. He proceeded to examine the Head Constable on oath as if he was a complainant, and then ordered a Police investigation. As explained 10 years ago in Emperor v. Nga Thaung (1), a Police report in a non-cognizable case is a Police report within the meaning of section 190 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code, and there is no authority in the Criminal Procedure Code for examining a Police Officer submitting a Police report under section 190 (1) (b) as if he was a complainant.

It was, however, open to the Magistrate to order an investigation under section 155, and this appears to be the proper course for a Magistrate to take when he receives a Police report in a non-cognizable case and has reason for doubting its correctness.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144 (3)—Order directed to public at large—Operation not confined to particular place—Jurisdiction.

An order of a District Magistrate, purporting to have been passed under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is made without jurisdiction if its operation is not confined to a particular individual or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the District Magistrate of Surat.

Mr. Setalvad (with him Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas), for the Applicants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The District Magistrate of Surat, purporting to act under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, has made an order directing "all persons to abstain from removing or causing to be removed, or promoting, aiding, or abetting, directly or indirectly, in any way the removal of any dogs, either in carts, or otherwise, and from preventing or trying to prevent or obstruct, directly or indirectly, the poisoning of such dogs in any way and from taking possession of or confining such dogs." It is mentioned in the order that "it applies to Surat city and all places within five miles of Surat city." Under section 144, however, the District Magistrate has power only to direct an order to a particular individual or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place. It is quite clear that this order complies with neither of these requirements. It is, therefore, made without jurisdiction. It is needless to consider the other objections urged on behalf of the applicants. On this ground alone I set aside the order.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I hold that the District Magistrate has no power whatever to issue a prohibitory order to the public, unless that power is specifically conferred by some provision of the law. He claims or appears to claim that the power to issue this particular prohibitory order to the public of Surat is conferred by section 144. But to me it is quite plain that it is not. Clause (3) of that section cannot conceivably cover the case, and the power to direct any person to abstain from a particular thing is not a power to direct the public generally from abstaining.

Order set aside.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge of Kanara.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The Sessions Judge of Kanara has referred to us a case which has been committed to him, on the ground that the commitment was illegal and ought to be quashed.

What had happened is this. After the death of a certain person, another person put forward a Will which, he said, had been made by the deceased, and in virtue of this Will he claimed a change in the entries in the Record of Rights. This claim became a disputed claim which, under rules made by the Government, had to be inquired into by the mamlatdar. The mamlatdar made his inquiry: he saw the Will produced before him. He came to the conclusion that there was grave suspicion attaching to the Will and he declined to recognize it as a basis for any change in the Record of Rights. Eventually the case was taken up by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under clause (c) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was inquired into by him as a Magistrate and finally was committed to the Court of Session. As I mention his proceedings, I would like to say this: that they have been conducted in the most painstaking and thorough way and the mistake which has occurred is one which, at any rate, casts no reflection whatever on the manner in which he conducts magisterial work. The mistake is this. If the mamlatdar in making his inquiry was a "Court" within the meaning of that word as used in clause (c) of section 195, then a sanction or complaint was required as provided by section 195 before this case could proceed. We have come to the conclusion that the mamlatdar in making this inquiry was a "Court." I should describe him as a "Revenue Court," but it matters very little whether you describe him in that way or as a "Civil Court." The judicial result is precisely the same in a matter of this kind. I say that he was a "Court" for these reasons: he had power to summon witnesses, to take evidence, although it may be not to administer an oath, to consider the evidence and to make a final order which might be, as in this case, an order of great importance and would be final, unless changed by his superior on revision or appeal, until there had been a decision of a Civil Court which conflicted with it. It seems to me that there are all the ingredients required for a Court in these matters that I have stated. Therefore, I think that a sanction was necessary in this case. But I think it is more than a merely technical defect that there is not a sanction, and for this reason. Supposing that a person aggrieved had applied to the mamlatdar for sanction and supposing the mamlatdar had, as he properly ought to do, called on these accused persons to show cause why sanction should not be given, and supposing then that they said, "sanction should not be given because we are about to apply for Probate of this Will:" if that were their reply, then I say it would be a monstrous thing for a Court forthwith to give the sanction. It might say, "I will allow you a month or two months" or whatever period might be reasonable within which to apply for Probate "and if within that time you have not applied, then I shall grant a sanction." That view of the case shows, I think, very clearly that in a matter of this kind where there has been no inquiry into the genuineness of the Will by a Court of Probate or by a Civil Court, the conducting of a prosecution without a sanction amounts to very much more than a mere technical defect.

We think that the proper order for us to make in this case is to quash the order of commitment and the whole of the proceedings before the Magistrate. And if it is determined that this prosecution should take place, it must take place with that foundation and beginning which the law requires.

SHAH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The inquiry made by the mamlatdar in this case was one which he was legally empowered to make under the rules relating to the Record of Rights. In conducting the inquiry he could exercise the powers referred to in Chapter XII—particularly in sections 189 and 197—of the Land Revenue Code. He summoned the party interested and recorded evidence before making his order relating to the disputed entry in the Record of Rights. Section 196 of the Land Revenue Code has no application to this inquiry, as it is neither formal nor summary under the Act. It may be, therefore, that the mamlatdar cannot be deemed a Civil Court for the purposes of the inquiry. But I feel clear that the mamlatdar holding an inquiry as provided in Chapter XII of the Land Revenue Code is a Revenue Court within the meaning of section 195, sub-section (1), clause (c). As the offence in question is in respect of a document produced before the mamlatdar in the inquiry made by him, and as there is no sanction or complaint of the mamlatdar or of any other Revenue Court to which he is subordinate, it is clear that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence.

Order set aside.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 112—Order requiring sureties to be clear in its terms—Arbitrary standard—Reluctancy to stand surety—Person, when satisfactory surety—Surety, rejection of.

The object of the provisions of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is not to consign bad characters to jail, but to prevent them from committing offences to allay public apprehension.

An order under section 112 must be such that if a suspect have a bona fide intention to be of good behaviour, it will not be impossible for him to find sureties.

It is unfair to a suspect to call on him to produce sureties of a certain class and then to reject the persons offered because they do not conform to an arbitrary standard not set up in the order. If the sureties offered come fairly within the terms of the order, they can only be rejected because they are personally unfit Mere reluctance to be surety constitutes no valid objection unless the Magistrate is satisfied that the surety is, under what amounts to undue influence, undertaking a risk which as a reasonable and prudent man he would not take if a free agent.

A man is a satisfactory surety if he is in a position to ascertain how the accused is behaving and if he is also of such character and standing that he would not hesitate to apply for cancellation of his bond if he saw risk of forfeiture

A surety should not be rejected merely because a Police Inspector informs the Magistrate that he is of bad character, when such rejection involves the committal of the accused to prison.

Application for revision of the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mehar.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—This is an application under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, asking the Court to review orders passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mehar, under sections 112 and 123, against Abul, son of Mahomed Hakim and Mahomed Ibrahim, son of Mahomed Hayat.

By his two several orders under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 20th December 1913, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate required the two accused to show cause why they should not be ordered to execute a bond to be of good behaviour for the term of two years in the sum of Rs. 1,000, with three sureties jointly and severally bound for the like amount and the same period. The said sureties were to be men not inferior in standing to the two accused and of respectable character, living in their neighbourhood.

Mahomed Ibrahim produced five men, Karimdad, Khan Mahomed, Jhamanmal, Mahomed Sharif and Lakhu.

Mahomed Ibrahim possesses 198 acres of pucca land and 153 acres of khas mohab, i. e. of precarious tenure. He has a brother who is said to be owner of a half share, but the brother's name is not entered in the register. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in his order under section 123 commences by ruling that, as Mahomed Ibrahim had 353 acres of land, it would be fair to ask him to produce, as a surety of equal standing, a zemindar owning 300 acres of land. Accordingly two of the sureties, Lakhu and Mahomed Sharif, were at once ruled out. It is asserted that Lakhu has considerable moveable property and is a richer man than Mahomed Ibrahim. Mahomed Sharif possesses 230 acres and is also said to be richer than Mahomed Ibrahim. Karimdad and Jhamanmal were rejected because the Inspector of Police objected to them as being of bad character.

Abul has 100 acres of land, of which 96 are held on precarious tenure. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, therefore, ruled that each surety must possess 100 acres, though it is asserted that Abul is actual owner of only one half of the land registered in his name. Of the six men offered only one had 100 acres. Four were also objected to on the ground that they were Lakhyars—said to be a tribe of unruly tendencies—and five on the ground that they lived in the accused's village of Nao Goth, which bears a bad reputation. Only one of the sureties was objected to on the ground that he himself bore a bad character.

Mr. Elphinston who appears for the applicants objects to the orders, on the grounds that the character and class of sureties are not clearly defined, that the amount of the bonds is excessive, and that the sureties have been unreasonably rejected.

The object of the provisions of Chapter VIII is not to consign bad characters to jail, but to prevent them from committing offences and to allay public apprehension. The theory underlying these provisions is that, if a bad character can get a couple or more respectable people who know him to accept his assurance that he will be of good behaviour for a defined term and to back their opinion by risking a substantial sum of money, the probability is that he really intends to reform, and it will be safe to leave him at large. But a prudent man will not ordinarily guarantee the good behaviour of a bad character unless he is in a position to exercise direct control over him, or unless he has opportunity of watching, or of obtaining information with regard to, his behaviour from time to time, so that in the event of the suspect resuming his bad habits timely notice may be given to the Police or he, the surety, may apply to be discharged.

Powers are given to the Magistrate to determine the amount of the bond to be executed, the number, character and class of sureties required, and also to reject any particular surety as being unfit. But these powers must, of course, be reasonably exercised, and the order under section 112 must be such that, if a suspect have a bona fide intention to be of good behaviour, it will not be impossible for him to find sureties.

The order under section 112 should also be clear in its provisions. It is obviously unfair to a suspect to call on him to produce sureties of a certain class and then to reject the persons offered, because they do not conform to an arbitrary standard not set up in the order. In the present case, the suspects were ordered to produce sureties "not inferior in standing to themselves." The dictionary definition of "standing" is "condition in society; relative position; reputation; rank." It is not, in our opinion, unreasonable to stipulate that the surety shall be of at least equal standing to the accused, but we consider it unreasonable for the Magistrate to reject sureties as of inferior standing merely because they are not zemindars with at least 300 acres of land registered in their names. If the Magistrate considered it necessary to limit the sureties to such a class, he should have so stated in his order under section 112.

Having regard to the fact that the suspects have been able to produce sureties for Rs. 1,000, we are not prepared to say that the amount was, in this particular case, excessive, but it is to be noted that when three sureties sign a bond in the form given in Schedule V to the Criminal Procedure Code, they are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount of the bond, but all three of them cannot be called on to pay the whole amount; the sum named can only be recovered once.

It is obviously unfair to an accused person to order him to produce sureties living in his neighbourhood and then to reject the men offered because they are his neighbours. If the sureties offered come fairly within the terms of the order under section 112, they can only be rejected because they are personally unfit. The Magistrate has in this case objected to sureties wholesale because they live in the same village as Abul, though against four of them there was no personal objection. Nor is it reasonable to reject a surety merely because he is of the same caste as accused, unless the order under section 112 has imposed such a limitation.

It has been laid down by this Court in Emperor v. Haji Usman (1) that the proceedings under section 122 are judicial proceedings within section 1, Evidence Act; a surety, therefore, should not be rejected merely because a Police Inspector informs the Magistrate that he is of bad character, when such rejection involves the committal of the accused to prison. Though it is not contemplated, and it is not, in my opinion, necessary, that all proceedings under section 122 should be of a formal judicial character, yet where the issue, whether or not the accused shall be committed to prison, is narrowed down to the question, whether a particular person is in the opinion of the Magistrate a fit person to be surety, the Magistrate cannot properly base his order on an adverse opinion formed on statements which no judicial tribunal could accept as evidence.

In other cases which are before us to-day, the same Magistrate has rejected sureties because they offered themselves unwillingly or out of pity for the accused's children, or because they were not of standing sufficient to restrain the accused from stealing. Now, it may be taken that no person in Sind willingly becomes surety for a badmash; by so doing he not only risks a substantial sum of money but exposes himself to the displeasure of the Police; some degree of importunity is probably always necessary before a man consents to offer himself. Mere reluctance to be surety constitutes no valid objection unless the Magistrate is satisfied that the surety is, under what amounts to undue influence, undertaking a risk which as a reasonable and prudent man he would not take if a free agent, that is to say, he is offering himself as a surety notwithstanding that he has no confidence in the accused's promise to reform, or in his own powers of effectually preventing misbehaviour. Nor is it of itself a disqualification that a person cannot exercise active physical control over accused. It is, no doubt, an advantage in a surety to be in a position to send for the accused from time to time, to question and to warn him, or to put physical restraint on him; but a man may be a satisfactory surety if he is in a position to ascertain how the accused is behaving, and if he is also of such character and standing that he would not hesitate to apply for cancellation of his bond if he saw risk of forfeiture

We reverse the order under section 123, except so far as it relates to the acceptance of Khan Mahomed as surety for Mahomed Ibrahim, and direct the Magistrate to reconsider the question of accepting the sureties offered, with due regard to the above remarks, and to pass fresh orders under section 123.

The accused must enter into their personal recognizances in Rs. 2,000 each to appear before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate until disposal of the case.

FAWCETT, J. C.—I concur with the order proposed by my learned colleague and the general observations made by him as to the principles on which the powers under sections 112, 122 and 123 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be exercised. Though a Magistrate has, under section 122, a wide power to reject proposed sureties as unfit and his discretion in the matter should not be lightly interfered with, yet it is certainly not intended by the Legislature that this power should be used merely to prevent a badmash giving security and ensure his being committed to prison. In the present case, as is clearly pointed out by my learned colleague, the rejection of many of the sureties infringes the provision in section 118 that no person shall be ordered to give security of a nature different from that specified in the order under section 112, or is based on an obviously unfair reason.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 592; 4 S. L. R. 18; 11 Cr. L. J. 407.

As regards the Magistrate's reliance on the statements of the Police Inspector as to some of the sureties being of bad character, I must confess that I share the doubt expressed by Coxe, J., in Kalu Mirsa v. Emperor (2) whether section 122 really contemplates an inquiry in the form of a judicial proceeding at all. I am bound, however, by decisions of this Court to the contrary, and in any case I think it desirable that a Police Inspector, who makes statements of this kind, should do so on oath. Otherwise, the Magistrate's procedure does not seem open to objection, as he allowed the sureties concerned to answer the Inspector. It would, however, have been better if he had checked the Inspector's statement in regard to Jhamanmal in the manner in which he says it could easily be done.

I concur with my learned colleague that the order, under section 112, that the sureties should be "of a standing not inferior to the applicants", is not unreasonable or so vague as to be unenforceable, as conten ed by applicant's Counsel. But the learned Magistrate has clearly gone beyond a reasonable and proper interpretation of this condition.

Order reversed.

Procedure—Confession by some of accused—Failure of Judge to record their conviction—Conviction along with others—Irregularity, effect of

If some of the accused in a Sessions trial plead guilty to the charge, their conviction should be recorded then and there, but if the Sessions Judge convicts them after he has taken evidence against the other accused and does not take into account their confession in passing sentence upon the others, he commits only a curable irregularity.

Criminal appeal from an order of the First Additional Sessions Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Surjan Singh, Jhandu Singh, Thakuri Singh, Lakhpat Singh, Kallu and Babu Singh appeal against their conviction of an offence of dacoity under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code and the sentences passed upon them. In their petitions of appeal they all assert that the Police have got up a false case against them, and one or two of them allege enmity against the village headman or village watchman. As a matter of fact Jhandu Singh and Kallu pleaded guilty in the Court of Sessions and have been formally convicted on their own plea of guilty. The learned Sessions Judge has committed an irregularity of procedure, in that he went on with the trial and did not record the conviction of Jhandu Singh and Kallu until after he had taken the whole of the evidence and was passing judgment in respect of all the accused persons together. He had a discretion either to accept or not to accept the plea of guilty entered by Jhandu Singh and Kallu. If he desired to hear the whole of the evidence in the case, in order to satisfy himself that these men as well as the other accused persons were really guilty, or in order to enable him to form a satisfactory opinion as to the gravity of the offence committed and the nature of the sentences required, he was perfectly entitled to refuse to act upon the plea of guilty and to proceed with the trial as against all the accused persons. If, however, his intention, was to accept the plea of guilty entered by Jhandu Singh and Kallu, he should have convicted them at once, and whether or not he deferred sentence until after he had heard the evidence, he should have proceeded with the trial as against the remaining four accused persons only. If the learned Sessions Judge had taken into account the confessions made by Jhandu Singh and Kallu as against the remaining appellants, I should have felt it necessary to order a new trial so far as those four appellants are concerned; but I see that the Sessions Judge, although his procedure was somewhat irregular, has been careful not to refer to the confessions of Jhandu Singh and Kallu as implicating any of their co-accused. I have examined the evidence against each of the appellants, which has been carefully summed up by the learned Sessions Judge, and I have no doubt that he was right in convicting all of them. I dismiss their appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 517—Property attached under s. 145—Cancelment of order—Disposal of property—Proper order—Practice.

Where, after attaching certain properties under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the order was on inquiry cancelled on the ground that there was no immediate danger of a breach of the peace:

Held, that in such a case the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to direct that the attached properties should be delivered to one of the parties, as that would be in effect deciding the question at issue between the parties, and that he should keep them or their sale-proceeds, if perishable, in deposit until one of the parties establishes its right in a Civil Court.

Quære:—Whether section 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies to such cases?

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Vellore, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 10 of 1914.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—In this case the Magistrate, after taking action under section 145 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, attached the property in dispute (certain trees) and had the produce collected and kept in custody of the Village Officers. Subsequently he came to the conclusion that there was no danger of a breach of the peace, and cancelled his preliminary order and released the attachment. The question of disposal of the collected produce then had to be decided; and the Magistrate directed that it should be delivered over to one of the contesting parties, the land pattadars, on the ground that the accessories relating to land must be presumed to follow the principal.

This is, in effect, a decision of the question at issue between the parties, after the Magistrate had cancelled his proceedings and declined to inquire into the said question.

The Public Prosecutor argues that the Magistrate is entitled to pass such an order under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Even if this be so, it is an order subject to revision by this Court. The only proper course for the Magistrate to take under the circumstances recited above was to retain the produce in the custody of the Village Officers until one party or the other obtained an order of a Civil Court in its favour. Of course, if the property were perishable or difficult to keep in safe custody, it might be sold and the sale-proceeds kept in deposit pending the same event.

The order of the Magistrate is hereby cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order to prosecute—Charge to be clearly specified—Power of Magistrate to order prosecution under s. 182, Indian Penal Code.

An order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, should specify clearly the exact charges against the accused.

The mere fact that no sanction is necessary for a prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code, does not deprive a Court of jurisdiction to order that prosecution under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

Report against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tando.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—The learned Sessions Judge asks us to set aside the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on the following grounds. The first is that the false information in respect of which the prosecution of Khubomal has been ordered falls under section 182, Indian Penal Code, and not under section 211, Indian Penal Code, the section under which he has been sent for trial. Assuming that this view is correct, still we do not think that there is any sufficient ground for our interference in revision. Section 476 empowers a Court to act under that section in respect of "any offence referred to in section 195 and * and brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." Section 182, Indian Penal Code, is referred to in section 195 and the alleged offence (whether it falls under section 182 or section 211, Indian Penal Code) was brought to the Magistrate's notice in a regular trial before him. The mere fact, therefore, that no sanction of the Court is required for Khubomal's prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code, does not deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to order that prosecution under section 476.

We also think that the question, whether the case falls under section 211 or section 182, Indian Penal Code, (if the information given by Khubomal is proved to be false) is one which is best left to the trying Magistrate, who can under section 238, Criminal Procedure Code, convict under section 182, Indian Penal Code, though the accused may be only charged under section 211, Indian Penal Code, for as ruled in Bhikterum v. Heera Kolita (1) and Emperor v. Sarada Prosad Chatterjee (2) an offence under section 211 includes an offence under section 182. It is also better to proceed in the first instance under section 211, Indian Penal Code, because if it were eventually held that the case really fell under that section, a conviction under section 182, Indian Penal Code, might be upset merely on the ground that section 211, Indian Penal Code, and not section 182, was the appropriate section under which to frame a charge, cf. Agaya Tatoba Munde v. Emperor (3). As stated in Rayan Kutti v. Emperor (4), the main test whether a person makes a 'charge' within the meaning of section 211, Indian Penal Code, is, "does the person who makes the statement, which is alleged to constitute the 'charge,' do so with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion against the person against whom the statement is directed." This question of intention is one which in a case like this can only be properly determined after hearing evidence; and even if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has expressed the view that the aim of Khubomal was merely to have Shah Beg removed (though we do not think the Magistrate really means this), still that opinion is not conclusive.

The second ground, on which our interference is recommended, is that the prosecution under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of Khubomal's statements on oath, which are reproduced in the Magistrate's first order of 10th January 1914, is not likely to be successful. But we do not think the mere fact that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate called upon Shah Beg to enter on his defence in the other case is sufficient ground for this view; and if the charge of extortion against Shah Beg is proved to be false, the statement in question will almost inevitably also be false. As pointed out by the Sessions Judge, Khubomal cannot be charged under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of any statement contained in the petition, and the Magistrate presumably did not intend to prosecute him merely because his statements on oath were discrepant with a statement in the petition.

We, therefore, see no sufficient ground to interfere and direct that the record be returned to the Court concerned. We would, however, point out to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that his order under section 476 should have specified more clearly the exact charges against the accused, and not have left his meaning so much in doubt.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—I concur in the proposed order. Though I am not prepared to state as a general rule of universal application that an offence under section 211 includes an offence under section 182, there are Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the District Registrar of East Khandesh.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We desire to point out to the District Registrar in this case that he has no jurisdiction to make an order under section 476, because, as provided in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the District Registrar is not a "Court" and section 476 is so intimately connected with section 195 and is designed to serve a purpose so similar to that served by section 195 that we cannot doubt that what is declared not to be a "Court" for the purpose of section 195 is also not a Court for the purpose of section 476. We do not, however, interfere with the order for this reason that precisely the same practical result would be brought about by the presentation of a complaint of the offence to a Magistrate who has jurisdiction to inquire into it; or by the District Registrar as a Magistrate proceeding under sub-section (1), clause (c), of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Bad livelihood—General repute, evidence of, nature of.

Where security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, is taken from a person on the evidence of general repute only, that repute should be proved to be universal and there should be no doubt about it.

Therefore, where the only evidence against an accused is that of general repute and it is not universal, it is not safe to bind him over on such meagre and doubtful evidence.

Masti Khan v. Queen-Empress 2 P. R. 1897, Cr., followed.

Petition, under setion 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Muzaffargarh, dated the 7th April 1914, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Alipur, dated the 28th of February 1914, ordering the petitioner to furnish security and personal recognizance in the sum of Rs. 300 each to be of good behaviour for the period of one year or in default to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of Malak Ghauns Bakhsh, Honorary Magistrate, Alipur, calling upon the petitioner to furnish security for one year to be of good behaviour under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The order of the Magistrate was confirmed on appeal by the District Magistrate.

The petitioner, Jhanda Ram, is a goldsmith who, along with his brother, pays Rs. 20 income-tax. He lives in the town of Alipur and has a shop there. He has never been convicted of any offence, nor has he ever been tried in the Criminal Courts. Furthermore, no stolen property has ever been found in his house, and only on one occasion was his house searched in connection with a theft. It was so searched in connection with the theft of Lala Tirath Ram, Treasurer of Alipur, but the fact loses significance in the presence of evidence of Lala Tirath Ram himself, who says that he told the Police that he did not suspect Jhanda

In re SANGAPPA GADIGEPPA.

Ram and has testified to his good character. It does not appear that the petitioner was suspectd in any other case of theft, and the evidence against him is that of general repute only; and out of the prosecution witnesses, Asa Nand and Pallu Khan Zaildar were forced to admit in cross-examination that they knew nothing definite against him. On the other side, Lala Tirath Ram and others, including two income-tax paying shopkeepers, have given evidence that the petitioner is a man of good character. In Masti Khan v. Queen-Empress (1) it was held that "when security is taken from a man under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, on evidence of general repute only, that repute should be proved to be universal and there should be no doubt about it." Now, in the present case the only evidence against the petitioner is that of general repute and it is by no means universal, and, in my opinion, it is not safe to bind him over on such meagre and doubtful evidence. The revision is allowed and the order of the Magistrate calling upon him to execute a bond is set aside and he is discharged.

Revision allowed.

CRIMINAL REVISION APPLICATION No. 228 OF 1914.

September 30, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Heaton and Mr. Justice Shah.

In re SANGAPPA GADIGEPPA—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction, whether granted without application—Defect of procedure or form in granting sanction, effect of.

A Court can give a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code even if no application is made to the Court for it.

Per Shah, J.—Any defect of procedure or form in granting a sanction cannot convert the sanction into a complaint.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Khandesh.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and N. V. Gokhale, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is one of five cases in which the Collector gave what he considers a sanction in each case for the prosecution of certain persons for giving false evidence. The persons against whom these assumed sanctions were given appealed to the District Judge, and he held that in accordance with the terms of clause 7 of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code the appeal did lie to his Court. That view has not been contested here. The District Judge, however, also held that the writing given and signed by the Collector was not a sanction but was a complaint, and that he had no power to interfere. Against these five orders, the applicants have come to us in revision.

Except in one point I am unable to understand why these documents are not to be regarded as sanctions. In terms they are most definitely sanctions. They fulfil, so far as I can see, every single requirement of section 195. But apparently, it has been held elsewhere that a sanction presupposes an application. That appears to me to be departing outside the terms of section 195, and in this Court we have not acted on the assumption that a Court cannot give a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code if there does not happen to be an applicant. I think, therefore, that as a matter of law the District Judge is wrong, that these are sanctions, and that the District Judge must deal with these appeals according to law on the assumption that they are sanctions.

But I should like to add this. Having come to the conclusion that sanctions ought to be given, I think that the Collector acted precisely as he ought to act. We have often in this Court deprecated the giving of sanctions to private persons, because we know that in certain cases they are not used as they ought to be used, but are used for the most improper purpose and in a way which brings the administration of justice into contempt. We have often advocated that sanctions, when they are given, should be given to some responsible Government servant, and perhaps of all, the most appropriate is the one which, in this case, was chosen by the Collector; and that is the Government Pleader.

The appeals must be sent back to the District Judge to be disposed of by him according to law.

SHAH, J.—I agree. I desire to add that in these cases the Collector sanctioned the prosecution of the petitioners and that sanctions were drawn up as contemplated by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. I am unable to hold that the writing which purports to be a sanction under section 195 is defective in form. In my opinion the sanction is subject to no such infirmity as is mentioned in the order of the District Judge. In any event, it is quite clear that the document which purports to be a sanction is not a complaint within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. Assuming that the sanctions granted were open to any of the objections referred to by the District Judge, it would be no ground for holding that it is not a sanction. Any defect of procedure or form in granting a sanction cannot convert the sanction into a complaint.

December 23, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Robertson, Mr. Justice Kensington, Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Shah Din.

In the matter of MR. M., FIRST GRADE PLEADER OF THE CHIEF COURT, PUNJAB, LAHORE.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13 cl. (f), —Pleader retaining in his service suspected tout —Making false statement—Professional misconduct.

A Pleader, who after having given a very clear promise to the Bar Council to dismiss N, whose name had been entered in the list of suspected touts and to whom notice had been issued to show cause why he should not be proclaimed as a tout, retained N in his service and made a distinctly false promise in order to escape the further action of the Council and broke that promise, and subsequently when an inquiry was made from him, deliberately made a false statement, false to his knowledge, regarding the employment and notice, etc., of the dismissal of N, is guilty of professional misconduct under section 13, clause (f), of Act XVIII of 1879 and is liable to be either dismissed or suspended for a certain period.

Trial of a First Grade Pleader of the Chief Court under section 13, clause (f), of the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879.

Mr. Broadway, for the Crown.

Mr. Obedullah, for the Pleader.

FACTS.—In accordance with the following order of the Chief Judge an inquiry was held into the conduct of Mr. M—Pleader, by a Full Bench of four Judges:—

"I order an inquiry into the professional conduct of Mr. M—, a Pleader of this Court, upon the charges contained in the statement hereto annexed and I direct that the inquiry be held by a Bench consisting of three Judges of this Court on Friday the 25th of October, 1912."—Sd. A. Reid, Chief Judge.

By a subsequent order of the Chief Judge the Bench consisted of four Judges, Robertson, Kensington, Rattigan and Shah Din, Judges.

Notice was duly issued to Mr. M—to show cause why he should not be suspended or dismissed under section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, in respect of the following charges:—

"That you—

(a) knowing that, on the 7th December 1910, your application, to have one Nabi Bakhsh enrolled as your legal clerk, had been refused;

(b) having been informed, on the 9th May 1911, by the Bar Council that the said Nabi Bakhsh was a tout, and that a notice had been issued to him by the Registrar of the Chief Court to show cause why his name should not be placed on the list of touts;

(c) having represented on the same date to the Bar Council that the said Nabi Bakhsh was employed by you merely as a private or menial servant and had nothing to do with your legal work;

(d) having been informed by the Bar Council on the same date that your explanation was not considered satisfactory and that it was extremely undesirable that you should retain in your service, under any plea whatever, a man who was not a household servant and was professionally a lawyer's clerk and whose employment had been negatived; and

In the matter of MR. M., FIRST GRADE PLEADER.

(c) having promised on condition that the matter was abandoned to forthwith dismiss the said Nabi Bakhsh and not to employ him in any capacity, continued thereafter and till July 1911, to employ the said Nabi Bakhsh in the capacity of your legal clerk;

"(ii) that under the circumstances enumerated above you continued to retain the said Nabi Bakhsh in your service;

"(iii) that you made the following false statement in a letter, dated the 1st May 1912, to the Registrar, Chief Court:—

'The only thing I knew against him (Nabi Bakhsh) was a trivial conviction under section 504, Indian Penal Code, and a quarrelsome temper which gained him a host of enemies.'

"(iv) that you also falsely represented and suggested in the said letter that the said Nabi Bakhsh was not employed by you as your legal clerk."

At the inquiry Mr. Broadway, who appeared for the President of the Bar Council, was entrusted by the Court under rule XXI of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Volume III, page 69, with the conduct of the case against the Pleader, and Mr. M——was represented by Mr. Obedullah, Pleader. The evidence put forward for the parties was duly heard and considered and thereafter the Bench which heard the case passed the following ORDER.—"We should note that at the commencement of the 2nd day's hearing Mr. Obedulla, on behalf of Mr. M——, proposed to admit all the charges and to leave the case entirely in the hands of the Court. Upon inquiry from Mr. M——himself, however, it appeared that he was not prepared to accept his (Pleader's) advice and that such admissions as he was prepared to make were of a very qualified character. We preferred, therefore, to hear the case to the end, and the cross-examination of Mr. M——which was then proceeding was continued and finished. Mr. Obedullah, thereafter, addressed us on behalf of Mr. M——and orders were then passed upon the merits of the case as follows:—

We are all agreed upon what is to be done and upon what has been proved in this inquiry. It appears to us quite clear that as far back as August 1910, Mr. M——was brought into intimate connection with one Nabi Bakhsh, who had lately been convicted of the offence of cheating, he having falsely represented his employer, Mr. M——, to be the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, a Barrister in large practice. In the course of another case in 1909, it is also shown that Mr. M—— became fully aware that Nabi Bakhsh was strongly suspected of being a tout. In the face of that knowledge Mr. M——engaged Nabi Bakhsh as a Pleader's clerk or munshi and applied in the usual way for Nabi Bakhsh's name to be enrolled as such. After an inquiry from the Bar Committee this Court refused to enrol Nabi Bakhsh as a clerk and duly informed Mr. M——of the fact; and thereafter Mr. M——must be deemed to have known that Nabi Bakhsh was at any rate a suspected character. Notwithstanding this he continued to employ him, and from further evidence and from the statement made in the criminal case in which Nabi Bakhsh was charged with cheating, we hold that it is proved that Mr. M——was employing Nabi Bakhsh, at any rate outside the Court, in the way in which the legal practitioners usually employ their clerks. The charge is not, however, that he did employ him as a clerk after enrolment was refused by this Court, but of a different nature, and we need not, therefore, lay further stress upon this matter.

Certain statements made in the course of the trial of Nabi Bakhsh were admitted by both parties as evidence in this inquiry.

With regard to the first charge, it is shown to us on clear evidence, and admitted by Mr. M——himself, that in May 1911 he was summoned before the Bar Council and warned by them that Nabi Bakhsh was a tout and that his further employment of Nabi Bakhsh would compel the Bar Council to report the matter to the Judges of this Court. We find that Mr. M——thereupon, in consideration of the abstention of the Bar Council from reporting the matter to this Court and of their agreement to take up further action, gave a clear promise that he would forthwith dismiss Nabi Bakhsh from his employment. Mr. M——does not now deny this, but says that he had on 8th July given notice to Nabi Bakhsh to leave his employ. We find that he did not make any attempt to fulfil his promise and that Nabi. Bakhsh was still in his service in July 1911, and, as shown by the evidence on the record of the criminal case which has been admitted in this inquiry, Nabi Bakhsh was acting as an introducer of clients to him and doing other work usually done by a professional clerk. It was proved that Nabi Bakhsh himself took down the address of the client who was eventually complainant in that particular case, and that when it became necessary for Mr. M—— to return the fee which he had taken in the case which led to criminal proceedings against Nabi Bakhsh, the money was returned through Nabi Bakhsh. There is no evidence that Mr. M——had then formed any intention of dismissing Nabi Bakhsh. We are aware that he says now that he had already given him notice at the beginning of July last to leave at the end of July. We are unable to accept that statement. The position, therefore, is that Mr. M——, after having given a very clear promise to dismiss Nabi Bakhsh, whose name had been entered in the list of suspected touts and to whom notice had been issued to show cause why he should not be proclaimed as a tout, retained Nabi Bakhsh in his service, and that he made a distinctly false promise in order to escape the further action of the Bar Council. This is the first charge and we find it fully proved, and it is a very serious one indeed against a legal practitioner.

As regards the charges numbered (iii) and (iv), Mr. M——was asked in the letter addressed to him by the Registrar of this Court to explain his conduct with regard to the remarks made in the judgment recorded by Mr. Sheepshanks on the 19th of January 1912. In reply to this inquiry he stated in his letter, Exhibit F: "The only thing I knew against him was a trivial conviction under section 504, Indian Penal Code, and a quarrelsome temper which gained him a host of enemies." That statement is clearly untrue. We are convinced that at that time Mr. M——knew a great deal more against Nabi Bakhsh than what he now states as the minimum of his then knowledge. We, therefore, have it that Mr. M——in the first instance made a definite promise to escape further action of the Bar Council, and that he broke that promise, and subsequently when an inquiry was made from him that he deliberately made a false statement, false to his knowledge. We have not allowed his Counsel to discuss the question of the power of the Bar Council to give orders to members of the Bar regarding, e. g., the dismissal of an employee, because any such question is irrelevant to the charge in this case. But we have no hesitation in saying that the Judges are as a body resolved to do their best to support the Bar Council in all just and proper action taken by them for the maintenance of the integrity and the purity of the Bar.

We find Mr. M——guilty of the two charges dealt with above.

As to the question of sentence, it is very unpleasant to a Bench of this Court to have a member of the Bar brought before them for punishment for misconduct, but it is our duty, so far as in us lies, to maintain the character and position of the Bar and to do all in our power to keep up a high standard of conduct. At the same time this is the first case of the kind which has come before us and the sentence is, therefore, not made unduly severe. It is to be hoped, however, that no further cases will ever come before us. Should they do so it will be necessary to show greater severity.

Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, we order that Mr. M——'s license be suspended for six months from this date, 5th December 1912, under section 13, Act XVIII of 1879, clause (f).

The suspension of Mr. M——for six months from 5th December is to be notified in the Punjab Gazette in accordance with Order XXV, Chapter I, section 8, of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court Volume III.

In re VISA SAMTA—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 517—Complaint of theft dismissed—Dispute as to ownership of property—Order, proper form of.

Where a complaint of theft brought on behalf of a talukdar against his tenant in respect of some fallen trees which the tenant had cut down and taken is dismissed on the ground of uncertainty of ownership, the proper order to be passed with regard to the wood is that it should be sold, if it has not been already sold, and the proceeds should be retained by the Court until they are shown to be payable to one or other of the parties, either in virtue of a decree of Court or in virtue of an agreement amongst themselves.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Acting District Magistrate of Ahmedabad, in Miscellaneous Criminal Application No. 12 of 1914, confirming that of the Third Class Magistrate of Sanand.

Mr. H. V Divatia, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Complainant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Talati of a certain village on behalf of the talukdar brought a complaint of theft against one of the tenants of the talukdar in respect of some fallen trees which the tenant had cut down and taken. The trying Magistrate disposed of the matter in favour of the accused so far as the matter of the offence went. But he ordered the property (the wood) to be restored to the complainant. The matter came before the District Magistrate with reference to this order about the property. The District Magistrate at first said:—"In these circumstances I think it would have a salutary effect if I directed that the wood be sold and the proceeds credited in the treasury as a criminal deposit to be paid to such one of the parties who shall bring either a decree of a competent Court or a consent of all the other parties." However, he did not give effect to this intention. He had the matter argued before him, and then he decided, as appears from this part of his judgment: "On the whole, since I expect that in the event of a case being instituted in a Civil Court the talukdars would be adjudged to be the proprietors of the trees no great harm will be done by allowing the Magistrate's order to stand. I cannot, however, express too strongly my hope that the Sanand Magistrates will, in future, when criminal complaints are made of theft in cases where there is a bona fide dispute about property, and especially in the case of these trees at Garodia, dismiss the complaint under section 203." We think the District Magistrate is right in emphasizing the necessity for not treating cases of this kind as if they were criminal cases. By allowing the complainant to take the wood, however he has secured to him one of the chief advantages to be gained by this very bringing of the complaint which he so strongly deprecates. On the other hand, to allow the wood to be taken by the accused would be to disregard the only decision that there is on the question of ownership of the trees, that is, the decision arrived at by the Survey Settlement Officer that the talukdar is the owner.

We think that the order originally proposed by the District Magistrate is quite the best in this case. We cancel the order he has made and in its place make that order which the District Magistrate originally thought was the best, i. e., that the wood should be sold if it has not been already sold and the proceeds should be retained by the Court until they are shown to be payable to one or other of the parties, either in virtue of a decree of Court or in virtue of an agreement amongst themselves.

Order modified.

JELAGAN SUBRAMANIA NAIDU v. K. SINGARA MUDALI.

Affidavit sworn to before Head Clerk in absence of Nazir, admissibility of

An affidavit sworn to in the Court of a District Munsif is a declaration which a Court of Justice is bound to receive as evidence of the facts stated in it, and it has nonetheless this character because it was sworn to before the Head Clerk of the District Munsif's Court, who was performing the Deputy Nazir's duties during his absence under the District Munsif's order in accordance with section 24 of Act III of 1873.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Tinnevelly Division, in Case No. 53 of the Calendar for 1914.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The accused were convicted of offences punishable under sections 467, 471, 109 and 199, Indian Penal Code.

As regards sections 467, 471, and 109 there is no doubt that Exhibit B, a receipt purporting to have been signed by prosecution first witness, is a valuable security.

As regards section 199 Exhibit B2, the affidavit sworn to in the Court of the District Munsif, Koilpati, is a declaration which a Court of Justice is bound to receive as evidence of the facts stated in it and it was so received in the Subordinate Judge's disposal of prosecution first witness's execution petition. It had not the less this character, because it was sworn to before the Head Clerk of the District Munsif's Court, who was performing the Deputy Nazir's duties during his absence under the District Munsif's orders in accordance with section 24 of Act III of 1873.

On the merits we see no reason for dissent from the decision of the learned Sessions Judge, and the sentences call for no action.

The appeal is dimissed.

A. R. A. R. S. M. SOMASUNDARAM CHETTIAR, THROUGH HIS AUTHORISED AGENT A. R. A. R. S. M. MAYANDI CHETTIAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Promissory-note—Recital as to execution by three persons—Execution by two alone—Enforceability—Question of fact.

Where a bond, which contains a recital purporting to have been executed by three people, is executed by two persons alone the question whether such a bond can be enforced against the actual executants is one of fact, depending upon the circumstances of each case.

Where the executant agreed to be liable under the bond notwithstanding that another person mentioned in the bond as a co-executant did not sign it.

Held, that the bond was enforceable against the executant.

Sivasami Chetti v. Sevugan Chetti, 25 M. 389, 12 M. L. J. 17 and Krishnama Chariar v. Narasimha Chariar, 31 M. 114, 3 M. L. T. 308, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 562 of 1909, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 29 of 1908.

FACTS.—The suit was upon a promissory note executed by the defendants. The bond recited that it was to be executed by the defendants and one Desikachariar for the balance of the amounts due under three other bonds executed by the 1st defendant and others. It was, however, signed only by the defendants. The latter pleaded that the suit bond was handed over to the plaintiff as an escrow and was not intended to be enforced against them unless Desikachariar also joined in its execution. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the document was not enforceable even against the defendants. On appeal the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding that the appellant (1st defendant) agreed to be liable under the bond even though Desikachariar did not join in its execution. The 1st defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant:—The document contains a recital as to its execution by three people. Two alone have signed. It is upon the plaintiff to prove that the bond was intended to be enforced against the actual executants. The plaintiff himself does not go into the box and the notices issued clearly proceed on the basis that the bonds, in renewal of which the suit bond was executed, were not cancelled. This shows that the suit document is incomplete and, therefore, not enforceable.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents.—Whether the bond was intended to be enforced even though the other executants did not join in its execution, is a question of intention. The defendant who alleges a condition as attached to the document must prove the same. The Subordinate Judge has found that no such condition existed.

JUDGMENT.—The question whether when a document, which recites that it was executed by A, B and C, is executed by A and A alone, whether in such a case, A and B agreed to be liable under it only if C also joined in executing it, is a question of fact to be decided in the circumstances of each particular case. Sivasami Chetti v. Sevugan Chetti (1) and Krishnama Chariar v. Narasimha Chairar (2). In this particular case, the lower Appellate Court has after considering the circumstances and probabilities arrived at the conclusion that the 1st defendant (the appellant before us) agreed to be liable under Exhibit A, notwithstanding that one Desikachariar mentioned in the recital as a co-executant did not sign it. Though it must be admitted that the judgment is not quite satisfactory, we cannot say that there is no evidence on which the lower Appellate Court could have arrived at the conclusion at which it arrived. The plaintiff's 1st witness says that he made a demand on the 1st defendant for money due under the particular promissory note and that the 1st defendant promised to pay up soon, thus impliedly admitting that his liability under it was not made conditional on Desikachariar's joining in its execution. We are not satisfied that the Subordinate Judge has misconstrued the documentary evidence in any material particular.

(1) 25 M. 389; 12 M. L. J. 17.
(2) 31 M. 114; 3 M. L. T. 308.

We, therefore, dismiss this second appeal with costs.

PERUMAL CHETTI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1, 7 TO 10, 5 AND 6 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, sub-s. iv (cc) —Landlord and tenant—Suit by former for ejectment and rent—Stamp duty paid on one year's rent—Competency of Court to inquire into title—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882, ss. 58 and 83—Mortgage by conditional sale—Sale and rental agreement—Document of even date containing an undertaking to reconvey under certain conditions—Deposit in Court—Refusal to receive money—Whether subsisting relation of landlord and tenant affected by deposit.

Where in a suit for ejectment and arrears of rent by certain landlords against their tenants, the plaintiffs pay stamp duty calculated upon one year's rent only under section 7, (XI) (cc) of the Court Fees Act, of 1870, the Court will not go into the question of title.

Where, in a suit by landlords against their tenants for ejectment and for arrears of rent, the tenants pleaded that the transaction between the parties was only a mortgage by conditional sale, that they had deposited the mortgage amount in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and that as the plaintiffs (the mortgagees) had refused to receive the same from the Court, they were debarred from suing for any rent subsequent to the date of such deposit and from ejecting the defendants:

Held, that the mere deposit of the amount in Court did not put an end to the already subsisting relation of landlord and tenant between the parties and that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for possession and rent.

Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati, 34 C. 228; 5 C. L. J. 192, and Rukhminibai v. Venkatesh, 31 B. 527; 9 Bom. L. R. 958, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 162 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Salem, in Original Suit No. 19 of 1910.

FACTS.—The suit was by certain landlords against their tenants for ejectment, on the ground that the term of the tenancy had expired, and for the recovery of the arrears of rent due by the latter. The defences were that the plaintiffs were only mortgagees by conditional sale of the suit land, that the defendants had deposited in Court the mortgage amount long before the date of suit and that as the plaintiffs had refused to receive the same, they were not entitled either to eject the defendants or to recover rent accrued due after the date of the deposit. This question turned upon the construction of three deeds: (1) an out and out sale in favour of the plaintiffs, (2) an agreement of even date by the plaintiffs in favour of their vendors undertaking to reconvey the land on their compliance with certain conditions and (3) a rental agreement by the vendors in favour of the plaintiffs, on which the present suit was based. The Courts below, holding that the transaction amounted to a sale with an agreement for re-purchase, decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The defendants then preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. V. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants:—The terms of the deeds support the position that the transaction is only a mortgage by conditional sale. Kalka Prasad v. Bhuiyan Din (1), Mutha Venkatachalapati v. Pyanda Venkatachalapati (2), Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (3) and Ramayya v. Krishnamma (4).

The mortgage amount having been deposited in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and the mortgagees having refused to receive the same, they are not entitled either to eject the defendants or to sue them for rent accruing subsequent to such deposit. The mortgage relation has become extinct.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents:—It is unnecessary to consider whether the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsisted or not. The suit is on a rental agreement executed in plaintiffs' favour, and they are entitled to possession and rents so long as the agreement remained in force. Mere deposit in Court of the mortgage amount does not put an end to the subsisting relationship of the parties.

MATTE SARAYYA v. VEPPARATHI VYDYANATHAM.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought under section 7, clause XI (cc), of the Court Fees Act, on payment of the Court-fees upon one year's rent. Therefore the title of the plaintiffs need not be gone into in this case. We express no opinion whether the documents, Exhibits A, B and I, constitute a sale with a condition to re-purchase or a mortgage by conditional sale. We are not to be understood as agreeing with the conclusion at which the Courts below have arrived upon this point. It is argued that as the full amounts mentioned in Exhibits A and B have been deposited in Court, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for rent. As was pointed out in Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (5) and in Rukhminibai v. Venkatesh (6), mere deposit of the amount does not put an end to the relationship already subsisting. Even if the plaintiffs were only mortgagees so long as Exhibit B subsists, they can sue for possession and for rent under it. We agree with the decisions of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts and hold that the payment into Court has not taken away from the plaintiffs the right to sue for possession and rent under Exhibit B. We uphold the decree solely upon this ground. We think this is a fit case in which the parties should bear their own costs in this Court.

The second appeal is dismissed.

The title-deed for an inam orginally granted to a dancing woman for performing certain services in a temple was issued in her name by the Government. She subsequently alienated the inam. The services having been neglected, the trustees of the temple sued for possession of the inam:

Held, that the suit by the trustees was not maintainable.

Pakkiam Pillay v. Seetharama Vadhyar, 14 M. L. J. 134, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in Appeal Suit No. 103 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Peddapur, in Original Suit No. 442 of 1909.

FACTS.—The land in suit was originally granted to a dancing woman for performing certain services in a temple. At the time of the Inam Settlement, the title-deed was issued in her name subject to the condition of performing the services in question. She subsequently alienated the inam by way of mortgage to a stranger, who obtained a decree against her and in execution thereof purchased the properties in Court auction and got into possession of the same. The trustee of the temple then sued the purchaser for possession of the inam, alleging that the services had been neglected. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff was not the dharmakartha of the temple. On appeal the Subordinate Juge held the plaintiff was the dharmakartha and decreed the suit. The purchaser then appealed to the High Court.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellant:—The inam in question was not granted to the temple but was conferred on the dancing woman. The dancing woman and not the temple was the owner. The inam title-deed also stood in the name of the dancing woman. The interest which the temple had in the proper performance of the services in question was not proprietary interest in the inam, as the Government and not the temple was interested in the reversion. If services are not properly performed, the temple authorities could obtain redress by representing the matter to the Government. The suit is, therefore, not maintainable.

Mr. P. M. Srinivasa Iyengar, for Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Respondent:—The temple being interested in the performance of the services, the plaintiff was entitled to see that the inam was not improperly alienated so as to interfere with such performance. This interest was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to sue for possession of the inam, which had been alienated in this case.

JUDGMENT.—There is nothing here to suggest that the inam was granted by the temple authorities. Exhibit D is the title-deed given by the Government to the person doing service in the temple, and makes the title conditional on the fulfilment of the terms of the grant.

There is no ground on which the temple trustees can intervene to prevent the alienation of the inam. No doubt the Government might resume and re-grant it if moved to do so, and it may be that if the present servant who is responsible for the alienation were removed from office, her successor in the office could recover the inam on the principle enunciated in Pakkiam Pillay v. Seetharama Vadhyar (1). But the trustees cannot recover possession of the land in the present suit, and we must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the suit.

Parties pay their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Where a prior mortgagee is made a party to a suit on a subsequent mortgage and allows an ex parte decree to be passed against him, he is not precluded from having his right as a prior mortgagee declared under Order XXXIV, rule 12, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

An application by such a prior mortgagee to prevent execution being taken out against the mortgaged properties comes under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, being a question between the parties.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Second Court, Gya, in the matter of Mortgage Execution Case No. 68 of 1913.

Babu Kulwant Sahay, for the Petitioners.

Moulvi Khursid Hussain, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the decree-holder before us obtained a Rule which arises as follows.

He obtained an ex parte decree in a mortgage suit and subsequently obtained a final decree. One of the parties to that suit was the present opposite party, who was joined as having an interest in the land. He now comes in and states that he has the interest of a mortgagee prior to the decree-holder. The Court below has made an order under Order XXXIV, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, declaring his interest as a prior mortgagee.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that this order was one which the Court had no authority to make, for as the petitioner was a party to the suit he ought to have declared his prior mortgage in the suit, and not having done so, the decree is binding on him and constitutes res judicata as far as this issue is concerned; and it is contended that in his present application he is asking to have that decree to some extent set aside, which cannot be done except in review. This contention seems to us one which cannot prevail. In the first place, we consider that this is an order properly made under Order XXXIV, rule 12. There is in that rule nothing to prevent its application to a party in a suit. No issue was raised in the suit by the plaintiff as to the interest of the defendant and the matter was not brought by him before the Court for adjudication. The remedy of the present petitioners seems to lie under this rule. We also consider that the present matter is one which in fact arises under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, being a question between the parties as it relates to execution. It is now suggested that it does not relate to execution, but that it is an application to vary the decree. It, however, arises in the course of execution. The object of the application is to prevent execution being taken out against certain property; and under these circumstances we hold that it is an application under section 47; and we discharge the rule with costs, hearing fee being assessed at 2 (two) gold mohurs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 134, 137—Principal and surety—Omission to pursue suit against principal on account of difficulty in service—Striking off his name—Surety not discharged—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 5, O. XXIII, r. 1, applicability of.

Where in a suit against several defendants, there is some difficulty in serving one of them and hence his name is struck off, if not at the request, at least with the consent of the plaintiff, the striking out of the name, even before a year has elapsed, would be a procedure under Order IX, rule 5, rather than Order XXIII, rule 1.

In a suit against the principal debtor and surety, the mere omission of the plaintiff to pursue his suit against the principal debtor with the result that his name is struck off and the suit dismissed against him under Order IX, rule 5, does not discharge the surety, provided the suit be still in time against the principal.

Civil application under extraordinary jurisdiction, from the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 3190 of 1913.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the two defendants on a promissory note. The 2nd defendant pleaded that he was a surety. There was some difficulty in serving the 1st defendant, and we gather from the record that his name was struck out. As a year had not elapsed, presumably this was done, if not at the request, at least with the consent of the plaintiff. The defendant No. 2 then contended that as the act of the plaintiff in having the defendant No. 1's name thus struck off operated as a complete discharge of the principal debtor, he, the surety, was likewise discharged and the suit must be dismissed.

The learned Judge who tried this suit as a Small Cause Court suit was of opinion that this contention was sound and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

We think that the striking off of the defendant No. 1's name was a procedure under Order IX, rule 5, rather than Order XXIII, rule 1. And all the authorities in all the Courts of India who have had this question under consideration, although they differed upon another point, are in agreement that the mere omission of the plaintiff to pursue his suit against one of the defendants with the result that that defendant's name is struck off and the suit dismissed against him under Order IX, rule 5, does not discharge the surety, provided the suit be still in time against the principal. That being so and confining our decision to that ground alone, we think that the order of the learned Judge below dismissing the suit was wrong.

Even were that not so, it would still be a question whether, in view of the form of the suit, the Judge ought to have taken it for granted, as he appears to have done, that the plaintiff was suing the 2nd defendant merely as a surety. If, in fact, he was suing him as a principal, none of the considerations upon which the dismissal of the suit has been based would apply at all.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the learned Judge below and remand the case to him for trial upon the merits.

Costs will be costs in the cause.

and had his claims at the time of the Settlement for large areas besides the sir dismissed in default was in possession of some old groves. These groves having subsequently been brought under cultivation were recorded as land held bila tasfia, and the landlord sued for assessment of rent on that land:

Held, that the provisions of section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act applied to the land in suit, inasmuch as it could reasonably be inferred that the possession of the grove was not that of an ordinary tenant whose rights come to an abrupt conclusion when the land ceases to be grove.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 26th May 1913.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M. (April 8th, 1914.)—The suit was for assessment of rent on four bighas and nine biswas of land recorded as held bila tasfia by the respondent, who has a decree as an under-proprietor for certain other land in this village. The Court of first instance held that the respondent had proved some special rights in Nos. 192, 246, 252 and 305/2, and on that ground dismissed the claim for these numbers but assessed rents on all the other numbers. In appeal the Deputy Commissioner held that the respondent had rights of a proprietary nature in Nos. 192, 245 and 246/1 and accordingly dismissed the suit for them. He held that the suit must fail for the whole of No. 245, because the respondent had rights of some sort in an undivided part of the number. The decision of the Court of first instance as regards Nos. 252 and 305/2 was reversed and rent assessed on these numbers. The respondent has filed an appeal against the order assessing rent as a whole and has specially made claims in regard to Nos. 252 and 305/2. I have first to take the zemindar's appeal into consideration. The grounds on which the Deputy Commissioner and the Court of first instance both found that the respondent had rights of a proprietary character in these Nos. 192, 245 and 246/1 are that a suit had been brought by the proprietor for the time being against the respondent in the Civil Court for possession of certain lands amongst which these numbers were included and that this suit was dismissed in regard to these numbers. The Deputy Commissioner lays down that the suit was for proprietary possession, that it was resisted on the ground of adverse proprietary possession and that it must, therefore, be held that adverse proprietary possession was established. I have carefully examined the decision in that case. I do not regard the defence in the civil suit as claim of adverse proprietary possession at all. There could in a taluka be no such adverse independent possession. The defendant, now respondent, alleged, it appears to me, no more than under-proprietary rights: but, as a matter of fact, there was no finding whatsoever that he had under-proprietary rights. The finding simply was that the land was grove and it was on this ground that the suit for possession against him was dismissed. It would have been dismissed even if he had simply the rights of a tenant in the groves. The finding of the Deputy Commissioner that the respondent has been found to have adverse proprietary possession in regard to these numbers must certainly be reversed, but there appears to me to be every reason to believe that the respondent's possession was not that of an ordinary statutory tenant. He had got a decree for sir lands and he had claimed various large areas besides the sir, all such claims at Settlement having been dismissed one after another in default, but he was an old proprietor and had under-proprietary rights in the village and these were his old groves. I consider that it may be inferred that his possession of the groves was not that of an ordinary tenant whose rights come to an abrupt conclusion when the land ceases to be grove. In these circumstances I think that it may be held that section 107H applies to Nos. 192, 245 and 246/1 and that rent may be assessed under that section at the revenue plus twenty per cent. malikana.

As regards Nos. 252 and 305/2, the appeal of the defendant must, I think, be dismissed. He relies on the decision of Mr. Brownrigg dismissing a suit for arrears of rent in regard to these numbers, but that suit was dismissed on the ground that the proprietor's own title was doubtful, and not on the ground that the defendant had any rights whatsoever. Mr. Brownrigg's decision does not demonstrate that defendant's possession of Nos. 252 and 305/2 is in any way different from his possession of the other numbers on which rent was assessed. The result is that I modify the orders of the lower Courts and direct that rent be assessed as above mentioned on these numbers and dismiss both appeals as regards all other numbers. Costs on parties.

TYRRELL, J. M.—I concur with the proposed order.

Appeal partly allowed.

BASANGAUDA NAGANGAUDA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BASANGAUDA DODANGAUDA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara School—Succession—Brother's widow excludes first cousin.

Under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law the widow of a brother would be the next reversioner in preference to the first cousins.

The only essentials of a good legal acceleration are that it should be to the next in reversion and that it should cover the whole life-estate. No consent of reversioners is needed, still less any proof of necessity.

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Bijapur, in Appeal No. 11 of 1912, varying the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge at Bagalkot, in Civil Suit No. 151 of 1910.

This appeal first came up for hearing before Beaman and Hayward, JJ., who differed in their opinions and then it was put up before Sir Basil Scott, C. J., for decision.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the following judgments of Beaman and Hayward, JJ.

BEAMAN, J.—The point of greatest importance and difficulty in this appeal is whether Timawa, widow of Kardepa, or the first cousins of the deceased Dodangauda stand nearest in the reversion.

Dodangauda and Kardepa were undivided brothers. Kardepa died, leaving him surviving his widow, Timawa. Then Dodangauda died and his widow Doddawa took her life estate. She professed to give away the whole of it in 1883 to her deceased husband's first cousins, the defendants. Twenty-six years later she adopted the plaintiff. Timawa, the widow of Kardepa, is still alive.

The defendants rely on the doctrine of acceleration which may now be taken to be established law. I shall have to say a few words upon that later. Here it is sufficient to state that true acceleration can only occur between the tenant of the life-estate and the nearest reversioner. Therefore if Timawa was the nearest reversioner in 1883 there could have been no acceleration in that year in favour of the defendants, and the plaintiff would, in the absence of any other defence, be entitled to succeed.

It may be noted here, though this fact falls more properly to be considered in discussing the doctrine of acceleration, that the life-estate comprised certain vatan property as well as other non-vatan immoveable property. It is not disputed that under the law of vatans, the defendants were the nearest reversioners to the vatan lands. So that in respect to so much of the claim, if the acceleration be therwise good, there can be no doubt but that the plaintiff must fail. The larger portion of the life-estate, however, is not vatan land; and the decisions of both Courts below are based on the assumption that Timawa, and not the defendants, was the nearest reversioner. In my opinion, although two learned Judges below appear to have taken it for granted that she was and early in the argument here Pleaders on both sides were disposed to support that view, she is not.

It is contended for the plaintiff that the decision in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1) concludes the point. That case was confirmed by the Judicial Committee, and undoubtedly settled the law it professed to lay down. The question is, whether that or any other authority goes the length of holding that the widow of a brother is nearer in the reversion than first cousins? It can only be by an extension, of any actual decision, in other words, by taking the supposed principle of such a case as that of Mankuvarbai and extending it to the case before us, that this can be affirmed. It is, therefore, necessary to be sure that we are rightly apprehending the principle underlying the decision in Mankuvarbai's case (1) before saying that it not only can, but must, be extended to cover this case.

What was decided in Mankuvarbai's case (1)? This and this only. Where there is competition between reversioners after the extinction of all designated heirs, the widow of a gotraja sapinda excludes male gotraja sapindas in a remoter line. I can accept that at once as undoubtedly the law of this Presidency, whether really good Hindu Law or not, and yet hold, for reasons which will be fully stated, that the case before us is not necessarily governed by that decision or by the principle upon which it is based. In a much later case decided by Telang, J., probably the greatest Hindu Judge who has sat on this Bench, it was held that where there is a competition between reversioners after the exhaustion of all designated heirs, the widow of a gotraja sapinda is postponed to any male in the same line. And that decision was followed and explained in a very recent case, Kashibai v. Sitabai (2), decided by the present learned Chief Justice. Almost synchronously a Bench of this Court consisting of my brother Hayward and myself decided a similar case, Khandacharya v. Govindacharya (3), on exactly the same principle and professedly following Rachava v. Kalingapa (4) and Kashibai v. Sitabai (2).

I rely upon those three cases. I say that so far as the law permitted after the decision in Mankuvarbai's case (1), they correctly lay down the Hindu Law applicable to such facts as those before us, and that the principle of those cases is the principle which ought always to be applied.

That principle does not, in any way, conflict with the actual decision in Mankuvarbai's case(1), though it is open to argument whether there are not dicta in the judgment of West, J., and afterwards in the judgment of the Judicial Committee, which imply the extension of the reason of that case as far as the plaintiff would have it extended in the case before us.

The point really lies in a very narrow compass. I do not propose to attempt any elaborate examination of the Hindu law books, or any nice criticism of the textual commentaries with which the subject has been encumbered. But a careful critical study of West, J.'s judgment in Mankuvarbai's case (1) and of the judgment of the Judicial Committee confirming it, shows that in spite of the extraordinarily learned and exhaustive examination of the whole available Hindu Law, the conclusion rested finally on what was held to be an established custom rather than any authoritative deduction from the words of the Hindu law-givers and commentators.

The latter were found to be so nebulous, contradictory, inconsistent and unconvincing as to afford but little solid ground upon which to base a decision either way. I understand that the custom was made out from the answers of local Shastris to questions propounded to them by the authors of West and Buhler. It is possible that such answers may have truly represented established local customs; but in strictness they can hardly amount to what the law ordinarily requires as proof of custom. They are in reality no more than the dogmatic interpretation by a body of unknown persons of certain ancient writings with which they were supposed to be familiar. In dealing with this point their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say, obiter, that the Shastris have gone so far as to declare that a sister-in-law excludes first cousins. As that is precisely the case before us, the plaintiff naturally relies most strongly on this passage. It is, however, as I have just said, purely obiter. And it is noteworthy that in fact the Shastris consulted were not unanimous on this point. One decided that the sister-in-law did, another that she did not, exclude a first cousin. And apart from that there is, as far as I know, no authority whatever, either in the accredited law books or in decided cases, for the proposition on which the plaintiff's success in this case must depend. So far from it being a proved custom in this Presidency that a sister-in-law excludes a first cousin, I am moderately confident that no such rule of succession has ever been alleged, much less proved, in our Courts. The textual basis of the rule laid down in Mankuvarbai's case(1) appears to have been chiefly a passage in Brihaspati. The reason contained in the passage is so childish and fanciful, and would lead, if pushed to its logical conclusion, to such absurdities, that it is no wonder Telang, J., declined to adopt it, saying that it looked, as indeed it does, like proving too much. The rule in Mankuvarbai's case (1), which must, I think, be regarded as something of a judge-made innovation, could hardly be made good by any mere collation of the recognised sources of Hindu Law. But in applying that law, it was held that a custom had grown up in the Bombay Presidency, which warranted laying down the broad rule that, as between competing reversioners, the widow of a gotraja sapinda took in preference to a male gotraja sapinda in a remoter line. Had the point needed decision at the time, it is possible that West, J., would have extended the rule so as to give preference to the widow of a nearer male gotraja sapinda over a remoter male sapinda in the same line. But Telang, J., refused to do this, holding that where the competitors were in the same line, sex and not mere proximity was the determining consideration, and that any male in the same line excluded the widow of any other male, although the latter, had he been living, would have been nearer to the propositus, and so the next reversioner. It is only by taking the reasoning or parts of the reasoning in West, J.'s judgment, by saying that it in effect establishes this proposition, that the widow of a deceased gotraja sapinda fills her husband's place in all heirship competitions, that the plaintiff can hope to succeed in his contention that Timawa was a nearer reversioner than the defendants. But that is not the law. Since Bachava's case (4) it cannot be argued that greater propinquity in the same line makes a widow nearer in reversion than a male in the same line. So that the only real question arising on the cases, is what is meant by "the line?" In my opinion all the cases are here in agreement. There is not one in which where the question was, which of two persons claiming to be reversioners is entitled to the estate, the line was started within the group of designated heirs, or as it is often called the "compact series."

No support is to be found anywhere for such a method, except the conflicting replies of the local Shastris, unsupported by reason or text.

It appears to me to be too clear to admit of doubt that where we have to look for the next reversioner, we must start the line outside the group of designated heirs. Within that group there could, of course, never be any conflict between the widow of a designated heir and a designated heir. It is only after the exhaustion of the designated heirs, that the search for the nearest reversioner begins. The plaintiff's contention appears to be, that although the statement just made is self-evident, yet where the compact series is exhausted, the first line must be started from the father, not from the grandfather of the propositus. If that were done here, the line would begin with the father of Kardepa and Dodangauda, himself one of the designated heirs, within the compact series, and, of course, the widow of either of his sons would be in the line, while his nephews would not. It will be seen that whether by mere accident, or because the learned Judges responsible for those judgments rejected any such method, this has never once been done. The language of Telang, J., is particularly clear on the point. The line is to start in the first instance from the paternal grandfather. When that line is exhausted without yielding a reversioner, a fresh line is to be started from the paternal great-grandfather and so on. In the case which Hayward, J., and I decided, we followed this rule, and, speaking for myself, I am sure I did so because it did not occur to me as arguable that a line laid out for the purpose of finding a reversioner could properly be started within the compact series. This too was what was done, and I cannot believe by pure accident, in all the other cases. But it might be said of them that there was no surviving widow of any male within the compact series, while in Khandacharya's case (3) there was. Still in that case the Court started the line not from the father of Venkatesh, the deceased propositus, but from his paternal grandfather Venkatesh I. Even so the widow of his brother came nearer in the reversion than second cousins. But had there been first cousins in the competition, it is plain upon the principle stated in the judgment that the result would have been different and that the widow would then have been postponed. If in the present case the line be started from the paternal grandfather, it is clear that Timawa is not only in the same line as the defendants but in precisely the same degree of propinquity. The latter fact is unimportant now. If she represents a deceased male gotraja sapinda in the same line, then she comes last of that line and any male found in it excludes her. The defendants are in the line, and, in my opinion, they clearly exclude her. Nothing in the decided cases compels me to extend the rule, as I am asked to extend it here, so as to exclude the first cousins in favour of the sister-in-law. I think that doing so would be entirely opposed to the sense of the Hindus of this Presidency and the spirit of the old Hindu Law. Women are probably much more favoured already in this Presidency under the liberal decisions of this High Court than elsewhere in India; but I find it difficult to believe that there is really anything in the recognized Hindu scriptures or the authoritative commentaries on them to warrant the proposition for which the plaintiff is now contending. If the rule really rested on the extravagant texts of Brishaspati, then there would be no need to search along any line for the next reversioner, for neither of the brothers Kardepa or Dodangauda are dead, each is only half dead, and no reversion has opened.

But if there is a question of reversion to be investigated, it pre-supposes the complete exhaustion of the compact series and places the starting point of the search outside that series, invariably, as Telang, J., states, first at the paternal grandfather. Let that be done here and it will be seen at once that Timawa was not the next reversioner in 1883 while the defendants were.

The doctrine of acceleration, very clearly stated in the judgment of Lord Morris, in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (5), would seem to have been almost invariably entangled in subsequent decisions of the Indian Courts with the altogether different doctrine of alienation. Briefly, Hindu widows in enjoyment of life-estates may not alienate any part of the immoveable property, except for legal necessity. Analysis will show that this is the single recognized justification, although the language of Judges often obscures it and suggests that pious motives may be substituted for necessity and may validate even larger alienations and freer powers to alienate than could be seriously considered on a narrow ground of mere secular necessity. Yet whether the necessity be temporal or spiritual, so sought for as legal justification for these alienations, it will always be seen on close examination to be necessity and nothing else. Long ago the legal notion got abroad and soon received judicial sanction that the consent of all the nearest (in order) reversioners was good proof of the necessity for the alienation. If there had been no necessity, it was argued, the reversioners would never have consented to lose their expectant rights. Here it is to be observed that in applying this doctrine, it is not the consent of the reversioners, per se, which makes good what would otherwise be a bad alienation by a life tenant, but the presumed, though undiscovered, necessity of which that consent is good proof. If there are on the date of the alienation three reversioners in this order, A, B, C, and the alienation be made to B, A consenting, then it may be presumed that in A's judgment there was a true necessity for the alienation. In a less degree too, of course, if C consents; for, although C is last in the reversion, it is quite possible that but for the alienation to B, he might have been the nearest reversioner at the termination of the life-estate. But no inference of this kind could reasonably be drawn from the consent of B to an alienation to himself. Most men will consent to receiving a benefit, and in those cases giving this "consent" (which in this connection hardly has any meaning) would not, in fact or at the bar of reason and common sense, point towards the existence of any necessity. A great majority of cases falling under this doctrine are, however, cases of alienations to outsiders. If the consent of all reversioners be obtained to such an alienation, it is probably true in fact, as assumed by law, that that consent indicates the existence of some necessity for the alienation. I have laboured this extremely elementary proposition more than its intrinsic content would seem to need, because I have found in so many decided cases recurring confusion between the principles governing this kind of alienation and a proper case of acceleration.

(5) 19 C. 236 at p. 241; 19 I. A. 30.

The only essentials of a good legal acceleration are that it should be to the next in reversion and that it should cover the whole life-estate. But the consent of the reversioner in whose favour the reversion is accelerated, or of any other more distant reversioner, is obviously immaterial. Nor does any question of necessity arise. The reason why the two conditions I have stated are essential is, and I think always ought to be, obvious. By accelerating (as the word implies) the tenant of the life-estate may be said figuratively to commit legal suicide. She brings about exactly the same legal results as would follow by operation of law upon her natural death. If at the date of the acceleration the widow with the life-estate were to die, the next reversioner in whose favour the acceleration is made would, of course, take the whole life-estate accelerated.

But no acceleration can be made in favour of any one but the next reversioner, for that would be more than committing legal suicide, it would be making a will as well. And this the widow has no power to do, as far as the immoveable property in which she has the life-estate is concerned.

It is, therefore, absurd to talk of accelerating in favour of, say, the reversioner third in order of proximity, with the consent of the two who stand nearer. That is not acceleration but alienation. Similarly it would be absurd to talk of accelerating four-fifths of the life-estate. For since the validity (in theory) of the acceleration depends upon the result corresponding exactly with the result which would follow the natural death of the widow accelerating, there can never be any question of deliberate reservation in her own favour. It does not, however, follow from this, as indicated in an earlier passage of this judgment, that the life-estate may not be composite and that there may not be different reversioners to its parts. Thus where the life-estate in immoveables comprises vatan and other property, it is quite possible that the nearest reversioner to the vatan may not be the nearest reversioner to the rest of the immoveable property. This I believe to be the only real exception to the general rule that a true acceleration must pass the whole life-estate. And in strictness it is not an exception. For, so far as the vatan property accelerated is concerned, the acceleration does bring about exactly the same legal result as the death of the life-tenant would have done.

Theoretically, acceleration is not an alienation at all, but a mere renunciation, the obliterating of a bar. The life-estate is withdrawn in its entirety it is voluntarily extinguished, and it is not the tenant of the life-estate, but the law, which does the rest. It will, therefore, become apparent that no consent of the reversioners or anyone else can be needed to validate a true acceleration. Still less any proof of necessity. The condition that the acceleration must comprise the whole life-estate is essential to its theoretical perfection. So that a widow with a life-estate in twenty fields cannot accelerate ten of them and retain ten, and this applies universally and irrespective of the proportion of what is alienated to what is reserved. But I should doubt whether niggling objections on this score, such as have been raised here and been acceded to by the Courts below, can fairly be said to arise under a commonsense and rational application of the general principles. For example, it is contended for the plaintiff that because the widow with the life-estate did not specifically accelerate the right, she had to nominate an officiating vatandar when she accelerated the vatan lands, that was a reservation which invalidates the acceleration. I think that is going too far. In the first place, I believe it was merely an unintentional omission, the right being of no value that I can see to the widow. I have not the least doubt that had she thought of it and been competent to accelerate it, she would have done so. But the real answer perhaps is that without the sanction of Government she was not competent to alienate this right. And it may, of course, have been that neither she nor the next reversioner in whose favour she accelerated cared to raise the question before the Revenue Authorities as long as the widow lived. In point of fact we were told during the argument that she never attempted to exercise this right for many years after the acceleration of 1883. She has asserted it recently, but probably under legal advice for the sole purpose of taking this objection. Now, small and unintentional omissions of that sort might occur in the acceleration of every large life-estate in immoveable property. I think in this country, where such transactions are often effected without professional assistance, all such casus omissi ought to be neglected.

What is to be looked at is the intention of the tenant of the life-estate, and that is not to be defeated, if on the whole plain, merely because she has failed to enumerate every tree or shed or right of way or other unimportant right annexed to or inherent in the property.

I am of opinion that the failure to mention this vatan right specifically in the acceleration of 1883 does not invalidate it as being a conscious and intentional reservation to the accelerating tenant of the life-estate of any part of it in her own favour.

In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff fails on every point and his suit ought to be dismissed with all costs throughout. In the event, however, of my being wrong in holding that Timawa was not the next reversioner, I should entirely concur with the order proposed by my brother Hayward. The only point of law, therefore, upon which we differ is whether in 1883 Timawa or the defendants stood next in the reversion. That point must be referred under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code.

HAYWARD, J.—Plaintiff sued as the adopted son to recover certain property, non-vatan and vatan, transferred twenty-six years before his adoption by his adoptive mother to the first cousins of his adoptive father.

The original Court held that the transfer was ineffectual as an acceleration or surrender by the adoptive mother of the non-vatan property, as there was in existence a widow of a brother who was the next reversioner in preference to the first cousins of the adoptive father; but that the transfer was effectual as an acceleration or surrender by the adoptive mother of the vatan property, as the widow of the brother was excluded from inheritance to vatan property and the first cousins were the next reversioners under the Vatan Act.

The first Appeal Court held that the transfer was not even effectual as an acceleration or surrender by the adoptive mother of the vatan property, as it did not include the right to appoint an officiating Patil and was consequently not a surrender of the whole of the vatan property under the Vatan Act.

The second appeal to this Court has resulted in the suggestion towards the close of arguments that the widow of a brother would not be the next reversioner in preference to the first cousins, as assumed up to that stage of the proceedings by all parties. The suggestion has been that a special rule would govern the order of succession of widows of brothers, excluding them from their place at the end of the first collateral lines of the brothers descending through the father and postponing them to the end of the second collateral lines of the first cousins descending through the grandfather, and that the general rule placing widows of collateral gotraja sapindas at the end of the collateral lines of their husbands and preferring them to males of remoter collateral lines would only come into operation in respect of the second collateral lines of the first cousins descending through the grandfather and apply to those lines and the subsequent lines descending through the great-grandfather, the great-great-grandfather and other remoter grandfathers.

The suggestion has not, in my opinion and with deference to my learned brother, been shown to be based on any solid foundation. The Mitakshara has laid down the rules of succession as follows in Chapter II, section IV, placs. 1 and 7. "On failure of the father, brothers share ..... .on failure of brothers also, their sons share ....." and in Chapter II, section V, plac. 4: "On failure of the father's descendants, the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons", and in Chapter II, section V, plac. 5: "On failure of the paternal grandfather's descendants, the paternal great-grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their sons inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same general family" (Setlur's Collection of Hindu Law Books on Inheritance). The Mitakshara thus dealt with the first collateral lines of gotraja sapindas descending from the father, the second collateral lines descending from the grandfather and the remoter collateral lines descending from the remoter grandfathers. The Mitakshara made no specific mention, however, of the widows of collateral gotraja sapindas, but it was decided in the case of Lakshmibai v. Jayram Hari (6) by Melvill, J., that the general rule was "the wives of all sapindas ..... must be held to have rights of inheritance co-extensive with those of their husbands" in view of the mention of the grandmother and the great-grandmothers, following the opinion expressed by West and Buhler in their work on Hindu Law. This decision was developed in the subsequent case of Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai(1). West, J., criticized a case in which a sister-in-law had been postponed to a first cousin and quoted another in which a sister-in-law had been preferred to a first cousin (page 442) and after referring to other cases of widows of gotraja sapindas, laid down the general rule that "the widow of the gotraja sapinda of a nearer collateral line appears entitled to precedence over the male gotraja in a more remote line" (page 449). The Privy Council referred to the case in which the sister-in-law had been preferred even to first cousins and confirmed the general rule, as a matter of custom in the Bombay Presidency, in the appeal entitled Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (7). In the case of Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (8) Westropp, C. J., remarked that "the rule laid down...(that the widows of gotraja sapindas stand in the same places as their husbands, if living, would respectively have occupied) was intended to be subject to the right of any person whose place is so specially fixed on that roll, as (amongst others) that of the sisters," whose place he had indicated as being next after the grandmother, that is to say, before the grandfather (pages 197 and 209). In the case of Nahalchand Harakchand v. Hemchand (9) West, J., further emphasized the right of persons whose place was specially fixed to precede widows of gotraja sapindas by saying: "the members of the 'compact series' of heirs specifically enumerated take in the order in which they are enumerated. preferably to those lower in the list and to the widows of any relatives, whether near or remote, though where the group of specified heirs has been exhausted, the right of the widow is recognised to take her husband's place in competition with the representative of a remoter line" (page 34). The compact series of heirs has been referred to as the series ending with the brother's son in both the Mitakshara and Mayukha (Mitakshara Chapter II, section V, plac. 2, and Mayukha Chapter IV, section VIII, plac. 18.—Setlur's Collection of Hindu Law Books of Inheritance). The particular privileges reserved by these two cases did not, therefore, extend to members of the second collateral lines descended from the grandfather. In the case of Rachava v. Kalingapa (4) Telang, J., did not refer to all the rules of succession quoted above from the Mitakshara. It was not necessary to do so as the case before him related only to succession among members of the second collateral line descending from the grandfather. He did not even quote verbatim the rules relating to succession among members of the second collateral lines descending from the grandfather or of the remoter collateral lines descending from remoter grandfathers. But he stated without qualification that "the decision in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1) having been affirmed by the Privy Council, the eligibility for inheritance of female gotraja sapindas, who have become such by marriage, is no longer open to dispute. And it also must be taken to be the result of that decision that where the contest lies between a female gotraja representing a nearer line and a male gotraja representing a remoter line of gotraja sapindas, the former inherits by preference over the latter" (pages 718-719). Similar remarks apply to the cases of Kashibai v. Sitabai (2) decided by a Bench including the present Chief Justice and Khandacharya v. Govindacharya (3) decided by the present Bench. It appears, therefore, to me that the general rule in favour of widows of gotraja sapindas of nearer collateral lines excluding male gotrajas of remoter lines has been laid down as a general rule having application to all collateral lines, and not merely to the second and subsequent collateral lines descending from the grandfather and remoter grandfathers, by a long series of decisions of this Court.

The result of that view, if correct, would be that the brother's widow was the next reversioner to the non-vatan property in preference to the first cousins of the adoptive father. The brother's widow has been found not to have given her consent to the transfer of the non-vatan property. That finding proceeded on the view that there was no evidence of such consent, overlooking the twenty-six years' acquiescence which might well have been regarded as good evidence of implied consent. If it had been a case of alienation to third parties, it might have been necessary to consider whether that finding could not be challenged as consequently wrong in law and whether, in any case, the consent was necessary of the female next reversioner in addition to the consent of the subsequent male reversioners in view of the remarks in the cases of Vinayak v. Govind (10) and Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (11). But it was not a case of alienation to third parties. It was a gift to the subsequent reversioners and the doctrine of consent indicating legal propriety or necessity could not be extended to gifts to reversioners, as pointed out in the case of Pilu Appa v. Babaji (12). The transfer, moreover, could not be held effectual as an acceleration or surrender, because it did not pass the estate to the next but to the subsequent reversioners. It could only have been held effectual as a joint acceleration or surrender of the estates both of the holder and the next reversioner to the subsequent reversioners. But something more than mere implied consent of the next reversioner would have been necessary to constitute that reversioner a party to the acceleration or surrender in favour of the subsequent reversioners.

The result of my view, even if correct, would not, however, affect the validity of the transfer of the vatan property. The brother's widow would, in any case, be excluded from the inheritance by the special provisions of the Vatan Act, and the transfer would prima facie be valid as an acceleration or surrender in favour of the next reversioners and not merely of subsequent reversioners. It has, however, been contended that it was invalid, as it related merely to the vatan property and as it did not include the right to appoint an officiating Patil under the Vatan Act and as it was not, therefore, an acceleration or surrender of the whole estate vested in the vatandar. But it does not appear to me to be contrary to the general principle that the whole estate must be surrendered, as laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (5), to regard the vatan property with its special rules of succession as a separate estate vested in the vatandar and to hold that the rule has no application to property like the right to appoint an officiating Patil which, at most, would be property inalienable under the Vatan Act without the special sanction of Government.

The first Appeal Court's decision decreeing the claim would, therefore, in my view of the case, have to be confirmed as regards the non-vatan property, but reversed and the claim dismissed as regards the vatan property and the parties ordered to bear their own costs throughout, including the costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.:—In my opinion Timava, the widow of Kardepa Dodangauda's brother, is a nearer heir of Dodangauda than his uncle's sons, the defendants.

I entirely agree with the reasoning and conclusion of Hayward, J., upon the point. The compact series of heirs ends with the brother's son (Mitakshara, Ch. II, section V, pl. 2; Mayukha, section VIII, pl. 18).

The grandmother's place is specially fixed and this alone gives her preference over unspecified sapindas in the line of the father. I can find no reason for treating the brother's widow as a sapinda to be postponed to all males capable of inheriting in the line of the grandfather. On the contrary, the position that brother's wives are sapindas in the line of the father for all purposes, results clearly from the following passage in the Acharakanda of Vijnaneshwara which was discussed in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1), and very recently by the Judicial Committee in Ramchandra Martand Walker v. Vinayak Venkatesh (13):—"In like manner brothers' wives also are (sapinda relations to each other), because they produce one body (the son), with those (severally) who have sprung up from one body (i. e., because they bring forth sons by their union with the offspring of one person and thus their husband's father is the common bond which connects them)." Mr. Justice Hayward has referred to Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (8) and Nahalchand Harakchand v. Hemchand (9). I will only add in support of his conclusion reference to Russoobai v. Zoolekhabai (14) and Trikam Purshotam v. Natha Daji (15). In the first of these cases the judgment was delivered by Sir Charles Sargent, one of the Judges who decided Ramchandra v. Krishnaji (16) referred to in Rachava v. Kalingapa (4). He said of a step-mother: "It is a necessary inference from ..Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1) that she is entitled to inherit as a gotraja sapinda. The latter case, as explained by the judgment in Rachava v. Kalingapa (4), must be taken as deciding that the widows of gotraja sapindas in the case of collaterals are to be preferred to the male gotrajas in a more remote line, and a fortiori the widow of a male gotraja in the ascending line...will have that preference over such collateral." The uncle's sons are indeed mentioned in pl. 4 of Ch. II, section 5, of the Mitakshara, but they cannot be regarded as specially mentioned in the succession so as to preclude the operation of the above rule. In Trikam Purshotam v. Natha Daji (15) Chandavarkar, J., said: "If once it is conceded that a half-sister is a gotraja sapinda, she stands nearer to the propositus in the line of heirs than a paternal uncle."

Nankar, cash, right to—Under-proprietary right—Ejectment, notice of, cancellation of—Prima facie case of under-proprietary rights to be established.

A right to receive a cash nankar does not necessarily connote a right to possession of land as an under-proprietor, but may, when coupled with some other facts, go to establish a prima facie case of under-proprietary rights.

A notice of ejectment ought to be cancelled by the Revenue Courts in cases where a prima facie claim to under-proprietary rights has been established.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 21st October 1913, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Hardoi, dated 4th June 1913.

FACTS.—The defendant landlord issued a notice of ejectment against the plaintiff, who contested it on the ground that he was not liable to ejectment as a mere tenant, inasmuch as his predecessors were former zemindars and as he was a sirdar and was getting a cash nankar from the landlord, which was set off every year against the rent due from him. The lower Courts cancelled, the notice on the ground that a right to receive a cash nankar does of itself mean an under-proprietary right. This proposition of law was challenged in appeal before the Board of Revenue.

Pandits Gokaran Nath Misra and Bansi Dhar Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Lachhman Prasad and Babu Manni Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is no doubt that a cash nankar does not necessarily connote a right to possession of land as under-proprietor. This may be admitted without coming to the conclusion that the Commissioner's decision is wrong. There are other circumstances in the case which tend to strengthen the conclusion at which he has arrived, among which may be mentioned the case which was decided in 1882 by the Subordinate Judge, where under-proprietary rights were decreed to other persons bearing the same relationship to the zemindar Hasai that is borne by the respondent. The pedigree which is on the record proves that the respondent is the grandson of Hasai and this fact coupled with the receipt of the cash nankar, which is set off against the rent, justifies the conclusion that a prima facie case of under-proprietary rights has been established. The appeal is dismissed with costs. This order will govern Nos. 19 and 20.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 170 (3)—Non-transferable occupancy holding, whether can be transferred—Landlord, right of—Decree for arrears of rent—Deposit by private purchaser.

A right of occupancy which is not transferable by custom or local usage can be transferred, but where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord in the absence of his consent is entitled to enter on such holding.

A private purchaser of such an occupancy holding is quite competent to make a deposit under section 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, to prevent the landlord from selling the holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent as, his interest is such as is voidable on the sale.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarti, for the Petitioner.

Babus Jogendra Nath Mukherjee and Karanamoy Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMEMT.—The petitioner is the landlord. He obtained a decree for arrears of rent against his registered tenant in August 1912 and advertised for sale the occupancy holding in arrear. The opposite party deposited the decretal amount under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, on the allegation that he had purchased the holding from the judgment-debtor in January 1909 and had been in possession ever since. The petitioner opposed the deposit, but the learned Munsif allowed it and relied on the case of Tarak Das Pal Chowdhry v. Haris Chandra Banerjee (1). It is contended before us that the said case is distinguishable as the purchaser had been in possession for more than 12 years to the knowledge of the landlord, whereas in this case the possession did not exceed three or four years. The learned Judges, however, did not rely on the possession for more than 12 years. They say: "It is not material for the purpose to consider.....whether he has acquired by possession for a period longer than 12 years the status of a tenant of a non-transferable holding." The learned Vakil for the opposite party contends that the ruling of the Full Bench in the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (2) supports his right. One of the questions referred was: "Whether a right of occupancy which is not transferable by custom or local usage is a right which can be transferred at all?" And it was answered in the affirmative subject, however, to the qualification that "where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord in the absence of his consent is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding." The landlord, therefore, can terminate the purchaser's interest at any time, and his right to do so is independent of an execution sale. We do not think, however, that on that account the interest is not one which is voidable on the sale. The effect of the sale is to give the auction-purchaser the right to oust the transferee, and it has been held in the case of Tarak Das Pal Chowdhry v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) that that fact makes the interest of the purchaser one that is voidable on the sale. If that be so, the purchaser has interest which is voidable on the sale and the deposit was quite competent. The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

KASHINATH v. SHANKER RAM.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 6 OF 1915.
January 4, 1915.
Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.
KASHINATH—APPLICANT
versus
SHANKER RAM AND OTHERS—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 16—Trial by Bench of Honorary Magistrates—Difference of opinion—Benefit of doubt—Reference to District Magistrate, whether legal—Practice.

Where there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion between the members of a Bench of two Honorary Magistrates as to the guilt of an accused, they should follow the principle laid down by the Local Government for their guidance though not formally issued by the District Magistrate of their district under section 16 of the Criminal Procedure Code and, giving the benefit of the doubt, should acquit the accused.

A reference by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates on difference of opinion between them to a District Magistrate is irregular and not justified by any provisions of Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Benares.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a number of persons were on their trial before a Bench of Magistrates exercising jurisdiction within the limits of the Municipality of Benares. That Bench consisted of two members, Pandit Ram Chander Naik Kalia and Babu Sita Ram. I find on a reference to the Civil List of this Province that each of these Magistrates sitting singly exercises the powers of a Magistrate of the third class, but that any two Magistrates within the Municipality of Benares sitting together as a Bench are empowered to exercise the jurisdiction of a Magistrate of the second class. After a complete trial the two Magistrates differed in opinion. Pandit Ram Chander Naik Kalia found the four accused persons not guilty and recorded a judgment concluding with an order of acquittal; Babu Sita Ram was of opinion that the offence charged was proved against all the accused persons and recorded a judgment convicting and sentencing them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each. The two Magistrates then signed an order referring the case to the District Magistrate of Benares for consideration and orders. The District Magistrate recorded a note upon this reference, to the effect that under the standing rules for conduct of business by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, "when there is a Bench of two and one is for conviction and the other for acquittal, the accused is to be acquitted". No further orders appear to have been passed in the case. The complainant has brought the matter before this Court in revision. The proceedings of the Honorary Magistrates were, as a matter of fact, irregular. Under section 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Local Government may, or subject to the control of the Local Government the District Magistrate may, make rules consistent with this Code for the guidance of Magistrates' Benches respecting various subjects, including amongst others "the mode of settling differences of opinion which may arise between the Magistrates in session." The Local Government has drawn up a draft of certain rules recommended for general adoption. The seventh of these rules provides as follows:—"In regard to a finding, when the number of the members is uneven the opinion of the majority shall prevail, when the number is even and the members are equally divided the accused shall get the benefit of the doubt." The intention of the Local Government in framing these draft rules obviously was that the District Magistrates should formally issue the said rules, or rules to the same effect, for their own districts in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by section 16 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not clear whether this has been done for the Benares district, but under the circumstances I do not think it worth while to make further inquiry on this point. Even supposing that no formal order has been issued by the District Magistrate of Benares in this matter, the Bench of Honorary Magistrates, when they found that there was an irreconcilable difference of opinion between them as to the guilt or innocence of the accused in this particular case, might well have accepted the principle laid down by the Local Government and passed orders accordingly. The order of reference to the District Magistrates was irregular and not justified by any of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As the record now stands before me, the trial of the accused persons is technically incomplete. The District Magistrate's endorsement on the order of reference is not in itself, and obviously not intended to be, an order of acquittal, Strictly speaking the record requires to be completed by a formal order, signed by both the Magistrates, to the effect that, in view of the difference of opinion embodied in their respective judgments, they follow the principle laid down by the Local Government for their guidance and giving the accused the benefit of the doubt, formally acquit them. I do not think, however, that the interference of this Court is called for. For one thing it is clear that in substance the opinion of the Magistrate who was in favour of the accused persons has been give effect to. If, however, any parties concerned think it desirable to move the Bench of Magistrates, or the District Magistrate himself, with a view to correcting the informality which I have noticed and placing on the record a proper order finally disposing of the case, I have no doubt that in view of the remarks which I have made such a course would be adopted.

I dismiss this application.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 2 (4), 64—"Money", whether includes cattle—Creditor receiving bullocks from agriculturist—Duty to give receipt.

Money as defined in section 2 (4) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act includes cattle, and a creditor purchasing bullocks from an agriculturist is bound to give a receipt as required by section 64 of the Act.

Criminal reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge of Poona.

Mr. M. R. Bodas, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The Additional Sessions Judge of Poona has referred this case to us. It seems that a creditor was convicted and sentenced under section 67 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act for not giving a receipt as required by section 64. The Additional Sessions Judge was under the impression that section 64 did not apply to the case, because the only payment, in respect of which he found it proved that a receipt was not given, was the delivery of the two bullocks, whereas the section speaks of money. The definition of money, however, in the Act itself says that money shall be deemed to include agricultural produce, implements and stock. Under the head of stock it would necessarily include cattle. The conviction, therefore, so far as the law goes, is perfectly correct. Nor do we see any good reason to induce us to interfere with the conviction in so far as it is based on evidence. But it seems to us that the fine in the circumstances is somewhat excessive and we reduce it to Rs. 15. The difference between the Rs. 15 and Rs. 40, if paid, should be refunded.

Conviction confirmed ; Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 118—Proceedings pending—Some defence witnesses called upon to show cause why they should not be prosecuted under s. 193, Indian Penal Code—Accused prejudiced—Order, whether sustainable.

Where proceedings under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, were still pending against an accused, the Magistrate called upon some of the defence witnesses to show cause why they should not be prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, whereby the other defence witnesses were frightened and did not give evidence:

Held, that the action of the Magistrate was highly injudicious and was calculated seriously to hamper and prejudice the accused and the order under section 118 could not be sustained.

Criminal revision of an order of the Magistrate.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Petitioners.

Babu Atulya Chandra Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the ten petitioners before us have been required to furnish security for good behaviour under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It appears that in the course of the inquiry into the truth of the information on which action had been taken, when the prosecution evidence was exhausted, the accused were called upon to adduce evidence in their defence. They had in attendance 60 witnesses and on the day on which they were required to give evidence eighteen witnesses, were examined on their behalf. At the close of that day's proceedings at the instance of the Public Prosecutor, the trying Magistrate called upon two of the witnesses, viz., Nos. 4 and 6, to show cause why they should not be prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of some of the statements they had made in the course of their depositions. On the following day 12 more witnesses were examined of whom at least 4 did not support the defence. On the following day out of the remaining witnesses the defence ventured to examine only three. The explanation they furnish is that the proceedings taken by the Magistrate, as a matter of fact, frightened their witnesses or prevented them from giving evidence.

It cannot be disputed that the action taken against the two defence witnesses during the pendency of these proceedings was highly injudicious and was calculated seriously to hamper and prejudice the accused in their defence. On that ground we make this Rule absolute, set aside the order made under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, and direct that a further inquiry be made by another Magistrate into the truth of the information on which action was taken. In these terms we make this Rule absolute.

A Judge is entitled to call for such records as he thinks would assist him in the exercise of his discretion, but he cannot sanction the prosecution of witnesses on inferences drawn against them from such records when they were not produced before or at the time of their deposition and when the witnesses were not given an opportunity to explain them.

Petition, under section 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to set aside the order of the Sessions Court of Kistna, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 14 of 1914, granting sanction for the prosecution of the petitioners in connection with Calendar Case No. 49 of 1913, on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bandar Division (Criminal Appeal No. 7 of 1914 on the file of the Sessions Court).

Messrs. O. R. Osborne and T. Rama Chandra Rou, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Venkatarayuliah, for the Respondent.

Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Government.

ORDER.

OLDFIELD, J.—I would deal this case on the short grounds that (1) petitioners were witnesses who had no control over the conduct of the case in which they gave evidence, and no right of evidence in the appellate proceedings in connection with which their prosecution was sanctioned, (2) they, therefore had, at no time an opportunity to combat the learned Sessions Judge's inferences from the evidence on which he relied against them and which in fact was first admitted in appeal not before or during their depositions, when they might have reconciled them with it. I, therefore, concur in revoking the sanctions, and express no opinion as to the duty or right of a superior Court to scrutinise the grounds on which they were given or the limits within which such scrutinising should be confined.

NAPIER, J.—This is an application to revise the sanction granted by the Sessions Judge of Kistna on the hearing of Criminal Appeal No. 7 of 1914, in which he reversed the conviction of the accused by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bandar. The sanction was granted with respect to prosecution witnesses Nos. 2, 4, 5, 8 and 9 and was for their prosecution on a charge under section 193, Indian Penal Code.

The first point taken by Mr. Osborne in this petition is that the evidence has been misunderstood by the Sessions Judge and is not sufficient to establish a prima facie case or raise a reasonable probability of conviction. He relies on the well-known judgment of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in In re Paree Kuzhammad (1) and on the case of Pampapati Sastri v. Subba Sastri (2), which undoubtedly support the proposition of law he contends for. I can only repeat here what I said here on other occasions that, with the greatest deference to that eminent Judge, Sir Bashyam Aiyangar, and the other learned Judges who expressed that view, I am entirely unable to concur in it. The question has been considered by the Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in Mr. Hume v. Poresh Chunder (3), and the conclusion at which the Court arrived has been stated by the learned Chief Justice in language so felicitous that I will not attempt to add anything to it. I adopt that conclusion and that language in their entirety. I will quote one passage at page 457: "The reports abound with expressions of opinion evoked by the peculiar circumstances of the case in which they arise. If they are all to be read into the section as of universal application, then the enactment of the Legislature will pass out of recognition." I would also refer to an observation of Stephen, J., on this very point. He points out that the duty of the Magistrate is precisely the same where sanction has been granted as in cases where it has not, and observes: "From this it follows that there is no reason why the Court to whom the application for sanction is made, should perform any of the acts that will fall within the scope of the Magistrate's duty if the sanction is granted: and there is a very good reason why it should not, namely, that the same thing should not be done twice, and section 195 certainly does not say that it should." To my mind a most serious objection is that, if this test is to be one of the controlling elements in the upholding of a sanction by the High Court, it follows that where a sanction has been so upheld, the case goes to the Magistrate with the imprimatur of the opinion of the High Court that there is a prima facie case against the accused. I cannot imagine a more serious interference with the powers vested by law in the magistracy and the duty imposed on them of discharging an accused where they are satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds of committing the accused for trial under section 209 or in warrant cases of discharging him under section 253, when they find that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction. No attempt has been made in any case that I am aware of to reconcile this proposition with the words of clause 4 of section 195: "The sanction referred to in this section may be expressed in general terms and need not name the accused person, but it shall, so far as practicable, specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed." Even putting aside the words "expressed in general terms" which are to my mind conclusive against the proposition, I fail to see how a prima facie case can be indicated against a particular person in the sanction order when that sanction order need not even name the accused person. There are other arguments which can be used against the view: but as I am of opinion that it is fundamentally incorrect and that the true view is expressed in the case above referred to, I do not think it necessary to pursue the matter any further.

The next objection taken is that the Sessions Judge in exercising his discretion adopted a procedure and used materials for his decision which have operated unfairly against the petitioners. They were, as stated above, witnesses in a criminal case. Their evidence was that they were present in the village and saw the preparations for the attack by the accused in that case. The Court before whom they appeared accepted their evidence as true and convicted the accused. The appeal was heard by the Sessions Judge and at the hearing of the appeal at which they were, of course, not represented, the Judge made use of two records of a case which had not been filed in the lower Court. It is suggested by the Vakil who appears for the counter-petitioner that extracts from the records were procured by the Vakil who appeared in the lower Court, but he admits that there is nothing to show that the witnesses had their attention drawn to any passage in those records for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to offer any explanation or even that they were referred to in argument. The Sessions Judge used those records to establish that at the date on which they stated they saw the accused at Chittoor they could not have been in that place. The language of his order is as follows: "I sanction the prosecution of. . . . , as it appears to me clear from the documentary evidence that the evidence that they saw the accused at Chittoor on the night of August 8th is false." Now, first of all these documents are not documentary evidence, as they were not exhibited either in the Court of first instance or in the Appellate Court. I am of opinion that the Judge was entitled to call for records which he thought would assist him in the exercise of his discretion. But he appears to have lost sight of the very important fact that no suggestion based on these records had been made to the witnesses at the trial and that they were not before him during his inquiry, and so were unable to offer any explanation on the case made out against them on this new material. It is true that it is not necessary that the persons with respect to whom the inquiry is held should have notice. But it has been held by the Full Bench of this Court in a judgment that binds me, Queen-Empress v. Sheik Beari (4), that the opinion should be formed after the party concerned has had an opportunity of being heard. It must be borne in mind that there is a practical difference between the position of a complainant and a witness The complainant has an interest in the case; and even if he does not appear on the appeal, he will certainly make himself aware of it. A witness has no further interest in the case after his evidence has been taken He is brought there by process of law and departs when permission has been accorded to him. That months afterwards sanction to prosecute him should be granted in proceedings of which he had no notice on materials which were not produced at the trial, and possibly were capable of instant explanation if he had been present, seems to me an improper exercise of judicial discretion. I confine my observations to the facts of this particular case and in this case I am satisfied that we should interfere, and I agree with my learned brother that the sanction should be revoked.

Petition allowed: Sanction revoked.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 361 (Explanation), 366—Passing out of keeping of natural guardian—Kidnapping—Offence, whether committed—Confinement what constitutes.

Where a little girl, who has no intention of starting life independently, leaves her house for the purpose of seeking refuge with another relation, she cannot be considered to have passed out of the keeping of her natural guardians within the meaning of the explanation to section 361, Indian Penal Code, until she has by some overt act passed into the keeping of some one else. Therefore, a person who induces her to accompany him shortly after she leaves her house is guilty of an offence under section 366 of the Penal Code.

Where a child of 12 is removed a very great distance from her home and has been deprived of all independent judgment or will power by threats and inducements, she is confined because she is not conscious of the desire to escape.

Appeal against the decision of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for Appellant No. 1.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—The two appellants have been convicted of offences under sections 366 and 368, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

We must be satisfied:—

I. That the girl Kunwar had been kidnapped.

II. That she had been kidnapped with the intent that she might be compelled to marry against her will, or be seduced to illicit intercourse.

III. That each accused knew that she had been kidnapped with such intent.

IV. That each accused was guilty of wrongfully concealing or confining her.

It has been proved that the girl is between eleven and thirteen years of age (Exhibit 31) and is married. Being a Hindu she could, under no circumstances, contract another legal marriage during the life-time of her husband. Any intercourse with a man with whom she had gone through the form of marriage would be illicit.

There can be no doubt that, while living with her aunt, Santok, in a village in the Baroda State, she suddenly disappeared; that she was taken by Doongerji to Ahmedabad; that Doongerji offered to sell her to Bavaji (Exhibit 13); that Doongerji took her to Bikho and left her with him, having probably sold her; that Bikho sold her for Rs. 105 to Chagoji, brother of appellant, Mohanji; that Mohanji took her to Hyderabad, where they were met by Kastow and taken to the house of Jivi; that Jivi is, mistress of appellant Mulo; that Mulo was in the house while the girl and Mohanji were there; that Mohanji took the girl to Hyderabad station with the intention of taking her to Khanpur where Kastow had already gone in advance; that Mulo was in company of Mohanji and the girl at Hyderabad station and intended to accompany them at any rate as far as Shadadpur.

The girl Kunwar states that she had left her aunt's house without her knowledge or permission and was going to her sister's, when Doongerji met her and by promises of fine clothes, ornaments, etc., induced her to accompany him. Mr. Lalchand contends that the girl had run away from her natural guardians and was no longer in their keeping when Doongerji met her. But where a little girl, who has no intention of starting life independently, leaves her home for the purpose of seeking refuge with another relation, she cannot be considered to have passed out of the keeping of her natural guardians until she has, by some overt act, passed into the keeping of some one else, for it is ordinary experience that a child's resolution to run away from home fails as soon as the difficulties of doing so are brought home to it. It would be ridiculous to attach to the temporary fancy of a child the legal consequences of a deliberate repudiation of the obligations attaching to its status. The facts established make it clear beyond any reasonable doubt that Doongerji enticed the gril to abandon all intention of returning to her relations with the intent to sell her as wife to some purchaser and to persuade her to live as wife with the man with whom she should go through the form of marriage; that is, he kidnapped her with the intent to seduce her to illicit intercourse.

It is admitted by Mohanji that he himself drew up the deed of sale by which the girl was sold to his brother Chagoji for Rs. 100. Chagoji had already two wives, and we accept the conclusion framed by the learned Sessions Judge that the girl was brought for the purpose of being sold to some prospective husband.

The girl remained in Chagoji's house for about two months. During that time Chagoji and other inmates of his house must certainly have learned all that they wished to know about the girl. They would naturally conjecture that she was married and had been kidnapped and if they did not actually hear from the girl's own lips that she had a husband living and had been decoyed to Ahmedabad, it must have been because they deliberately avoided doing so. The girl declares that she disclosed her story, and the learned Sessions Judge has believed her. We see no reason for discrediting it. The facts that Mohanji wrote the deed of sale, that he was a member of Chagoji's household and that he brought the girl to Hyderabad are sufficient to satisfy us that he was privy to all that was done by Chagoji.

Mr. Lalchand argues that the girl, after once passing into the keeping of Dongerji, was never confined. The girl describes her life, and if her description be true she was never, for one moment free to run away. She was certainly never free to return to her relations. Where a child of 12 years old is removed a very great distance from her home, and has been deprived of all independent judgment or will power by threats and inducement, very little physical restraint is necessary to effectually confine her. She is nonetheless a prisoner because she is not conscious of the desire to escape. We are of opinion that she was confined, from the time of passing into the keeping of Doongerji up to the arrest of Mohanji at the Hyderabad station.

It was Mohanji who actually brought her to Hyderabad, in whose custody she was when the Police came to her rescue. We are of opinion that the case against Mohanji has been satisfactorily proved.

But as against Mulo, the facts established do not, in our opinion, constitute more than a case of grave suspicion. There is no evidence that he, personally, directly or indirectly exercised any restraint over the girl. There is no evidence that he was taking any part in the disposal of the girl—for, though he was found in the company of Mohanji at the Railway station he had taken a ticket for Shahdadpur only, and the ticket clerk admits that he frequently went there on business. Though there is good reason to suppose that Jivi, his mistress, gives active assistance to Kastow in temporarily accommodating girls brought to Hyderabad for sale, it is at least possible that Mulo who visits Jivi only occasionally is not privy to this conduct. The girl states that she gave out at Hyderabad that she was a niece of Mohanji, and Mulo may have believed it. There is no evidence that he knew that she had been kidnapped beyond the statement of the girl herself that she informed him. We do not think it safe to accept this statement as proof, without any corroboration.

We confirm the conviction and sentence in the case of Mohanji, but reverse the conviction of Mulo and order him to be acquitted and discharged.

FAWCETT, J. C.—I concur and have only a few remarks to add.

The case, I think, clearly falls within the principles laid down in Emperor v. Jetha(1) which has been followed by this Court in Emperor v. Manshomal (2). Even if it is untrue that the girl really intended to go to her sister, and even if she was intending to run away from her aunt's house for good, yet she had gone only some 5 miles or so, when Doongerji met her and induced her to go with him, and cannot, in my opinion, be said to have been out of the keeping of her aunt, whose house she had left only shortly before and who was for the time her lawful guardian, within the meaning of the Explanation to section 361, Indian Penal Code. If the girl had been some days away from her relations or had got completely out of their control, the case might have been different. I also think that in this case there is no sufficient reason to disbelieve the girl's statement that she was intending to go to her sister.

As regard Mulo's complicity, I think there is a reasonable doubt, of which he should be given the benefit: though his conduct in accompanying Mohanji and the girl at the Railway station and making a false statement to the Head Constable, Abdul Gaffur, as to the girl going on a pilgrimage and his relations with Jivi, in whose house the girl was kept at Hyderabad, undoubtedly raise strong suspicions against him.

Mulo acquitted.

SABER AKUNJI—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 337—Forfeiture of pardon—Formal withdrawal or declaration, whether necessary before prosecution—Accused, plea open to.

Under the present Code of Criminal Procedure no formal withdrawal of a pardon and no formal declaration that the pardon has been forfeited are required. If the person who has accepted a conditional pardon be subsequently proceeded against, it is open to him to plead on his trial that the pardon has not in fact been forfeited, that is to say, that he has not violated the conditions on which the pardon was tendered and accepted. This then becomes one of the issues to be heard and determined at the trial.

Case referred by the Sessions Judge, Khulna, on May 26th, 1914, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that one Saber Akunji and a certain number of others were charged with the commission of a dacoity on the 29th of October 1913. Under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code, pardon was tendered to Saber Akunji and was accepted by him on the usual condition that he should make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to the offence in question. In the Court of the Committing Magistrate it appears that Saber Akunji did make a statement implicating himself and others in the commission of the dacoity. But when the trial took place in the Court of the Sessions Judge, he resiled from that statement and professed complete ignorance of the matter. Thereupon proceedings were taken against him and he was committed to the Court of Session to take his trial. The learned Sessions Judge has thereupon made this reference to this Court with a view to having it declared that the proceedings taken against the accused were without jurisdiction, on the ground that the pardon had not been declared forfeited and the ground of forfeiture had not been reduced into writing. Under the present Code of Criminal Procedure no formal withdrawal of a pardon and no formal declaration that the pardon has been forfeited are required. If the person who has accepted a conditional pardon be subsequently proceeded against, it is open to him to plead on his trial that the pardon has not in fact been forfeited, that is to say, that he has not violated the conditions on which the pardon was tendered and accepted. This then becomes one of the issues to be heard and determined at the trial. In the present case, there is no need that the issue should be separately tried; for if on his statement made in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and on other evidence it be found that he took part in the commission of the dacoity in question, it will follow that when he resiled from his first statement in the Court of Session and denied all knowledge of the matter, he violated the conditions on which the pardon had been tendered. So that the two questions whether he has forfeited the pardon and whether he has or has not been guilty of the offence of dacoity may be heard and determined together. In support of this view and for the information of the Sessions Judge, we would refer him more particularly to the following reported cases: Emperor v. Kothia (1), Kullan v. Emperor (2) and Emperor v. Abani Bhusan Chuckerbutty (3). With these remarks we return the record and direct that the trial be now proceeded with.

Rule against the order of the Sessions Judge, Pabna, dated 12th May 1914.

Mr. Orr, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. N. Roy and Babus Harish Chandra Ray and Jogendra Narayan Majumdar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued calling upon the District Magistate of Pabna and the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge, dated the 12th May 1914, should not be set aside and the appeal re-heard on the merits. It appears that the two accused, Kailash Chandra Ghosh and Ram Chandra Ghosh, were tried under sections 347, 352 and 352 coupled with section 114, Indian Penal Code, convicted and sentenced. On appeal to the Sessions Judge an order was passed for a re-trial on the ground of misjoinder. In order to understand how the question of misjoinder arose certain facts have to be stated. There is a gentleman named Rai Banamali Ray Bahadur who is a zemindar. There is a prevailing practice in his estate that no one is allowed to slaughter cows. It appears that on the Bakr-id day just before the occurrence, some Muhammadans slaughtered a cow. This was considered to be a breach of the practice of the estate and on the 14th December four men, viz., Mazamali Shekh, Abdul Shekh, Umedali Shekh and Manik Shekh, were called to the cutchery by two peadas, and the Inspector and naib fined Abdul Shekh Rs. 200, and Mazamali, Umedali and Manik Shekh Rs. 50 each on account of the slaughter of the cow. It appears that on the 14th December only Rs. 9 was realised and the rest was promised to be paid three days later. On the 17th, the rest of the money was not paid, with the result that on the 18th, these persons were again brought to the cutchery and again confined. On coming to know that information had been sent to the Police on behalf of the confined persons, they were beaten with shoe and ejected from the place in which they had been wrongfully confined. The question is, whether the occurrence that took place on the 14th December and the one that took place on the 18th December were two distinct transactions or form parts of one and the same transaction. It appears that the object was to punish certain Muhammadans of this estate for a breach of the rule of that estate in slaughtering a cow. It was with that object these four persons were brought to the cutchery, fined and a portion of the fines realised. These men had promised to pay the balance of the fines three days later, but they failed to do so, and so on the 18th, it is said, wrongful confinement again took place. There can be no doubt, therefore, that what took place on the 18th was in continuation of what took place on the 14th. It has been contended that on the 18th, another offence was committed, namely, offences under sections 352 and 352 read with section 114, Indian Penal Code. Therefore, this was a distinct offence and not in the same transaction, even supposing that the wrongful confinement on both days constituted one transaction. We think that the shoe-beating and other maltreatment of the Muhammadans when released from their wrongful confinement were the concluding portions of the same transaction. They were all confined for one purpose, namely, for the purpose of extorting money, and on being informed that the Police were coming, these men were shoe-beaten and turned out. The whole thing was really one transaction. The learned Sessions Judge was, however, of opinion that these were two distinct transactions. Therefore, he held that there was a misjoinder and ordered a re-trial. The view that we have taken on the facts stated above is supported by the cases of Emperor v. Datto Hanmant Shahapurkar (1) and Emperor v. Sherufalli Allibhoy (2). Our attention has also been directed to two cases by Mr. Roy, the Counsel for the accused, viz., the cases of Budhai Sheikh v. Emperor (3) and Gul Mahomed Sircar v. Cheharu Mandal (4). The facts of the two last-mentioned cases are different from the facts of the present case.

We, therefore, make the present Rule absolute, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge, dated the 12th May 1914, and direct that the appeal be now heard on the merits.

Let this record be sent down at once.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1201 OF 1914.

October 23, 1914.

Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Teunon, and Mr. Justice Fletcher.

KASI CHOUDHURI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision by private prosecutor against order of acquittal—High Court, jurisdiction of, to set aside acquittal—Practice.

Per Jenkins C. J., and Fletcher J.—A High Court has jurisdiction to set aside on revision an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor but it should ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

Per Teunon, J.—A High Court has ample jurisdiction, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to interfere with an acquittal and remedy the wrong, if wrong has been done. Section 439 is expressed in the widest terms and vests in the Court an absolute and unqualified discretion which cannot be restricted by any series of decisions.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Samastipur, dated 20th June 1914.

Babu Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed, for the Crown.

JENKINS, C. J.—A charge was framed under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code against 23 persons, and after a lengthy trial they were acquitted. The complainant thereupon applied to this Court for the exercise of its revisional powers under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with the result that a Rule was issued in these terms: "Let the record be sent for and let a Rule issue calling upon the District Magistrate of Darbhanga and the opposite party to show cause why the order of acquittal complained of should not be set aside and a re-trial ordered. Pending the disposal of the Rule further proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, will be stayed." Cause has now been shown.

The petition on which the Rule was made does not mention proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

From the judgment, however, it appears that the Trial Magistrate expressed his intention to direct under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code the prosecution of Ram Khelawan Tewari under section 195 of the Indian Penal Code, and also of two persons described as Faujdar and Bahadur. Though Faujdar alone was the petitioner, the stay apparently was intended to operate in favour of all three.

The case lasted, we have been told, about three months before the lower Court, many witnesses were examined, and an elaborate judgment was pronounced by the Trial Magistrate who fully discussed the voluminous evidence in the case, with the result that he came to a conclusion in favour of the accused on the two principal issues in the case. He held that the accused's party were in possession of the land in dispute, and that the injuries inflicted on the complainant's party were a justifiable exercise of the right of defence.

I understand that the Rule was granted on the ground that the Court was not satisfied with these conclusions, and that the interests of justice required an interference with the order of acquittal.

It is evident, however, that the conclusions of the lower Court must have rested largely, if not in their entirety, on the Trial Magistrate's appreciation of the evidence adduced before him.

The only question then is whether in the proper exercise of its discretion the Court ought to interfere for the purpose of setting aside the acquittal and sending back the case for a repetition of the lengthy trial of the case.

That we have power to interfere seems clear; but to the question whether we ought to interfere I would answer in the negative.

Section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code enables the Local Government to direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court.

This provision, which first appeared in the Code of 1872 provides the valuable safeguard that an accused cannot have his acquittal questioned by way of appeal except at the instance of the Local Government. But even with this safeguard the provision has met with considerable animadversion in recent times.

In this case, however, the Court, so far from having the assurance of such a safeguard, is confronted by the fact that the application to set aside the acquittal is opposed, not only by the accused, but also by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer on behalf of the Crown.

And I can quite understand this opposition. The complainant and his companions in the theft that led to blows were obviously mere puppets, and the real moving spirit is this same Ram Khelawan Tewari who is described as the petitioner's master and who has throughout been present in Court sitting behind the eminent Counsel and Vakils who have appeared on behalf of the complainant.

I will not discuss his merits or his frailties as disclosed by the Trial Magistrate's judgment, but it is apparent that this is one of a series of unsuccessful attempts to assert possession of the piece of land in dispute against the accused's party.

It has failed; but more than that, it has been held that possession was with the accused's party and proceedings against Ram Khelawan Tewari have been directed. This is a serious matter for him, and he obviously has an urgent personal interest in securing interference with the Magistrate's order. In view of all the circumstances before us, I am convinced that the purpose of the application is not to secure the due administration of justice but to serve a personal end.

This, therefore, is not a case in which the Court should (in my opinion) interfere, and in expressing this view, I believe, I am acting in harmony with the tendency of the best judicial opinion as also sound principle.

The pronouncements of the High Courts of Madras, Bombay and Allahabad consistently support the view that as a general rule it is expedient not to interfere on revision, at the instance of a private person, with an acquittal after trial by the proper tribunal and that applications for that purpose should be discouraged on public grounds: Thandavan v. Perianna (1), Heerabai v. Framji (2), Queen-Empress v. Ala Baksh (3), In re Sheikh Aminuddin (4), Emperor v. Madar Bakhsh (5), Qayyum Ali v. Faiyaz Ali (6).

This, too, was the view that prevailed in this Court until recent times [Municipal Committee of Dacca v. Hingoo Raj (7), Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (8)], but it is said that of late the matter has been differently regarded.

If there has been any conscious departure in more recent cases from the rule of prudence which prevailed in the authorities I have cited, I cannot agree with it.

Our attention has been invited to a decision in which I took part, as though it supported the new departure [Bakhal Das Roy v. Kailash Banu (9)]. I am in no way impressed by the value of that decision. In the first place, it appears that the Vakil of the accused was not present and the decision possesses all the infirmity of a judgment given without the assistance of the argument for the accused. And apart from that the circumstances were exceptional.

The error was one of pure law apparent on the face of the record, while the offence was one under section 504; and I have always understood that offences of an essentially personal character, such as defamation or insult, were viewed differently for the purpose of revision, and for an obvious reason.

According to my understanding, therefore, this decision is of no assistance in the present case: if, however, it contravenes what I regard as the true rule of guidance, then I do not hesitate to regard it as erroneous.

As I have already indicated, I am not prepared to say, the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere on revision with an acquittal, but I hold it should ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

This view does not leave an aggrieved complainant without remedy; it would always be open to him to move the Government to appeal under section 417, and this appears to me the course that should be followed.

The result then in this case is that in my opinion the Rule should be discharged.

But as I understand from my learned colleague that he would make the Rule absolute, we are equally divided in opinion and the case, with our opinions thereon, must, therefore, be laid before another Judge.

TEUKON, J.—In this case one Kasi Choudhuri and twenty-two others were placed on their trial before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Samastipur on charges of rioting under sections 148 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code.

On behalf of the prosecution it is alleged that on the death of one Rameswar Choudhuri his lands (including the field in dispute known as plot No. 65 in village Hatharua) were inherited by his widow Paltu, that some 1½ years before the occurrence now in question she removed to the house of her daughter and son-in-law in a neighbouring village called Chok Salem, and on the 4th April 1913, by a registered deed, sold her inheritance to the real complainant, one Ram Khelawan Tewari. Ram Khelawan, it is said, took possession and on the day now in question, 15th March 1914, sent his servant Faujdar Thakur and six or seven labourers, with two bullock-carts, to bring home the crop of arhar from plot No. 65.

The case for the prosecution then is that while these men were loading the crop into the carts, the accused and others, to the numbers of 30 or 35, armed with lathis and gorasas (axes) fell upon the party of labourers, put them to fight and inflicted upon them a number of injuries.

The medical and other evidence in fact shows that of the seven or eight labourers, six were wounded, sustaining in all twenty-eight injuries, of which one is described as severe, five were on the head and nine on the back.

In so far as the occurrence is concerned, the Trying Magistrate has accepted the case for the prosecution as substantially true. He finds that Faujdar and his companions were unarmed, and that they were attacked by a mob of men armed with lathis and gorasas and that this mob included the majority, if not all, of the accused placed on their trial.

He comes to no finding as to the complicity of the individual accused, obviously because he next proceeds to acquit them all, on the ground that of the accused Kasi and Narsingh (who are cousins of Rameswar) and their sons Ramyad and Baldeo (and Bachu) were in possession of the field in question and that they and their companions were, therefore, acting in the exercise of the right of private defence of property.

This brings us to a consideration of the defence.

The accused have said nothing regarding either the occurrence or possession, but have contented themselves with pleading not guilty. Their case, in so far as it can be ascertained from the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the depositions of the few defence witnesses examined, is that Rameswar (the deceased husband of Paltu) and his brother Mahadeo were not separate, as is the case for the prosecution, but joint in mess and property, that Rameswar predeceased Mahadeo, that Mahadeo in his life-time adopted Ram Golam, the son of his cousin Kasi, that since Mahadeo's death some 18 years ago first Ram Golam, and, on his death, Kasi on behalf of Ram Golam's minor son, Chandrika, has been in possession.

With regard to the adoption of Ram Golam the Trying Magistrate observes that "this line of defence" was dropped, and that the defence then resolved itself into a bare assertion of possession. Possibly this attitude was taken up in the course of argument, but in so far as the record goes possession based on the adoption of Ram Golam is the only case that the defence made any attempt to establish. There is uncontradicted evidence that Mahadeo and Rameswar lived apart from their cousins (or second cousins), Kasi and Narsingh; and of possession by Narsingh and his sons (who, P. W. No. 12, are again separate from Kasi and his son) since the death of Mahadeo there is not a tittle of evidence on the record.

As regards Kasi's possession, the finding is based on (1) the estate register of mutations or changes among its tenants for the years 1319 to 1321, (2) a chaukidari assessment register, (3) certain receipts, (4) an oral complaint made by Ramyad to the

FAUJDAR THAKUR v. KASI CHOUDHURI.

Manager of the Estate (P. W. No. 14) and (5) the oral evidence of three defence witnesses.

The prosecution, it may be observed, relies upon the same receipts and upon what the Trying Magistrate cursorily describes as the khatian, that is, the entry in respect of plot No. 65 in a Record of Rights finally published in or about the year 1901-02.

That entry, it may be noted here, shows that the tenants in possession are Musammat Paltu and Ram Golam (adopted son).

The mutation registers were produced by the defence witness No. 1, who describes himself as the "mutation inspector" of the circle. It is significant that the defence did not call for any register prior to 1318, and from this and the evidence of the witness it may be safely inferred that up to 1318 or rather 1319 the estate registers are in conformity with the Record of Rights. The change introduced in 1319 was the substitution of the name of Chandrika for the name of his deceased father, Ram Golam. This change, it may be said, in no way affected the position of the widow Paltu, and, in any case, as the witness says, was made without any reference to her or to any one interested on her behalf.

The assessment register does not show the name of Paltu but, as appears from the evidence of the witness who produces it, the register is based on hearsay and the absence of the widow's name may further be due to its being considered that she was not liable to assessment.

Such receipts as have been produced show that from the year 1292 to 1308 (say 1901-02) the payment was made by Kasi on behalf of Mahadeo, that in 1908 and in 1912-13 the payments were by Kasi or by Kasi's son, Ramyad, on behalf of Paltu and Ram Golam. The change in name, it is suggested by the Trying Magistrate, is due to some change in the Malik's register, but that change was obviously due to the Record of Rights, and the receipts are in accordance with that record.

On the complaint of Ramyad to the Manager no action was taken. It was subsequent to the purchase of Ram Khelawan, and is obviously of no more value than Ram Khelawan's unsuccessful application to the same Manager for mutation.

From this resume of this portion of the evidence it is clear that, in coming to his finding regarding possession, the Magistrate has relied on registers that are either worthless or inadmissible, has misapprehended the true significance of the receipts produced and the acceptance of such receipts by one or more of the agnates who now claim possession on their own account, and has also wholly overlooked the probative value that under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act should have been given to the entry in the Record of Rights.

I need not examine the oral evidence on either side, as the Magistrate's view of this evidence (both as regards Paltu's possession and as regards the possession of Ram Khelawan subsequent to his purchase) has been coloured by his erroneous view of the documents already referred to and also by a prejudice against Ram Khelawan based largely on Police reports wholly inadmissble in evidence.

There being no evidence of any adoption, and that case having been in fact abandoned, it is clear that all the documentary evidence and even the oral evidence adduced by the defence (vide, for instance, D. W. No. 3) indicates that in so far as prior to Ram Khelawan's purchase Kasi and his son Ramyad cultivated these fields, they did so on behalf of the widow, and it is doubtless because of her complaints against them (vide, e. g., defence witness No. 4) that she retired to Chok Salem and finally sold her lands to Ram Khelawan.

On my consideration of the evidence I am, therefore, satisfied that there are grave reasons for thinking that the finding as to possession is wrong. In any case, on a finding arrived at by a process of reasoning vitiated by so many errors no value can be placed.

Even, however, if we assume that the Magistrate is right in his finding that possession was with Kasi and others and that the act of the complainant in removing or seeking to remove the crops constituted the offence of theft, we have next to consider whether the Magistrate has adequately dealt with the further questions regarding the right of private defence.

On these questions all he says is this :

"As the thana is no less then six miles from the place of occurrence, Ganouri Lal v. Queen-Empress (10) must clearly be distinguished. Pachkauri v. Queen-Empress (11) is followed. In that case it was held that if accused were rightfully in possession of the land and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required, and using such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression. This applies to the circumstances of this case."

This judgment does not show that it was present to the mind of the Magistrate that the burden of proving circumstances bringing the case within the general exception contained in section 96 of the Indian Penal Code was upon the accused. It further does not show that he had any due regard to the restrictions placed upon the exercise of the right of private defence by the 3rd and 4th clauses of section 99. True he says, the thana is six miles off, but he makes no reference to daffadars and chaukidars of whom one, it is in evidence, lives not more than 10 bighas from the field in dispute. He has not adverted to his own finding that Faujdar and his six or seven companions were unarmed, nor, so far as appears, has he taken into consideration the number of persons injured and the number and position of the injuries sustained. He does not appear to have inquired whether, for instance, the injuries on the back were caused in the exercise of the right of private defence, nor has he made any endeavour to ascertain which of the accused is responsible for specific injuries. Even if some of the accused have succeeded in bringing themselves within the exception, it does not follow that all have done so.

For these reasons I am satisfied that there has been no proper trial of this case and I should, therefore, set aside the order of acquittal in the case of each of the accused and direct that they be re-tried before another Magistrate in accordance with law.

It has been urged before us, that inasmuch as under section 417 of the Code the right to present an appeal against an acquittal is vested in the Local Government, and in the Local Government alone, and inasmuch as the Local Government, so far from appealing, has appeared through its accredited representative in support of the Magistrate's judgment, we ought not, at the instance of a private complainant, to interfere with or disturb the present order of acquittal. But doubtless for good reasons, the Legislature has not constituted the Local Government the sole arbiter in these matters. An alternative remedy against injustice done to injured complainants has been provided in section 439 of the Code (I need not here refer to the Charter), and even where, as in this case, the Local Government has taken the unusual course, in my experience the unprecedented course, of appearing to justify what is prima facie riotous behaviour, it is conceded that we have ample jurisdiction to interfere and remedy the wrong, if wrong has been done. It has indeed been faintly suggested on behalf of the accused that by proceeding under section 494 of the Code, the Local Government may nullify any order this Court may make. But this suggestion has not come from learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Local Government. It is not to be anticipated that the Local Government will take this course, and we need not, therefore, at the present stage consider whether the Judge's order of consent predicated by section 494 is not again an order subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court.

The question thus becomes one, not of jurisdiction but of discretion and as to the manner in which discretion should be exercised, a large number of decided cases, of which the cases of Heerabai v. Framji (2), Thandavan v. Perianna (1); Queen-Empress v. Ala Baksh (3) and Municipal Committee of Dacca v. Hingoo Raj (7) are examples, have been cited before us. But with all deference to the learned and experienced Judges who decided those cases, I am not pressed by their decisions, nor do I consider it necessary to determine whether the present case does or does not fall within one or other of the rules of general principles therein enunciated. The enactment has set up no bars or limits to our discretion. That being so, this discretion cannot be fettered by judicial decision, and in this connection it is sufficient to cite the observations of his Lordship the Chief Justice to be found in the case of Mr. Hume v. Porash Chunder Ghose (12): "The section is expressed in the widest terms and vests in the Court an absolute and unqualified discretion. Not one jot or tittle can be taken away from or added to the plain and express provisions of the Legislature by any decision of the Court; nor can the discretion vested by the section in the Court be crystallised or restricted by any series of cases; it remains free and untrammelled to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case." With these observations I am in entire agreement and, in my opinion, they are equally apposite to the section now under consideration, as to the section then in question.

(10) 16 C. 206.

(11) 24 C. 680, 1 C. W. N. 423.

(12) 22 Ind Cas. 321, 41 C 413, 15 Cr. L. J. 49,

In the interests of public justice it may, in certain cases, in my opinion, be as important to redress injustice done to complainants as in other cases to remedy the wrongs of persons unjustly condemned. In the view I have taken of this case and for the reasons I have given, justice, in my opinion, demands that there should be a re-trial. I should, therefore, as I have already stated, set aside the order of acquittal and direct that the accused be re-tried by another Magistrate in accordance with law.

[As the Chief Justice and Teunon, J., differed in opinion the case was referred to Fletcher, J., who expressed the following:—]

OPINION.—This case has been laid before me under the provisions of section 429 read with section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, owing to there being a difference of opinion between the learned Chief Justice and Teunon, J., before whom the case came. Twenty-three persons were charged with having committed an offence punishable under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code.

After a trial which lasted about three months, the Magistrate acquitted all the accused. An application was then made to this Court to set aside the acquittal and to direct a re-trial. That application came on before Sharfuddin and Teunon, JJ., who issued a Rule on the opposite party to show cause why the order of acquittal should not be set aside and a re-trial ordered. The Rule subsequently came on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Teunon, J., who differed in opinion—the Chief Justice being of opinion that the Rule ought to be discharged, whilst Teunon, J., was of opinion that the Rule should be made absolute.

The application to set aside the order of acquittal is opposed both by the accused and by the Local Government.

The present application raises a point of considerable public importance, namely, —ought the Court ordinarily to exercise the powers which it undoubtedly has under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor? All the High Courts in India have for many years past consistently held that they ought not so to do. It will be sufficient if I give the references to the reported cases in support of this position. They are Queen-Empress v. Badrudin (13), Heerabai v. Framji (2), Thandavan v. Periama (1), Queen-Empress v. Ala Baksh (3), Queen-Empress v. Prag Dat (14), In re Sheikh Aminuddin (4), Qayyum Ali v. Faiyaz Ali (6), Municipal Committee of Dacca v. Hingoo Raj (7) and Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (8). The learned Chief Justice was of opinion that the settled practice of the Courts founded on sound judicial opinion and public grounds should be adhered to.

Teunon, J., on the other hand, was of opinion that as section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is drawn in the widest terms, no previous decisions could, in any manner, fetter the way in which the Court should exercise the discretion vested in it under the section. In support of this view, Teunon, J., referred to certain remarks of the Chief Justice in the case of Mr. Hume v. Poresh Chunder Ghosh (12). But with all due respect to the learned Judge those remarks of the learnd Chief Justice do not affect the point under consideration. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer informed me that some four or five rules have of recent times been granted by this Court on application by private prosecutors to set aside orders of acquittal. He, however, also informed me that all these rules, excepting one, were granted by the Bench which granted the Rule in the present case. That cannot, in my opinion, be taken as casting doubt on the well-established rule adhered to both in this Court and in the other High Courts in India over a long series of years. That Rule is founded on grounds of public interest and convenience and ought, I think, to be adhered to.

(13) 8 B. 197.
(14) 20 A. 459; A. W. N. (1898) 117.

In addition to the difference of opinion of the learned Judges in the present case as to there being a settled practice that the Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision at the instance of a private prosecutor with an order of acquittal, the learned Judges also differed as to whether the circumstances in this case were such as would induce the Court in any event to interfere.

The learned Chief Justice was of opinion that there was no reason to think that the Magistrate whose judgment rests on an appreciation of the evidence that had been given before him came to a wrong conclusion. Teunon, J., on the other hand, thought that there were strong grounds for thinking that the judgment of the Magistrate amounted to a miscarriage of justice. I see no reason to assent to the view of Teunon, J.

No one can doubt that the complainant in this case is merely the creature of Ram Khelawan Tewari and that this prosecution forms one of a series of cases in which Ram Khelawan Tewari has tried to enforce his right to the land in question.

I, therefore, agree with the view set out by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment. The Rule must, therefore, be discharged.

Rule discharged.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 238 OF 1914.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 205 OF 1914.

January 25, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

VENKATARAMA AIYAR AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

KRISHNA AIYAR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 250, 422, 423, 435 and 439—Compensation awarded against complainant for vexatious complaint by 2nd class Magistrate—Appeal to Sub-Divisional Magistrate—Order, whether can be set aside without notice to accused—Compensation, when should be awarded.

In all judicial proceedings where no specific rule as to notice exists, the rule "audi alteram partem" applies as a principle of natural justice.

An Appellate Court can alter or set aside, to the prejudice of an accused, an order awarding compensation to him under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only on proper notice to him.

An order under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be justified only when the Court finds not merely that the complaint was false but also that it was frivolous and vexatious.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the first Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kumbakonam, in Criminal Appeal No. 311 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the Bench Magistrates of Kumbakonam, in Summary Trial No. 1944 of 1913.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.

SPENCER, J.—The question raised at the hearing of the revision petition is whether the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate setting aside the award of compensation to the accused by the Kumbakonam Bench Magistrates was bad for want of notice to the accused.

It was argued, in the first place, that Chapter XXXI of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to appeals against orders under section 250 and, therefore, that section 422 which directs that notice of appeals should merely be given to the officer appointed by Government to receive notices of appeals does not govern the case: in the second place, that in the absence of any provision for notice the maxim "audi alteram partem" should govern the proceedings.

VENKATARAMA AIYAR v. KRISHNA AIYAR.

The first argument will not, in my opinion, hold good, for the reason that section 250 does not declare what the powers of an Appellate Court are in disposing of appeals under clause 3 of the section and it is necessary to invoke the aid of section 423 for this purpose. Section 439 illustrates the difference in this respect between section 250 and section 195, which has been held to be a self-contained section.

On the second point I agree with the observation of Sir Subramania Aiyar, J., in Emperor v. Palaniappavelan (1) that the accused should have notice of the appeal in order that they may have an opportunity of supporting the order passed in their favour.

It seems to be an anomaly, which might be cured when the Criminal Procedure Code is amended, that no provision should be made for notice to the person most interested in the order being upheld in the case of an appeal being preferred against an order of compensation passed by a 2nd or 3rd class Magistrate, but that if such an order is passed by a first class Magistrate and the matter is taken to the High Court for revision of his order, section 439 (2), strictly construed, will make it imperative that notice should go to the accused.

A Bench of two learned Judges of this Court have held that notice to the accused is not imperative in the case of appeals under section 250 [Ambakkagari Nagi Reddi v. Basappa (2)], and this is probably what was meant by another Bench in Guruswami Naicken v. Tirumurthi Chetty (3) when they declared that the accused has no right of audience in such an appeal.

In the former case the Court declined to interfere in revision on the ground that there was no illegality, and I consider that I am bound by that decision, although I am aware that in respect of orders passed under other sections of the Code which do not contain a direction for notice to be given, Courts have sometimes interfered in revision with orders that are merely improper, but not illegal, for want of notice, following the general rule that an order should not be made to a person's prejudice without giving him an opportunity of being heard, e.g., Algirisami Naidu v. Balakrishnaswami Mudaliar (4), Imperatrix v. Sadasiv Narain Joshi (5), In the matter of the Petition of Umrao Singh v. Fakir Chand (6) and In the matter of Teacotta Sheikdar (7).

Here the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order, besides being improper for want of notice to the accused, requires to be set aside for another reason. He says he finds it difficult to conclude that the complainant's story must necessarily have been false. The Bench held that it was vexatious. No doubt an accusation may be false as well as frivolous and vexatious [Beni Madhub Kurmi v. Kumud Kumar Biswas (8)], but it is necessary to find whether it is or is not frivolous or vexatious. As the Appellate Court has not decided this and as the Public Prosecutor says that he does not wish to support the order, I would direct the Appellate Court to re-hear the appeal after giving notice to the accused.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The Bench Magistrate of Kumbakonam directed the complainant to pay compensation to the accused on the ground "that the complainant only wanted to vex and annoy the accused." On appeal, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate reversed this order, because he was unable "to conclude from the records that it (the complaint) must necessarily have been false." This judgment is wrong. As was pointed out in Emperor v. Bindesri Prasad (9), section 250 not only refers to false complaints, but to frivolous and vexatious complaints as well. It is open to doubt whether the view taken in Ram Singh v. Mathura (10), that the section does not deal with false accusations, but only with vexatious complaints . . . . . is correct. However as the Appellate Magistrate has not found that the complaint was not vexatious, his order must be reversed.

The question now arises whether in rehearing the appeal the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should not give notice to the accused. I feel no doubt that even though failure to give notice may not render the proceedings of the Court illegal, it would certainly affect their propriety. Under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the superior Courts are invested with powers, not only to set aside incorrect or illegal orders of the Courts below, but also to examine the propriety of any finding, sentence or order. This language has been deliberately used to enable the higher authorities to see that no violation of natural justice takes place and that no order to his prejudice is passed behind the back of a person who is interested in upholding it; it was on this principle that a Full Bench of this High Court in Aligirisami Naidu v. Balakrishnasami Mudaliar (4) interfered with an order of discharge. Sir S. Subramania Aiyar in Emperor v. Palaniappavelan (1) bases his decision upon the ground that justice requires that a party to be affected by an order should have an audience before it is vacated to his prejudice.

A great deal of the argument before us was directed towards showing that Chapter XXXI of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to criminal appeals is not applicable to appeals in compensation cases. I am not convinced that this contention is sound. The learned Vakil for the petitioner argued that the use of the words in section 250, clause (3), "as if such complainant had been convicted," would not import the provisions of the Appeal Chapter. The powers of the Appellate Court to grant redress have to be gathered, so far as I am able to see from section 423. Section 250 is not self-contained, as are sections relating to the grant of sanction and to convictions for contempt (sections 195 and 486). I am not prepared to hold that Chapter XXXI does not apply to compensation appeals.

The learned Public Prosecutor argued that as section 422 only provides for a notice of appeal to the officer appointed by the Local Government, it negatives the contention that notice should go to any other person. This section does not say that others are not to have notice. It imposes a necessary condition. It does not override the principles of natural justice and of jurisprudence.

If an order for compensation is passed by a first Class Magistrate, the injured party can seek redress only under the revisional powers of the High Court. When a petition from a complainant is entertained, notice under clause (2) of section 439 must go to the accused. I cannot accede to the contention of Mr. Grant that the term accused in that sub-section will not include an accused who had been acquitted and to whom compensation has been awarded. If in passing orders on revision, an accused to whom compensation has been given has to be heard, it does not stand to reason to hold that he is not entitled to a hearing when an appeal is preferred by the complainant. Section 422 does not, in my opinion, compel us to introduce any such anomaly.

I respectfully agree with the observations of Sir Arnold White, C.J., in In the matter of Byravalu Naidu (11) that the principle of giving compensation is to recompense by way of damages the party who has been vexatiously dragged before a Criminal Court. Clause (5) of section 250 supports this view. If this is correct, it would be improper to deprive a man of what has been awarded to him without giving him an opportunity of supporting the decision in his favour.

The decision in Ambakkagari Nagi Reddi v. Basappa (2) does not disapprove of the dictum of Sir S. Subramania Aiyar in the earlier case. In Gurusami Naicken v. Tirumurthi Chetty (3) the only question was whether the Public Prosecutor should have had notice. I do not take these decisions to lay down as a rule of law that the accused to whom compensation has been awarded is not entitled to notice before the order in his favour is set aside. It may be that the Legislature should provide specifically for notice. But as the law at present stands, I am unable to agree with the contentions of the learned Public Prosecutor that the accused is not entitled to be heard in the Appellate Court. The first Class Magistrate should give notice to the accused before disposing of the appeal.

Order set aside; Case sent back.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 336—Temple—Place of public resort—Person in charge to take necessary precautions to ensure safety of visitors—Well not properly enclosed—Gross negligence—Endangering safety of people.

On the occasion of a festival a temple becomes a place of public resort and it is the bounden duty of the person in charge to take all reasonable precautions necessary to ensure the safety of those crowding thither by his license and invitation. Therefore if he omits to enclose a well in the courtyard standing by the path which the pilgrims must necessarily take in order to reach the shrine, omits not only to indicate at night its position by lights, but also removes the light placed near the well at the instance of the officers on duty, and consequently a man falls into the well, his conviction under section 336 of the Penal Code will be upheld Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jajpur, dated the 13th January 1914.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner has been convicted under section 336 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

It appears that in Jajpur in the District of Cuttack, there is a temple known as the Biroja Temple, and that year by year on the Ashtami day pilgrims and others in large numbers visit this temple in order to view the deity therein enthroned and present offerings. There are a number of shebaits, and the petitioner, it appears, has taken a lease from some of them having a 10-anna interest and for the last few years has been the general Manager of all.

Close by the gate leading from an outer courtyard into the chief or inner temple known as the Thakurani's Temple, there is a well. The well is surrounded by a masonry platform 1½ to 2 feet high, and the ring or parapet of the well stands again about 1 foot above the platform. The well is otherwise unprotected.

On the last Ashtami day, the 8th of October 1913, at about 8 or 9 P. M. while the Police Officers on duty were controlling the rush of people seeking entrance into the Thakurani's Temple, a man named Dhroba Prusti fell into the well. Thereupon at the instance of the Sub-Inspector in-charge, the petitioner had a light placed on or near the one-foot parapet. It has then been found that at a later hour the petitioner had the light removed and that thereafter between 1 and 2 A. M. while the people were again crowding into the Thakurani's Temple, a boy named Gananath Panda fell into the well. He had no previous knowledge of the well and in the darkness could not see it.

On these facts the petitioner, who it has been found was in charge of the arrangements, has been convicted under section 336, i. e., of doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or safety, and has been sentenced, as we have already stated, to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

On his behalf it is contended that the facts found do not constitute an offence within the meaning of the section.

We are unable to accede to this contention. On the occasion of the festival in question, the temple, it is clear, becomes a place of public resort, and it was the bounden duty of the petitioner as the person in charge to take all reasonable precautions necessary to ensure the safety of those crowding thither by his license and invitation. The well in question stands by the path which the pilgrims must necessarily take in order to reach the shrine which they had come to visit, and in omitting to enclose the well, in omitting even to indicate its position by lights, and lastly, in removing the light placed near the well at the instance of the officers on duty, it appears to us, the petitioner acted with gross negligence and thereby endangered the safety of large numbers.

The Rule is accordingly discharged.

Rule discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 164, 288—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 145, 155—Accused, evidence to be used against—Admissibility in evidence—Contradiction of statements made in Court.

Statements taken under the provisions of section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, and not covered by those of section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, are inadmissible in evidence against the accused, but admissible, under the provisions of section 145 and 155 of the Evidence Act, only for the purpose of contradicting the statements subsequently made in Court by the persons making those former statements.

Appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated 12th August 1914.

Mr. P. C. Bhattacharji, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Puttu, the appellant in this case, has been convicted on a charge of attempt to murder under section 307 of the Indian Penal Code and has been sentenced to transportation for life. The charge against him was that he attacked one Debi on the night of the 27th-28th of April last with a knife or some other cutting instrument and inflicted severe injuries upon him —injuries which, if they resulted in Debi's death, would have justified a charge of murder against the prisoner who had caused them. The accused Puttu appears to be a sort of cousin of this man Debi. Both of them are Lodhs and all the important prosecution witnesses in the case are of the Lodh caste also. There seems to be no doubt from the medical evidence that a very determined and murderous assault was committed on the complainant, Debi, on the night in question. There were no less than sixteen injuries, three of which amounted to grievous hurt within the definition of that term in the Indian Penal Code. The scene of the crime is some two miles from the thana and a report was made at the Police Station at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 27th of April. In this report which was made by Debi himself, it was stated that Debi was asleep at the time the assault was committed. He said that he was roused from slumber by finding himself held down, that he recognised Puttu, who stabbed him with a knife and afterwards attacked him with a gandasa. In the report it was also stated that a son of Puttu, named Girdhari, and another man called Nohra were present at the time and were standing close to the bed-side. The names of certain witnesses who were said to have arrived at the time the assault was being committed were mentioned in the report. The Police proceeded to make an inquiry, and five witnesses were found who are said to have declared themselves to be eye-witnesses of what had happened.

These five men were Jalpa, Ranjit, Ram Charan, Jansa and Mohan. Their statements were taken by the Sub-Inspector and were very soon afterwards taken again by a Tahsildar Magistrate under the provisions of section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not explained why it was thought necessary to have these statements recorded by the Tahsildar Magistrate. The thanadar was not called as a witness in the case. All we have in this connection is the evidence of the Tahsildar Magistrate to the effect that he did record the statement. In those statements these five witnesses said that they had been sleeping at various spots close to the scene of the occurrence, that they had heard Debi call out that Puttu was murdering him, that they ran to the spot and saw Puttu running away and that when they got there Debi at once accused Puttu as being the person who had inflicted the injuries upon him. These witnesses were examined before the Committing Magistrate and again in the Sessions Court, and they have gone back upon the stories which were recorded before the Tahsildar Magistrate. According to their present statements none of them actually saw Puttu on the night in question. They also tried to make out that when Debi was first asked what had happened he did not mention Puttu, but after some lapse of time he informed them that he thought that Puttu was probably the person who had attacked him. In addition to these five persons two chaukidars were called as witnesses in the case. They were examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court under the provisions of section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the Sessions Court they were put forward as witnesses for the defence. According to their statements when they interrogated Debi as to what had happened, he said that some member of the family had wounded him and that it was probably Puttu.

Referring to the evidence of the five witnesses Jalpa, Ranjit, Ram Charan, Jansa and Mohan, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that they had been corrupted by the accused or by some person on his behalf, that their statements in the Sessions Court were untrue and that the real story of the case had been given by them in their statements before the Tahsildar Magistrate. The learned Judge does not seem to have considered the point as to whether these statements made before the Tahsildar Magistrate were admissible in evidence against the accused. That he has made use of them as such evidence is plain beyond dispute. He says distinctly in his judgment that he sees no reason why the statements which these persons made before the Tahsildar should not be regarded as substantially true. It is quite clear, therefore, that the learned Judge gave effect to this view in order to convict the prisoner. In doing so the learned Judge has committed an error of law. These statements were not admissible in evidence against the accused. They were, it is true, admissible under the provisions of sections 145 and 155 of the Indian Evidence Act for the purpose of contradicting the statements made by these five witnesses in Court but they were not admissible for any other purpose. They were statements which were made behind the back of the accused and in respect of which he has had no opportunity of cross-examining. They were not statements, moreover, to which the provisions of sections 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure apply. That section enacts a special provision for the admission against the accused at the Sessions trial of a statement made by a witness in the Court of the Committing Magistrate after the accused has had a proper opportunity for cross-examination. There is no provision in the law of evidence which allows statements such as were made here before the Tahsildar Magistrate to be used as evidence against the prisoner. The result, therefore, is that using these previous statements for the only purpose for which they were admissible, the evidence of the five prosecution witnesses in the Sessions Court has been discredited and must be taken, therefore, to be of no value in the case. We are left merely with the statement of the complainant, Debi, and having regard to certain other facts in the case, it appears to me that it is quite impossible to find the prisoner guilty on the statement of Debi alone. To begin with, we have it proved that the statement which Debi has made at the time of the trial is a different statement from the one which he made at the Police Station. In this latter statement it has already been pointed out that Debi mentioned the names of two other persons who, he said, were present at the time of the attack made upon him. He does not mention the names of these two persons now. He also stated not only at the Police Station but in the Committing Magistrate's Court that he was asleep at the time this attack was made upon him. His story before the Sessions Judge was to the effect that he was awake. In the first report he also stated that the accused Puttu had made his escape before the witnesses arrived at the scene, and he made the same statement before the Sessions Judge, a statement which certainly is scarcely consistent with what these five witnesses said before the Tahsildar Magistrate, namely, that they had seen the accused leaving the scene of the crime.

There is another point to be noticed in connection with this case. A plan of the site of the occurrence was prepared and has been proved in the Court below. On this plan there are marked various places at which witnesses are said to have been lying on the night in question at the time when Debi was attacked. The spot where the witness Mohan (P. W. No. 7) was on that night is shown to be over 50 yards from the spot where Debi was lying. It is also shown that the fourth prosecution witness Ranjt was lying at the place about 200 yards away from the spot where Debi was attacked. Another spot is indicated with reference to which it is said that other witnesses were lying there at the time. This place is between 70 and 80 yards from the scene of the occurrence. It is apparent, therefore, that according to this map the nearest spot at which any of the witnesses was at the time when Debi was first attacked was 50 yards away. The next nearest spot was some 70 yards away, while the place where the witness Ranjit was, was about 400 yards distant. Cases like the present one are by no means uncommon and I have had, as a Sessions Judge, a very large experience of them. It is surprising to find how often in cases of this kind witnesses are discovered who depose to have been awake at the time the attack is delivered and to having seen the assailant or assailants make his escape from the scene of the crime. It is hardly too much to suppose that all these witnesses who were at these various distant points at the night of the occurrence were asleep at the time when Debi was attacked and stabbed. I have no doubt he called out as soon as he was roused from slumber, but it would take some time for his cries to reach the ears of these witnesses. It would also take some time for them to wake up and to proceed to the spot where Debi was lying. And it seems difficult to believe that once the alarm had been raised by Debi, his assailant or assailants would tarry at the spot any longer than they could possibly help. I think it extremely improbable that any of these witnesses could have seen the accused Puttu on the night in question. There is evidence on the record to show that Puttu and Debi were on bad terms. Debi admits that he had been put out of caste on a complaint made by Puttu, a fact, however, which renders it more likely that Debi owes Puttu a grudge than the latter owes a grudge to Debi. It is said that there were other causes of quarrel between the parties and I take it as a fact that bad feeling between the two men did exist. All the same, I am not convinced that it necessarily follows from this that we must accept the statement of Debi when he says that Puttu was the man who attacked him. It is possible that Debi may not have recognised any one at all, but that he came to the conclusion that because Puttu was his enemy he was the only man who could have committed the crime. There is some indication of this in the story told in the first report, in which we find that Debi tries to implicate not only Puttu but his son Girdhari and another man named Nohra.

The result, therefore, is that excluding the evidence which the learned Sessions Judge wrongly admitted to the record, there is no sufficient proof to justify the conviction of the prisoner Puttu. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that Puttu be acquitted and released.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 399, 426—Order of detention, whether sentence—Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897), ss. 8, 10—Sessions Judge, whether can suspend operation of order.

An order of detention passed by a District Magistrate under section 10 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897) is not a "sentence" within the meaning of section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor is it a punishment enumerated in section 53 of the Indian Penal Code. A Sessions Judge, therefore, has no power to suspend its operation under section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sessions Court of Coimbatore, in Criminal Appeal No. 110 of 1913, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the District Magistrate of Coimbatore, in Calendar Case No. 1 of 1913.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—Under section 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Sessions Judge clearly had no power to pass an order that the prisoner, who had been tried, convicted and sentenced in due course of law by a Subordinate Court, should be treated as an under-trial prisoner pending the disposal of his appeal. The Sessions Judge further directed that the sentence passed by the District Magistrate upon the prisoner should be suspended. The sentence was one of six months' rigorous imprisonment, and in lieu thereof the District Magistrate directed under section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the accused should be detained for four years in the Reformatory School. Sections 8, 10 and 30 of the Reformatory Schools Act make a distinction between an order for detention and a sentence. This distinction is also made clear from section 53, Indian Penal Code, which does not include such orders among punishments. We are, therefore, of opinion that the order for detention was not a sentence within the meaning of section 426, and thus the Sessions Judge's order, as it stood, to suspend the sentence would not prevent the carrying out of the order of detention. No doubt there was a sentence in lieu of which the prisoner was directed to be detained, but that sentence was not in operation as it was superseded by the order for detention. We, therefore, set aside the Sessions Judge's order.

Order set aside.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 43, proceedings under, nature of—Criminal proceedings—Procedure not followed—Insolvent, conviction of, whether sustained.

Proceedings against insolvents under section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are in the nature of criminal proceedings, and it is necessary that there should be a charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence and these should be strictly and accurately pursued and if on any of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for reversing the proceedings.

Therefore, where a Judge does not follow the procedure but arrives at his conclusion of guilt of an insolvent not on evidence but substantially on the report of the Receiver of his property, the conviction of the insolvent cannot be sustained.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 20th of August 1911.

Babu Aukhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion the order of the Judge sentencing this insolvent to a maximum term of imprisonment of one year cannot be sustained. It must be understood that proceedings such as these are in the nature of criminal proceedings: and "in all criminal cases it is necessary that there should be a charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence. Everything should be strictly and accurately pursued; and if in any one of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for reversing the proceeding." The section itself provides safeguards which have not been observed, for it is prescribed that the Court "in every such case shall record the facts constituting the offence with the statement (if any) made by the debtor." More than that, the Judge has arrived at his conclusion of guilt not on evidence but substantially on the report of the Receiver. It is true that there was also a deposition of the debtor, but the learned Vakil who appears to support the order of the learned Judge is unable to suggest that there was anything in the deposition of the debtor that would justify the order and the sentence that has been passed. In the circumstances there is but one course open to us, and that is to reverse the order of the Judge and to direct that the insolvent be set at liberty.

The respondent must pay the insolvent's costs of the appeal, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Assistant Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The owner of an opium smoking den has been convicted of possessing 103 tolas of chandul contrary to rule 4 (iii) (a) of the rules under section 5, as provided by section 9 (c) of the Opium Act. He has not appealed, but 12 out of 16 others found smoking chandul in the opium den have appealed against their convictions of possessing opium contrary to rule 4 (iii) (b) and (c) of the rules under section 5, as provided by section 9 (c) of the Opium Act.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that the 103 tolas of chandul belonging to the owner of the den were not in their possession either jointly or separately, and that there was no evidence to show that any of them was actually in possession jointly or separately of more chandul than allowed by the rules, that is to say, of more than "half quarters" of a tola, whatever that may mean, as prescribed in rule 4 (iii) (b) and that they cannot legally be deemed to have been in possession of more than "half quarters" of a tola without actual proof of the fact, as rule 4 (iii) (c) is ultra vires, being a rule of evidence and not a rule strictly under section 5 of the Opium Act.

It seems to me clear that the possession of the 103 tolas of chandul by the owner of the den cannot be presumed to have been also the possession of his customers. It is improbable he would admit any claim of his customers to any of the chandul, but that which they might actually be smoking. There was no evidence to show that any of the smokers was actually in possession either separately or jointly of more than "half quarters" of a tola, whatever that might mean, as mentioned in rule 4 (iii) (b) and (c) and there appears to me no warrant for prescribing a presumption to the contrary from the mere fact that they were all found in an opium den by rule 4 (iii) (c) under section 5 of the Opium Act. Such a presumption would amount, in my opinion, to a rule of evidence as to the fact of the possession and not to a rule as to the conditions of possession contemplated by section 5 of the Opium Act. At all events the rule as drafted, "shall be held to have committed a breach," is in the form of a presumption of evidence and not of a condition of possession as contemplated by section 5 of the Opium Act. It might, no doubt, be possible to draft a condition of possession having much the same effect as intended by the rule, but such a condition could not, in my opinion, be raised here without an improper straining of the actual words of the rule. The necessary effect would appear, however, more properly obtainable by inserting express provisions against smoking in an opium den in the Opium Act similar to the provisions against gambling in the Gambling Act.

The appellants are entitled, therefore, to have their convictions reversed as based on rule 4 (iii) (c), which must be held ultra vires of section 5 of the Opium Act. They are, therefore acquitted; those in jail are ordered to be discharged, and those who have paid fines will have their fines refunded.

Convictions and sentences reversed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—

In re GANDELLA RAMUDU.

Obtaining decree by forged documents, whether cheating or extortion—Proceedings under s. 110, whether legal—Joint trial—Association in same offences.

The obtaining of decrees by means of forged documents is neither cheating nor extortion as defined in the Penal Code. Therefore, persons habitually committing such acts cannot be proceeded against under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Two accused cannot be tried together unless their association in the same offence is made out.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, with his No. 1698, dated the 3rd December 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Reference made by the Sessions Judge:—

"The District Magistrate of Kangra has taken security for good behaviour from Chuni and Bhuru, money-lenders of Kathiari village, under section 110, Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears to me that he has done so because he believes that these persons habitually commit extortion or cheating.

"The evidence against them is that they manufacture forged bonds and obtain decrees by false and forged evidence.

"These acts do not, in my opinion, constitute either extortion or cheating as defined in the Penal Code.

"It is true that forgery and obtaining decrees by false evidence are frequently spoken of in English as 'cheating' and in vernacular dagha, but in strict legal parlance such offences do not constitute either cheating or extortion as defined in sections 415 and 390 of the Indian Penal Code.

"I am of opinion that these words, as used in section 110 (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code, must be understood by the Courts to be as defined in the Penal Code.

"It, therefore, appears to me that thereis no evidence that these persons habitually commit cheating.

"I, therefore, report the above result of my examination of this file to the Chief Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, and recommend that the order requiring Chuni and Bhuru to give security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, be set aside."

ORDER.—I agree with the Sessions Judge that the obtaining of decrees by means of forged documents is neither cheating nor extortion as defined in the Penal Code.

In Ganeshi v. Queen-Empress (1) it was held that section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, did not apply to the case of a person who had the reputation of bringing false claims upon forged entries in account books.

In Mahian Mal v. Empress (2) it was held that an habitual forger does not come within any of the classes of offenders specified in section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, from whom security may be demanded.

The above rulings are clear expositions of the law with which I agree.

I would also point out that the two petitioners could not be tried together unless their association in the same offences was made out.

I accept the revision and set aside the order of the District Magistrate calling upon Chuni and Bhuru to furnish security, and discharge them.

Revision accepted.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 524—Seizure by Police of property—Presumption in favour of possessor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110.

The words "is unable to show that it was legally acquired by him" in section 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read consistently with the ordinary Law of Evidence, and not as intended to supersede anything in that law.

Where on a proclamation being issued under section 523 no one except the accused claims to be the owner of the property attached and no evidence is adduced to show clearly that the claim is false, the proper and safest course for the Court is to follow the presumption laid down in section 110 of the Evidence Act and to hold the accused as the owner in the absence of proof to the contrary.

Appeal against the order of the City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Dharamdas Thawardas, for the Appellants.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Assistant Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the City Magistrate, Karachi, directing under section 524, Criminal Procedure Code, that certain property seized by the Police under section 523 from the possession of one Aslum should be sold and the proceeds credited to Government.

Before the Magistrate the appellant, Aslum, produced several witnesses in support of his claim to the property, some of which actually bears his name: but the Magistrate says he is not satisfied with his evidence and has accordingly passed the order complained of.

There are, no doubt, grounds on which some, at any rate, of this evidence can be attacked as suspicious, and I am far from saying that there may not be a reasonable doubt as to all the property having been honestly acquired by the appellant. But, on the other hand, it is certainly in his favour that, though the Sub-Inspector of Police in his report of 11th May 1913 says, a search is being made for the owners,—who (it may be remarked) might be the more easily traced as some of the articles bore certain names, mentioned in that report—and though a proclamation regarding the property was issued over six months ago, yet no one else has come forward to claim this property. Nor has there been elicited any evidence which clearly shows that the claim is a false one, and that the witnesses produced by appellant are liars who have conspired with him to support a false claim.

In these circumstances, I think the proper and safest course is to follow the presumption laid down in section 110 of the Evidence Act and to hold that accused is the owner in the absence of proof to the contrary. It is said that the words "is unable to show that it was legally acquired by him" in section 524 reverses this presumption; but I do not agree with this view. Those words must be read consistently with the ordinary Law of Evidence, and not as intended to supersede anything in that law, for there is nothing in the section to indicate that the latter was the intention of the Legislature. This view is also in general accordance with the ruling of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Bahinu (1), that the discretion given by the words "such order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of such property" in section 523, Criminal Procedure Code, must be judicially exercised, and where there is nothing to show the title to the property produced, it should be ordered to be delivered to the person in whose possession it had been at the time of attachment. In the present case I think there are no sufficient grounds for holding that the Crown should have the property rather than the appellant from whose possession it was taken.

The Magistrate's order is accordingly reversed, and he should be directed to give the property in question to the appellant.

Order reversed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 436—Discretion of Sessions Judge—Power of High Court to interfere

A High Court should be slow to interfere with the exercise of the very wide discretion with which Sessions Judges have been invested under the provisions of section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Fattu v. Fattu, 26 A. 564; A. W. N. (1904) 125; 1 A. L. J. 292; 1 Cr. L. J. 519, followed.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Meerut.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji (with him Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji), for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—A complaint was made by one Bansi against the applicant Mangat Rai, patwari of his village, containing allegations which, if proved, would undoubtedly serve to establish the commission of an offence punishable under section 218 of the Indian Penal Code, if not also an offence under the forgery sections of the Indian Penal Code. After an inquiry which on the face of it appears to have been somewhat cursory, the Magistrate passed an order of discharge without even examining the accused. The matter was taken to the Sessions Judge in revision, and he has ordered a commitment on the record as it stands. I find that his order has since been complied with and Mangat Rai stands committed to the Court of Session on a charge drawn up prior to the filing of this application in this Court. The principles applicable to the conduct of a Magistrate when inquiring into the commission of an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Session and to the exercise of the discretion vested in the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge by the provisions of section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, have been very clearly laid down in the case of Fattu v. Fattu (1), with which I find myself in the fullest possible agreement. I regard the present case as a somewhat unfortunate one. The inquiry by the Magistrate in the first instance seems to have been perfunctory and unsatisfactory in several respects. Moreover, the Magistrate apparently entertained an opinion that Bansi's denial on oath of the genuineness of certain writing purporting to be his signature was of no evidential value unless that denial was corroborated. The Sessions Judge has, on the other hand, so framed his order that he would almost appear to have been under the impression that the Magistrate was bound to commit the accused for trial merely because the evidence given by Bansi, if believed, would justify conviction. The impression left on my mind by an examination of the record is that the case was one in which the learned Sessions Judge would have exercised a sounder discretion if he had ordered further inquiry to be made, instead of ordering commitment on the record as it stands. At the same time it cannot be denied that the Sessions Judge's order was within his discretion, and the ruling to which I have just referred is in favour of the principle that this Court should be slow to interfere with the exercise of the very wide discretion with which Sessions Judges have been invested under the provisions of section 436 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Another point for consideration in this case is that there has now been an order of commitment, which it would not be proper for this Court to quash except on a point of law. On the whole as the case now stands, I think it better that the trial of Mangat Rai should proceed in accordance with the commitment order. I dismiss this application.

Application dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 415, 419—Cheating by personation—Inducing muharrir of a fair to write false name in certificate of sale—Muharrir deceived—Evidence—Thumb impression—Expert opinion, value of.

AHMADA v. EMPEROR.

Two persons A and L persuaded a muharrir at a fair to write in a certificate of sale of a mare that L was the purchaser and one S the seller. A affixed his thumb mark for S. It was found that (i) the mare was not stolen property, but (ii) it was come by in some doubtful fashion and that (iii) the muharrir was deceived:

Held, that for whatever reasons L and A did deceive the muharrir and did induce him to write a false certificate, they were guilty of cheating by personation.

The deliberate opinion of an expert that two thumb marks exactly agree is on quite a different plane from an opinion as to handwriting and is sufficient to conclude that the same thumb made both the marks.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Shahpur Division, Lyallpur, dated the 4th July 1913.

Chaudhari Nabi Bakhsh, for the Petitioners.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused, Ahmada and Lalu, were challaned upon section 419, Indian Penal Code, for cheating one Shams-ud-din (P. W. No. 2), a muharrir at Lyallpur Fair, by persuading him, in the exercise of his duty, to write in a parchi or certificate of sale of a mare that Lalu was the purchaser and one Sultan the seller, and affixing his thumb-mark. The learned Magistrate before whom the case came for trial, after recording the evidence for the Crown, thought that the offence disclosed by the evidence was forgery punishable under section 465, Indian Penal Code, and drew up a charge accordingly, and in the end found both accused guilty as charged and sentenced them to twelve months' rigorous imprisonment.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge remarked that the Magistrate, in holding that no cheating by personation had occurred, had overlooked the fact that the muharrir, Shams-ud-din, had been deceived. Later in his judgment the learned Sessions Judge remarks that conviction under section 419, Indian Penal Code, can be supported on the record, and goes on to say:—

"The prosecution has not succeeded in showing that the mare to whom (?) the certificate related was stolen property, but there is little doubt that she was come by in some doubtful fashion, otherwise the proceedings of the two brothers at the horse fair would be a meaningless farce. I uphold the convictions and dismiss both appeals."

The learned Judge who admitted this revision did so because of a doubt in his mind whether on the Sessions Judge's findings a conviction under section 419, Indian Penal Code, could be sustained. The Sessions Judge's findings of fact seem to be:—

(i) the mare is not proved to be stolen property;

(ii) it was, however, come by in some doubtful fashion;

(iii) the muharrir was deceived.

The definition of cheating in section 415, Indian Penal Code, runs thus:—

"Whoever, by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property, or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property, is said to 'cheat.'"

Mr. Nabi Bakhsh in this connection draws my attention to several rulings, such as Mojey v. Queen-Empress (1) and rulings of the Madras High Court, and argues that no harm was caused, or was likely to be caused, to the muharrir by the alleged deception, the possibility of his getting into trouble being very remote. On the other hand, in Mahadev Lal v. Dhauraj (2), where a person went to an opponent's Pleader and, pretending that he was one of that Pleader's clients, tried to induce him to write a letter that would have damaged the opponent's case, it was held that cheating of that Pleader by personation was complete.

But, to whatever extent High Courts may have contradicted themselves and each other, I find in the rulings of this Court principles laid down which I must follow. In Nand Lal v. Queen-Empress (3) it was held that "intentionally" in section 415 aforesaid only governs the clause in which it occurs, and in Emperor v. Mohabat (4) it was laid down that the words "fraudulently or dishonestly" only qualify the first part of the section, and in both cases the facts

(1) 17 C. 606.
(2) 12 C. W. N. 750; 7 C. L. J. 375; 7 Cr. L. J. 342.
(3) 36 P. R. 1888 Cr.

are in line with those of the present case. In the later ruling, indeed, the facts are so exactly on all fours with those now before me that, when I find the Full Bench their upholding a conviction under section 419, Indian Penal Code, there is nothing more to be said on this aspect of the case.

The other points raised need not detain us long. It is contended, on the strength of Jalal-ud-din v. Emperor (5), a case of handwriting experts, Pancha Mondal v. Emperor (6) and Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (7) (thumb-impression cases), that inasmuch as here the only evidence, that the thumb-mark on the parchi is Ahmada's and no other person's, is the opinion of the expert, the fact should not be considered sufficiently proved. (The muharrir cannot identify the affixer of the mark, as is natural enough.)

My view here is that each case must be dealt with on its own merits; and, in my opinion, the deliberate opinion of an expert that two thumb-marks exactly agree is on quite a different plane from an opinion as to handwriting. It is a reasonable deduction from experience that no two human beings have the same thumb-markings, and, if no differences whatever can, after the most careful examination, be found between one thumb-mark and another, the conclusion is irresistible that the same thumb made both. Add to this that Sultan, the alleged vendor, seems to be a mythical person.

The facts, then, have been rightly found against the petitioners; and the absence of proof that the mare had actually been stolen is immaterial. For whatever reason, petitioners did deceive the muharrir and did induce him to write a false certificate and they are thus, under the rulings of this Court, guilty of cheating by personation. Petitioners do not ask for a further opportunity to produce defence evidence in view of the lower Appellate Court's virtual alteration of the sections from 465 to 419.

I dismiss the petition.

NARAYENDAS—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499, Excep. III—Privileged occasion—Substantial truth—Exaggeration—Interference in revision with a pending case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439.

Where the occasion is privileged, it is not necessary to justify every detail of the charge, provided the gist of the libel is proved to be in substance correct and the details, etc., which are not justified, produce no different effect on the mind of the reader than the actual truth would do.

Where in a newspaper report the main aspersion of the accused against the complainant is true, the fact that there is some exaggeration or departure from strict truth does not deprive the accused of the protection provided in Exception 3 to section 499, Indian Penal Code.

Mere exaggeration, or even gross exaggeration, does not make a comment unfair. Where the matter is of public interest, the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale and some allowance must be made for even intemperate language, provided, however, that the writer keeps himself within the bounds of substantial truth and does not misrepresent or suppress any facts.

As a rule, a Court of Revision does not interfere with a pending case, but where the real object of the complainant is, not to vindicate his own character or to exact from the defendant the substantive penalty for his own offence, but to subject him to heavy financial loss and very serious and long continued annoyance by the very process of the trial itself, the Court will quash proceedings.

Application for quashing proceedings under section 499, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Sukkur.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodharam, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, for the Opponent.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—This is an application under sections 435, 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to quash the proceedings pending against Mr. Murlidhar under section 499, Indian Penal Code.

In July last, Mr. Narayendas, the present complainant, and Mr. Murlidhar, the accused, both of whom are Municipal Councillors of Shikarpur, were candidates for the post of Chairman of the Managing Committee.

On the 23rd July a paragraph contributed anonymously by Mr. Narayendas appeared in the Sind Gazette, stating that he, Mr. Narayendas, intended to put certain questions set out in detail to certain Municipal Councillors at the next general meeting. These questions were obviously aimed at extracting information that would reflect unfavourably on Mr. Murlidhar and injure his chances of being elected Chairman, and any one perusing the paragraph would be impressed with the idea that statements prejudicial to Mr. Murlidhar's character as a Municipal Councillor would shortly be published.

On the 2nd August there was a General Meeting of the Municipality and, at that meeting, Mr. Narayendas asked permission to put his questions. It is admitted that permission was refused, and that the President suggested that Mr. Narayendas was fishing for scandal, and that the questions were of a scandalous nature and could not be allowed.

On the 7th August there appeared in the Sind Gazette a letter signed "One who was present," giving what purports to be a verbatim account of the incident. This letter was contributed by Mr. Murlidhar, and forms the subject of the complaint.

On the 14th September Mr. Murlidhar was elected Chairman of the Managing Committee. On the 16th October Mr. Narayendas filed his complaint alleging that the letter contained a very exaggerated and false account of the transaction, and attributed to him conduct unworthy of a Municipal Councillor of the position and respectability of the complainant, that the imputations were calculated to lower the complainant intellectually and morally in the eyes of the public, and were the result of ill-will and malice.

Attached to the complaint was a list of 30 witnesses including a member of the Legislative Council, the Assistant Collectors of Shikarpur and Rohri, the City Magistrates of Shikarpur and Sukkur, two head-munshis, a Municipal Engineer, the Editor or Manager of three newspapers and a large number of Municipal Councillors, Pleaders, etc.

The complaint was lodged befor the District Magistrate, Sukkur, who, after examining the complainant, considered it was necessary to allow the matter to proceed.

Owing to the number of Magistrates summoned as witnesses, considerable difficulty has been experienced in finding a Magistrate to try the case: it is now pending before the Huzur Deputy Collector, Sukkur, who has expressed himself unable to take more than two witnesses a day without unduly encroaching on his revenue duties.

Mr. Murlidhar applies that the proceedidgs be quashed, on the ground that the letter complained of is not defamatory and that, at any rate, the matter is too trivial to be taken notice of by a Court of Law.

The letter consists of about 600 words: no particular passage is relied on in the complaint as being false, and we must consider it as a whole. It refers, firstly, to the paragraph of the 23rd July, and points out that, as it contained insinuations against Mr. Murlidhar, the result of Mr. Narayendas' action should also be published. The report is in the form of a conversation between the President and Mr. Narayendas and if the words put into Mr. Narayendas' mouth alone are taken, it will be found that he is reported to have merely asked permission to put his questions and to have urged his right to put them in dignified and moderate language. The President is represented as having become irritated, and as having characterised Mr. Narayendas' conduct as scandalous and his questions as improper, groundless, and scandalous and to have peremptorily ordered him to sit down.

Now, Mr. Narayendas had himself published in the said Gazette the questions which he intended to put, with an obvious innuendo defamatory of Mr. Murlidhar, and "where a man appeals to the public by writing to the newspaper to expose what he deems abuses, he cannot complain if the Editor inserts other letters in answer to his own refuting his charges. A man who has commenced a newspaper warfare cannot complain if he gets the worst of it." (Odgers, page 205). The occasion was privileged and where this is so, it is not necessary to justify every detail of the charge, provided that the gist of the libel is proved to be in substance correct, and that the details, etc., which are not justified, produce no different effect on the mind of the reader than the actual truth would do,

MURLIDHAR JERAMDASS v. NARAYENDAS.

On complainant's own admission, I am satisfied that the report was substantially true. Complainant's grievance appears to be that the report is exaggerated and represents him as having been subjected, at the hands of the President, to more indignified treatment than he really was. But if, as is conceded, Mr. Montgomery's letter of the 12th August accurately relates what occurred, I am convinced that the general impression conveyed by the letter was practically the same as would have been conveyed by the strict truth. I am of opinion that on the allegation and admissions of complainant, Mr. Murlidhar could not be properly convicted of defamation.

I should, however, have been unwilling to quash the proceedings on this ground alone. But a deliberate abuse of Criminal Procedure appears to be contemplated. I am convinced that the real object of complainant is not to vindicate his own character or to exact from the defendant the substantive penalty for his offence, but to subject him to heavy financial loss and very serious and long continued annoyance by the very process of the trial itself. The Criminal Procedure is to be used not as a means to a justifiable end, but as an end in itself. I am further influenced by the fact that the trial, if allowed to proceed, would cause serious inconvenience to a very large number of public officers and leading citizens without even a remote probability of any public good resulting.

I would, therefore, quash the proceedings and direct the applicant to be discharged.

FAWCETT, J. C.—I concur in the view taken by my learned brother that the complaint, read with Mr. Montgomery's letter of 12th August 1913, which complainant accepts as a correct statement of what occurred at the meeting in question, discloses no offence of defamation of which applicant, Mr. Murlidhar, could properly be convicted.

The main imputations on Mr. Narayendas contained in the letter to the Sind Gazette which forms the subject of the complaint, were made not by the accused, but by Mr. Montgomery, the President of the meeting, and no objection is taken by the complainant to the imputation conveyed in Mr. Montgomery's expression of opinion that the questions proposed to be put by Mr. Narayendas were of a scandalous nature, such as should not be allowed to be put. That being so, it is clear that Mr. Murlidhar, who merely published that opinion, cannot be put in a worse position.

The only basis on which the complaint is made against him is that the account of the meeting contributed by him to the Sind Gazette contains some exaggeration and invention: but I entirely agree with my learned colleague that there is nothing in that account which can reasonably be held to be likely to convey to an ordinary reader any imputation affecting the complainant's character and fitness for a Municipal Councillorship, beyond that admittedly made by Mr. Montgomery. It was only by attributing perverse or strained hidden meanings to certain expressions that complainant's Pleader could attempt to show the contrary. For instance, even if the President said, this is scandalous. instead of, this is scandalous on your part (as he is reported to have done in Mr. Murlidhar's letter), the addition of the words underlined would not, at any rate to an ordinary reader, make any material difference. Similarly even if it be untrue that Mr. Murlidhar said he wished answers had been given to show the falsity of Mr. Narayendas' insinuations, this does not convey any real imputation on the latter especially in view of his admission that he did not know what was the nature of the promises imputed to Mr. Murlidhar. It is merely a case of one man affirming a certain thing to be a fact and another denying it. Nor does the fact (even if it be untrue) that according to the account complained of Mr. Naraindas did not at once accept the President's ruling and attempted to press his view that the questions should be allowed—which is a common-place feature in Parliamentary, Municipal and other meetings—, in any way convey an imputation injurious to his character as a public man. I should imagine it would, on the contrary, enhance his reputation among his friends. In fact there is nothing in the article which, so far as imputations are concerned, goes beyond what Mr. Montgomery admittedly said, or which (apart from Mr. Montgomery's aspersions) can in any way be said to be likely to harm complainant's reputation.

Again, so far as Mr. Murlidhar, by publishing his account of the matter, may be taken to have adopted the imputations which he puts into the mouth of Mr. Montgomery, the case, in my opinion, clearly falls under the third exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code, where it is provided that "it is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of any person touching any public question, and respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further." The aspersions on Mr. Narayendas' conduct in putting these questions at a Municipal meeting fall within this category, and Mr. Murlidhar's "good faith" is sufficiently shown by the fact that his main aspersion that the President stigmatised the questions as scandalous and disallowed them on that ground is admittedly true. Even if there is some exaggeration or departure from strict truth in the account of the matter given by Mr. Murlidhar, this is immaterial and does not, for the reasons already mentioned, take away this protection given by this 3rd exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code. For this is on the same footing as similar exaggeration in commenting on a public man's conduct. As said in Merivale v. Carson (1) Lord Esher, M. R.: "Every latitude must be given to opinion and to prejudice, and then an ordinary set of men with ordinary judgment must say whether any fair man would have made such a comment..... Mere exaggeration, or even gross exaggeration, would not make this comment unfair." Again, as laid down in Edmondson v. Birch & Co., Ltd. (2), the law is that, where a matter is of public interest, the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale, and that some allowance must be made for even intemperate language, provided however that the writer keeps himself within the bounds of substantial truth and, does not misrepresent or suppress any facts. In this case there is no allegation that there has been any suppression of facts which would put complainant's conduct in a more favourable light, and the accused's account of what occurred at the meeting is shown to be substantially true.

The intention of the 3rd exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code, is that "every person ought to be allowed to comment in good faith on the proceedings of (these) volunteer servants of the public with the same freedom which he is allowed to comment on the proceedings of the official servants of the public," see Note R. of the authors of the Code, cited in Ratanlal's Law of Crimes, 4th Edition, page 694.* Complainant should not have been so thin-skinned as to rush off at once to a Criminal Court in this matter, especially as he had himself invited publicity to it; and I agree with my learned colleague in thinking that there is no doubt that his main object is to harrass Mr. Murlidhar, to whom he has been opposed in various Municipal proceedings or elections. Undoubtedly a Court of Revision should be most reluctant to interfere in a pending case, but I am satisfied that this is a case in which such interference is justified and necessary in order to prevent a clear abuse of the right of resort to a Criminal Court. Upon the admitted facts there is no justification for the charge of defamation brought against the accused; and, as was said in the case of Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3), "it follows that he should not be left for a moment longer than is necessary in the position of a person accused of an offence and forced to defend himself against a charge for which there is no legal evidence to establish."

We, therefore, in exercise of the wide powers conferred by section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, quash the proceedings upon the complainant against the petitioner and direct that he be at once discharged.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 952 OF 1914

November 26, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

EMPEROR—APPLICANT

versus

JIWAN—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403—

EMPEROR v. JIWAN.

Previous trial without sanction—Jurisdiction of Court to try accused on some facts after sanction—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 82.

Where the law requires a previous sanction to be given before a charge can be entertained by a Court, that Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction until the sanction has been obtained.

An accused was placed upon trial for aiding and abetting forgery in connection with a document presented for registration and was acquitted. He was then placed upon his trial for aiding and abetting cheating in connection with the same transaction. He was convicted by the Magistrate but was acquitted on appeal. The District Registrar thereupon gave sanction for his trial for an offence under section 82 of the Registration Act. He was committed to Sessions and the Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court suggesting that section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code was a bar to his trial:

Held, that the former trial of the accused for the offence of aiding and abetting forgery was in no way a bar to his trial for an offence under the Registration Act, nor was his trial and acquittal of the offence of aiding and abetting the cheating a bar by reason of clause 4 of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code as at the former trial the Court was not competent to charge with or convict or acquit of the offence with which he was subsequently charged by reason of the want of sanction.

In re Sams-ud-din, 22 B 711, followed

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur suggesting that the commitment of one Jiwan Kahar on a charge under section 82 (a) of the Registration Act for trial in his Court be quashed. The facts are simple. One Musammat Jhabbo died. Musammat Mulo forged a lease of certain land in favour of her own sons, signing the name of Musammat Jhabbo thereto. She then went to the Registration office and personating Musammat Jhabbo presented the document for registration. Jiwan Kahar identified her as being Musammat Jhabbo. The document was registered and returned to Musammat Mulo. Musammat Mulo was placed upon her trial and convicted of the offence of forgery. She was also placed upon her trial and convicted of the offence of cheating the Sub-Registrar. Jiwan was placed upon his trial for aiding and abetting forgery. He was acquitted. He was then placed upon his trial for aiding and abetting cheating. He was convicted by the Magistrate, but acquitted on appeal. Thereupon the District Registrar gave sanction for his trial for an offence under section 82 of the Registration Act. The Magistrate has now committed the case for trial, and hence the present reference. The learned Sessions Judge in a long order of reference suggests that under section 403 the man cannot now be tried on the same facts for this offence under the Registration Act, because this was an offence for which he might have been charged (under section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code) and convicted (under section 237) at his former trial. One point is quite clear that the former trial and acquittal of Jiwan for the offence of aiding and abetting the forgery is in no way a bar to his trial for an offence under the Registration Act. The question is whether or not his trial and acquittal of the offence of aiding and abetting the cheating is a bar to the present trial. Where the law requires a previous sanction to be given before a charge can be entertained by a Court, that Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction until the sanction has been obtained. This was held in In re Sams-ud-din (1). At the former trial of Jiwan he could not have been charged with or convicted or acquitted of the offence with which he is now charged by reason of the want of sanction. Clause 4 of section 403 lays down that a person acquitted of any offence constituted by any acts may, notwithstanding such acquittal, be subsequently charged with and tried for any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed, if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged. Therefore, it is clear that Jiwan may now be tried for the offence under section 82 of the Registration Act. I, therefore, cannot accept the reference and order the record to be returned. The Sessions Judge will proceed with the trial. He no doubt will take into consideration, if he finds the accused guilty, the fact that the man has already been subjected to two trials and has served a considerable period in jail.

Record returned.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 522 OF 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone.
MOOLA—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256—Accused, right of, to cross-examine prosecution witnesses after charge is framed—Magistrate, duty of—Omission to ask, effect of.

The provisions of section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, are imperative and it is an illegality to ignore them.

It is not until a specific charge has been drawn up and explained to the accused that he is in a position fully to cross-examine the witnesses for the Crown and, therefore, he should in all cases be asked at that time if he wishes to re-call witnesses for cross-examination, for the omission to follow the procedure involves remand and re-trial of the case from the point of drawing up of the charge

Appeal from an order of the District Magistrate of Ferozepore District, dated the 11th June 1913.

Lala Ram Rattan, for the Appellant.

ORDER.—In this case the learned District Magistrate of Ferozepore has convicted one Moola under section 411-75, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to seven years' transportation. The two bullocks stolen were the property of Manohar Lal, a contractor of Ferozepore. There can be no doubt that they were stolen on the night of 5-6th May 1913, and that a report was made at once. The accused was seen taking these two bullocks early in the next morning by head constable Abdul Ghani, who happened to be on duty in another case, on the kutcha road between Ferozepore d Zira near the village of Walur. Something in accused's conduct roused his suspicions and so he followed the accused, deputing one of his companions, Mangu by name, P. W. No. 5, to go and head him off. Mangu shouted to the accused who thereupon ran away, passed through the village of Naju Shah Misri, told the people there that he was on his way to Allah Ditta, Zaildar, and so arrived at the village of Saidanwala with the head constable, Shahzada, Anokha and Mangu in hot pursuit. They followed his tracks to Allah Ditta's haveli, one or two of the witnesses saying that they actually saw him entering it. Allah Ditta, who was at the door of the house, at first denied that anybody had come there, but ultimately produced the accused, who said then, and says still, that he that morning had been entrusted with the charge of these cattle to take them to Allah Ditta's house. Thereupon the accused was arrested. The case was investigated and he was chalaned.

In the judgment of the learned District Magistrate there are two or three slips, which fortunately do not in the circumstances matter very much. For instance, he says that Abdul Ghani, head constable, was out on duty in another case looking for a stolen buffalo. This is not correct, because in tha case the animal missing was a bullock. Again, he talks of Abdul Ghani and his companions pursuing the accused to the Rukan Shahwala village where, he says, the accused entered Alla Ditta's haveli. I do not know where he gets the name of Rukan Shahwala from, for the witnesses consistently say that the name of the village is Saidanwala.

There is one section in the Criminal Procedure Code which is not infrequently ignored by Subordinate Courts, though their attention has been drawn to it by many rulings and though the section is in itself quite clear. I allude to section 256, in connection with which it has been frequently held that its provisions are imperative and that it is an illegality to neglect them. The relevant portion of the section runs, "he shall be required to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken." This was not done in the present case, and it has been made a ground of appeal in arguments before me. I would like to draw the attention of the learned District Magistrate to such rulings as Nilkanta Singh v. Queen-Empress (1), Queen-Empress v. Henry C. Kaye (2) and Zamunia v. Ram Tahal (3). No doubt the accused in this case did in a meagre way cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, when they were in the witness-box; but this is no reason whatever why section 256 should be ignored, as it has been laid down more than once that it is not until a specific charge has been drawn up and explained to the accused that he is in a position fully to cross-examine the witnesses for the Crown, and it is for this reason that the Legislature enacted the section aforesaid.

It has been usually held that the omission to follow section 256 involves remand and re-trial of the case from the point of the drawing up of the charge, and, therefore, it must be obvious to the District Magistrates of how vital importance it is that the accused should, in all cases, be asked at the appropriate time if he wishes to re-call witnesses for cross-examination. However clear the case may appear to be against the prisoner, the law apparently allows the lower Court no option in this matter, and the result of this sort of carelessness is a great deal of trouble and inconvenience to all concerned.

At the same time I am not inclined to hold at present that Moola has cleared himself of the charge on the record. He certainly ran away when challenged, and the evidence that he offers as to his being employed to transport the cattle to Allah Ditta's house is discrepant. In his favour one point may be here noticed, namely, that he told the villagers of the Naju Shah Misri village that he was going to Allah Ditta Zaildar's house and that he did actually go there. Now, a thief would not ordinarily tell people where he really intended to go.

However, it is unnecessary to discuss the case any further at present, for it must be remanded to the District Magistrate in orde that he may give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. I, therefore, return the papers to the learned District Magistrate in order that this may be done with as little delay as possible, the result being reported to this Court.

Case remanded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Prosecution, direction of, against a witness—Perjury, order to prosecute for, while case still pending, whether proper.

An order directing the prosecution of a witness under section 193, Indian Penal Code, while the case in connection with which he is said to have made a false statement is still pending in the Sessions Court, is improper.

Criminal revision of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that one Birendra Nath Das Gupta, the petitioner before us, was examined as a witness in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail on the prosecution of one Rasiklal Das Gupta and others on charges relating to the death of the petitioner's father, Parbati Nath Das Gupta. The accused in that case were committed to take their trial before the Court of the Sessions Judge. While the case was still pending in the Court of Session, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail directed the prosecution of the petitioner under section 193, Indian Penal Code, with reference to a certain statement made by him in the course of his deposition. These statements refer to the first information which he had lodged before the Police in the case, and in them he alleged that the Sub-Inspector who took his first information recorded it incorrectly. He thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Jessore to show cause why the order directing his prosecution should not be set aside. We granted the Rule, mainly on the ground that the case in which he had deposed was still pending in the Sessions Court. No one appears to show cause, but the District Magistrate has submitted an explanation in which he says that the point at issue, namely, whether the substance of the information has been correctly recorded by the Sub-Inspector, is comparatively so little connected with the charge of causing death now before the Court of Session that it is unnecessary to await the result of the trial. We are unable to take this view. It is clear that the question whether the first information in the case has been correctly recorded is necessarily one of great importance at the trial, and in any case the impropriety of taking proceedings against a witness while the case is still pending cannot be too strongly insisted upon.

For these reasons we make this Rule absolute and set aside the order directing the prosecution of the petitioner. If he repeated the statements alleged to be false before the Sessions Judge, it will be for the Sessions Judge to consider whether or no his prosecution is advisable.

In conclusion we have further to observe with regret that in his explanation in dealing with the 6th ground set out in the petitioner's application the District Magistrate has used language of unnecessary and unbecoming violence, and that his aspersions on the legal advisers of the petitioner obviously made on no material are highly improper. We trust that we shall have no occasion to repeat this censure.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 247—Acquittal on date not fixed for hearing—Nullity—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to ignore acquittal and proceed with case.

An order of acquittal passed under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, on a date which was not fixed for the hearing, is a nullity and does not debar the Magistrate from taking up the case and trying the accused without an order from a superior Court to revive it.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Bhagulpur, dated 31st March 1914, reversing that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Modhipura, dated 9th March 1914.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, with Babu Durjendra Nath Mukerjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Monmotho Nath Mukerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case obtained a Rule from this Court calling upon the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur and also on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Magistrate, dated the 10th January 1914, and the order of the Sessions Judge, dated the 31st March 1914, should not be set aside and such other order made as to this Court may seem fit, on the ground that the order of the Magistrate, dated the 10th January 1914, was so irregular as to amount to no trial at all.

The facts of the case are these. on the 12th December 1913 a complaint was made by the petitioner against a certain number of persons. The date for the hearing as fixed by the Magistrate was the 16th January 1914, but it so happened that through some mistake or oversight on the part of the Magistate's peshkar the case was called on for hearing on the 10th of January, i.e., six days before the date actually fixed for hearing. Of course on that date the complainant was absent. The Magistrate thereupon passed an order acquitting the accused under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 16th of January the case was again called on and then the mistake that was made on the 10th January was discovered for the first time. The trying Magistrate ignored the order of acquittal passed on the 10th January and went on with the case. The case was taken up from time to time from the 16th January to the 9th March, witnesses were examined, arguments on both sides heard, and on the 9th of March 1914 the Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced them each to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each. Thereupon the accused preferred an appeal to the Sessions Court. The learned Sessions Judge on the 31st March passed the following order: "Learned Sub-Divisional Officer by his order of acquittal dated the 10th January 1914 debarred himself from trying the accused. The case reported in Suresh Chandra v. Banku (1) is exactly parallel. The whole of the trial was, therefore, illegal, as no superior Court was moved to revive the case. I set aside the conviction and sentence and order that the accused be acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded to appellant."

On the above facts the first question that arises is whether the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer professedly under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 10th January 1914 was a legal order or a mere nullity. If it was a mere nullity, then the trying Magistrate could ignore that order, and ignoring that order could go on with the case which was fixed originally for the 16th and which was also called on for hearing on the 16th when the parties were present. As a matter of fact the trying Magistrate ignoring that order went on with the case, recorded evidence, heard the arguments and then convicted the accused on the 9th March. If it was a nullity, then the order of the learned Sessions Judge, dated the 31st March 1914, cannot stand, because the learned Sessions Judge seems to be of opinion that so long as the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 10th January is not set aside, it is a bar against the re-opening of the case by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

There is a case reported as High Court Proceedings, 17th August 1875. No. 1793 (2), the facts of which are similar to the facts of the present case. The reported case was fixed for hearing on the 17th August, on which date both the parties failed to appear. The Magistrate being at the time on circuit postponed the case on his own motion for the 18th, 19th and 20th August without any intimation being given to the parties. The parties having failed to appear on either of these days, the Magistrate on the 20th August dismissed the complaint for default on the part of the complainant. On the 9th December following, the District Magistrate directed the Magistrate who dismissed the complaint to restore the case to the file and dispose of it in due course. The mater went up to the Madras High Court. It appeared to that High Court that the proceedings of the trying Magistrate were so substantially irregular as to amount to no trial at all, and it was held that in this view the dismissal of the complaint could not be held to operate as an acquittal. This is a clear authority on the point that an order passed on a date which was not fixed for the hearing and on which date the complainant was necessarily absent is no order at all. If it is a nullity, the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction to go on with the case and to come to the finding which he did. The Sessions Judge relies upon the case of Suresh Chandra v. Banku (1). The fact of that case are quite different from the facts of the present case. In this reported case, the complainant was absent on the date fixed for hearing and the Magistrate acquitted the accused under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code. He strictly followed the law. In such a case the order cannot be treated as a nullity.

This being our view, we are of opinion that order of the learned Sessions Judge dated the 31st March 1914 should be set aside, and we set it aside accordingly and direct that the appeal be re-heard on the merits.

Rule made absolute.

Provident Insurance Societies Act (V of 1912)—Insurance Company, whether corporate or share-capital divided into shares—Registration under the Act necessary before carrying on business

An Insurance Society, whether it is a corporate company before or whether its share-capital is divided into shares or not, cannot carry on the business of life insurance unless and until it is registered under the Provident Insurance Societies Act (V of 1912).

Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Oriental Assurance Co. Ltd., 21 Ind. Cas. 258; 40 C. 570, explained.

DY. SUPT. AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS v. SITAL CHANDRA PAL.

Criminal appeal by Government against the order of acquittal of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 20th September 1913.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Sen, Counsel, and Babu Hem Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the Government against an order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, on the 20th September 1913, acquitting the respondents Sital Chandra Pal, Surendra Nath Chowdhury, B. P. Ghosh and Purna Chandra Ghosh of an offence punishable under section 21 of the Provident Insurance Societies Act, V of 1912. That section provides that any Provident Insurance Society which makes default in complying with any of the requirements of this Act and every Director, Manager or Secretary or other officer or agent of the Society who is knowingly a party to the default shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, etc.

The learned Presidency Magistrate, on an apparent misreading of the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the case of Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Oriental Assurance Co., Ltd. (1), thought that the Company in question, called the New King Insurance Company, Ld., was not amenable to Act V of 1912, inasmuch as it was a Company which had share-capital divided into shares. But this is obviously untenable upon the construction of the plain wording of the Act in section 2, sub-clause (8), where it is stated that a Provident Insurance Society means any person or body of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate, which receives premiums or contributions for insuring money, etc. That clearly lays down that whether the society already in existence is a corporate company before or whether its share capital is divided into shares or not, registration under the Provident Insurance Societies Act is necessary before business can be carried on under the conditions laid down in that ct. There is nothing in Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment to the contrary. It appears that the legal advisers of the company were misled, firstly, by a remark which Fletcher, J., made in the course of the argument, and, secondly, by a passage in his judgment at page 578. The remark was that the defendant company cannot be a Provident Insurance Society, as a Provident Society is not incorporated under the Companies Act, but registered or inscribed under the Provident Insurance Societies Act. That is against the view taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for what Fletcher, J., says is that a company incorporated under the Companies Act cannot be a Provident Insurance Society by reason of its registration under the Companies Act, not that any society may not be both a Company and a Provident Insurance Society; and again in the passage in his judgment at page 578 what he says is that the company he was dealing with considered that by issuing policies not exceeding Rs. 500 they can bring themselves under the heading of a Provident Insurance Company and were entitled to carry on business untrammelled by the provisions of the law. This is not so, because under the Provident Insurance Societies Act registration has to be made subject to certain conditions which are set out in the Act and which have to be approved of by the Registrar, and these provisions do not apply to a company which has a share capital divided into shares. In saying this he does not say that a company which wishes to carry on the business of a Provident Insurance Company need not be registered under the Act, but he says that the conditions which are set out in the Act obviously do not apply to a company which has already complied with those conditions in its published prospectus under another Act, and what he is referring to is the form of the policy and he holds that so far from having complied with law they have simply tried to avoid the provisions of another Act, namely, the Indian Life Insurance Act of 1912, which were intended to prevent a company from embarking in the business of life insurance, unless and until they had the amount of cash that was necessary for them to deposit with the Govenor-General in Council in order to meet their obligations. So in this case the Act V of 1912 which is before us was intended to prevent the company from embarking in the business of life insurance unless and until it had been registered under the Act. There seems to have been a misunderstanding, and the learned Standing Counsel who appears for the Government does not press for anyting more than a nominal penalty. But a mistake of law cannot take the defendants out of the word "knowingly" in the section.

The order of acquittal must, therefore, be set aside and in lieu thereof the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 will each be fined Rs. 5. The respondent No. 4, Purna Chandra Ghosh, against whom proceedings do not seem to have been pressed in the Court below, will be exempted from this order.

We understand that the Society has already applied for registration, but that the Government has not yet made rules necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act, and in the circumstances we are of opinion that this conviction should make no difference whatever to the result of any such application.

Appeal allowed.

An omission to administer an oath or affirmation to a deponent is an irregularity which is cured by section 13 of the Oaths Act.

Application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, from an order of the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta, dated 13th January 1914.

Messrs. Jackson and K. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Public Prosecutor, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I have taken some time to consider this matter, having regard to the way in which the matter was placed before me by the accused persons. Under the rules of the Small Cause Court the Registrar of that Court is the officer who is entitled to decide the question of service of summons, and in so doing he is entitled to take evidence, and these proceedings are certainly in the nature of judicial proceedings and, therefore, the matter strictly arises within his jurisdiction. It cannot be said that he was acting in a ministerial capacity, and I find from the petition itself that, so far as the proceedings relating to the services of summons are concerned, the whole of such proceedings were carried on before him. He makes out a list after the service is ready and the cases then go before the Judges.

In this matter he granted the sanction upon an application made by the Public Prosecutor, who was apparently moved by the Chief Judge of the Court to make such an application. An objection was taken that in granting such sanction the persons upon whose statements the Registrar relied were not examined on oath. No doubt the statements as taken down do not show that they were examined on oath. The words "S.O." or "S. A." are not to be found there, but yet under the Indian Oaths Act, section 13, if there was an omission to administer the oath or affirmation, the irregularity, if any, is cured. There is ample authority for that proposition, amongst others see Queen-Empress v. Sewa Bhogta (1), which was referred to in Nundo Lal Bose v. Nistarinee Dassee (2) but the point was not dealt with, and Queen-Empress v. Shava (3), it having been held that accidental or negligent omission in taking oath is saved by section 13 of the Oaths Act. It seems to me that there was no irregularity in granting such sanction, and, under the circumstances, I must discharge the Rule in each matter. The application being of a quasi criminal nature, I discharge the Rule, but do not make any order for costs as against the applicants.

Rule discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 307—Murder—Evidence—Prosecution, duty of, to prove their own story—Weakness of defence, effect of—Right of private defence—Benefit of doubt—Practice.

The prosecution are bound to prove their own story independently and cannot rely upon the weakness of that put forward by the defence.

The tenants of a sahukar zemindar went to his house in a body to make some sort of demonstration against him and perhaps to seize their cotton crop which the zemindar had taken possession of and stored in his house. Probably some of the tenants had weapons and the zemindar, apprehending that some hurt would be caused to him, fired off his gun in the direction of the crowd of villagers without any intention of killing any one or of doing more harm than was necessary for his own protection:

Held, that what the sahukar did was done in the exercise of his right of private defence and that he was, therefore, entitled to the benefit of any doubt which existed.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 21st of May 1914, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Beechey, for the Appellant.

Mr. Herbert, for the Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Lachhman Das, Khatri, and Bogha, Biloch, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Lahore of the murder and abetment of murder respectively of Fateh Din and have been sentenced to death.

They have appealed to this Court through Counsel and their case is also before us for confirmation of the sentence under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code. Lachhman Das has also been convicted of attempting to murder Kabira, and Bogha has been convicted of abetment of the same offence. For these offences they have been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

Fateh Din's death resulted from a gunshot wound, which was admittedly inflicted by Lachhman Das. The occurrence took place in Kot Mathra Das on the 12th of January 1914 at digarwala, as alleged by the witnesses for the prosecution. This would be at about 5 P.M. The stories for the prosecution and the defence are fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and we need not repeat them at length.

Briefly, the prosecution story is that on the day of occurrence Lachhman Das, who was sitting outside in front of his house, sent Bogha, who had recently become his tenant, to bring Sohna (P. W. No. 6) before him. Sohna refused to come and Bogha then proceeded to drag him towards Lachhman Das. During the struggle the deceased Fateh Din, younger brother of Sohna and Kabir (P. W. No. 7), came up and began to rescue Sohna, abusing Bogha. In the scuffle Bogha's pagri was knocked off, and he then called out to Lachhman Das and urged him to fire his gun. Upon this Lachhman Das fired both the barrels of his gun in succession from a distance of about 30 feet and both Fateh Din and Kabir were hit and fell to the ground. Lachhman Das' companions then carried Fateh Din into Lachhman Das' house. while Kabir was removed to his own house by his own friends.

The defence story is that Sohna, Fateh Din and others came to Lachhman Das' house in order to rob him and that in the panic he accidentally fired off his gun.

The learned Sessions Judge has begun by remarking that the case is a difficult one, and we agree with him. It is especially difficult because all the prosecution witnesses, who deposed to the actual occurrence, are hostile to Lachhman Das. It is admitted on both sides that Lachhman Das had for some time past been oppressing, his Mussalman tenants who include Sohna, Fateh Din, Kabir and other prosecution witnesses. He used to take from them as his share ⅓rd of the produce, but had recently enhanced his demand to one-half and had admittedly taken possession of the whole of the tenants' previous kharif cotton crop, which he kept in his house. Under the circumstances, it is necessary to receive with caution the evidence of the prosecution witnesses.

We have considered the case very carefully, and our conclusion is that the story told by the prosecution witnesses cannot be accepted as a whole. In the first place, we would point out that the allegation as to Bogha instigating Lachhman Das to fire his gun was not contained in the first information report which was made at the thana at 9 P.M. on the night of the occurrence. Sohna made the report, and what he said was that during his struggle with Bogha, Lachhman Das, who was sitting close by, came up with the loaded gun and fired twice. He said nothing, whatever, about Bogha calling out to Lachhman Das to fire. Again, in Fateh Din's dying declaration recorded by a first Class Magistrate on the 13th of January he stated :—

"Finding that Bogha was taking away my brother, named Sohna, I put the bundle of fodder on the wall of my compound and myself ran after him. From the front my brother met me running. When he met me, we both stopped. Other persons had also collected. On this Babu Lachhman Das stood up with the gun. Lachhman Das fired his gun at me. The shot struck me at my belly, right arm and right thigh."

From this it will be seen that Fateh Din also never said that Bogha had instigated Lachhman Das to fire. His account also differs from that of the prosecution witnesses, inasmuch as he says that Sohna had escaped from Bogha and no struggle was going on between them at the time when Lachhman Das fired his gun. From the above facts we think there can be no doubt at all that, in any case, the story of the prosecution has been improved so as to implicate Bogha as an abettor of what Lachhman Das did. The story in itself appears to us to be an improbable one. Even according to the prosecution witnesses, no hurt was being caused to Bogha and there was no immediate fear of any being caused. He himself was the aggressor and all that the villagers were doing was to rescue Sohna from his grasp. There was, therefore, no necessity for Lachhman Das to take the extreme step of deliberately firing his gun, not merely once but twice, at the villagers. Lachhman Das is a Khatri and does not belong to a class which is usually given to deeds of violence, and there is no evidence on the record to show that he is a man of particularly violent character. The action attributed to him by the prosecution witnesses is, we consider, very improbable. Fateh Din was admittedly found inside the house of Lachhman Das by the Sub-Inspector when he reached the village after midnight. This fact, if anything, supports the story of the defence that Fateh Din himself along with others entered the house of Lachhman Das and was shot while inside the house. According to the prosecution, Lachhman Das was standing outside his house when he fired the gun and the villagers were at a distance of some 30 feet. A number of Fateh Din's companions were admittedly present, some six eye-witnesses have been produced, and according to the first information report others also were present. Kabira, who was injured at the same time as Fateh Din, was carried away by his companions. We see no reason why Fateh Din also should not have been carried away to his house if he had been injured at the place where the prosecution witnesses say he was injured. We think it improbable that Fateh Din's companions would have allowed Lachhman Das' people to carry him into his house. Lachhman Das had fired off both barrels of his gun, and the villagers, therefore, could have had no immediate fear of his firing again. They would have hardly run off, leaving Fateh Din lying on the spot and at the mercy of Lachhman Das and his party.

The occurrence took place, according to the prosecution evidence, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, but the report was not made at the Police Station, which is only four miles distant, until 9 P.M. Considering how near the Police Station was there was nothing to prevent the reporter from reaching there between 6 and 7 P.M. The delay in making the report has not been explained. The learned Sessions Judge says he has no doubt that some sort of discussion took place before the party went to the thana.

Mr. Beechey for the appellant, Lachhman Das, urges that the delay shows that the reporter and his party did not go to the thana at once, because they knew they were in the wrong and they had to consult together first as to what course they should pursue. The reporter and his friends certainly had time for a lengthened consultation before they went to the Police Station, and the delay in going is suspicious. Lachhman Das did not go to the Police Station at all, but instead went to Kot Radha Kishen Railway Station from where at 10-30 P.M. he despatched telegrams giving his version of the occurrence to the Lieutenant-Governor and other high officials. Kot Radha Kishen is five miles from the scene of the occurrence, and we have no doubt that Lachhman Das did not leave his village until after the villagers had started for the thana. We do not consider that any inference unfavourable to him should be drawn from this fact. We have no doubt that he was afraid to come out of his house while Fateh Din's friends were still in the village. The learned Sessions Judge has criticized severely the substance of the telegrams and Lachhman Das' story, and we agree with him that a great part of them is no doubt false, but the prosecution story is not thereby proved to be true. The prosecution were bound to prove their own story independently and cannot rely upon the weakness of that put forward by the defence. We are ourselves inclined to accept the view of Ujagar Singh, assessor, and to think that the truth lies somewhere between the two stories. We reject altogether the theory of a dacoity, but we see nothing improbable in the theory that Sohna and others, the tenants of Lachhman Das, went to his house in a body to make some sort of demonstration against him and perhaps to seize their cotton crop which he had admittedly taken possession of and stored in his house. Probably some of them had weapons and Lachhman Das might very reasonably have apprehended that some hurt would be caused to him. What actually happened it is impossible to say. Lachhman Das probably fired off his gun in the direction of the crowd of villagers without any intention of killing any one or of doing more harm than was necessary for his own protection. It is possible, of course, that he may have exceeded his right of private defence, but the matter is very doubtful; and he is entitled to the benefit of any doubt which exists. We hold, therefore, that anything which was done by him was done in the exercise of his right of private defence and he is, therefore, entitled to an acquittal.

We, therefore, accept the appeals of both Lachhman Das and Bogha, and setting aside their convictions and sentences, acquit them. We have already, by our order of the 23rd of July, directed that they be set at liberty Appeal accepted.

V. T. A. L. NACHIAPPA CHETTY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Sanction to prosecute—Suing wrong person on genuine pro-note—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 209.

Where on a genuine promissory note a plaintiff sues a wrong person of the same name, but not dishonestly and intentionally, a sanction to prosecute him under sections 193 and 209, Indian Penal Code, cannot be granted.

Mr. Compagnac, for the Applicant.

Mr. Woodham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent became the agent of the Chetty firm after the death of the former agent and sued the petitioner upon a promissory note, which was signed in the name of Avanna S. Subramania Pillay in the Small Cause Court. The defendant is one Ana S. Subramania Pillay, a clerk in the Accountant-General's Office. The defendant denied execution and the plaintiff applied for permission to examine the Chetty in India to prove the execution; he subsequently withdrew that application as the Chetty was expected to be in Rangoon shortly, and then withdrew the case as he could not procure the Chetty; and the suit was, therefore, dismissed. The petitioner thereupon applied for sanction to prosecute the respondent for giving false evidence, that is to say, for verifying the plaint in which he stated that the defendant executed the promissory note to his knowledge and by falsely saying that the plaintiff had made demands upon the defendant, under section 93, Indian Penal Code, and also under section 209, Indian Penal Code, of dishonestly making a false claim. The defendant apparently was not maker of the promissory note, and the learned Judge has found that the respondent did not dishonestly sue the wrong person and that as to stating that plaintiff had made demands upon the defendant there was the oath of the plaintiff against the oath of the defendant. Looking at the probabilities of the case it is extremely unlikely that the plaintiff would intentionally sue a wrong person on a genuine promissory note executed by another person and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff had any motive for doing the defendant an injury. The order of the learned Judge refusing to sanction was, in my opinion, correct and there would be no likelihood of the respondent being convicted of the offence either under section 193 or 209, Indian Penal Code.

This application is, therefore, dismissed with costs two gold mohurs

Evidence—Accused absconding after occurrence—Identification of accused.

The accused was convicted of murder. It was found proved that the deceased was shot by the accused at night by a gun or a pistol while he was sleeping on the roof of the house adjoining his own The principal witness was the wife of the deceased who was sleeping close by She stated that when the shot was fired she awoke, opened her eyes and by the flash of the fire-arm recognized the accused who ran away. She at once raised her cries to the effect that the accused had killed her husband. The husband of a sister of the deceased, who was sleeping on his roof on the other side of the lane, stated that he heard a shot and then cries of deceased's wife and then going down from the roof of his house, he recognized the accused. Another witness who lived at a distance of 500 karams, deposed that having heard the cries he was going to the spot when he met the accused on the way. Other evidence was to the effect that after the occurrence the accused absconded from the village:

Held, that the evidence as to identification was insufficient and the fact of accused's absconding was not inconsistent with his innocence, as he might have run away in fear knowing that an incorrect accusation had been brought against him.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge. Rawalpindi, dated the 31st August 1914, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. B. Broadway, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Ahmad, has been convicted of the murder of Ghazan and sentenced to death. The case is before us on appeal and also under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, for orders as to confirmation of the death sentence.

Ghazan was shot on the night of the 26th of June 1914] by some one armed with a gun or a pistol. He was then sleeping on the roof of the house adjoining his own. Close by was sleeping his wife, Musammat Niaz Bibi, who is the principal witness in this case. According to the evidence when the shot was fired, she awoke, opened her eyes and by the flash of the fire-arm recognised the appellant, who then ran away. She also says that she saw another man run away whom she suspected to be one Kutab. She at once raised cries to the effect that Ahmad had killed her husband and that she had recognized him. Fazal Ahmad, who is married to a sister of the deceased, was sleeping on his roof on the other side of the lane. His evidence is that he first heard a shot and then heard Niaz Bibi's cries and then going down from his roof, recognized the appellant as the latter was getting down off the roof of Karamatullah's house. A third witness Jafar, who lives at a Dhok about 500 karams distant, deposes that having heard the outcries he was going to the spot when he met the appellant in the way. Other evidence proves that the appellant, who is employed in a battery stationed at Risalpur, went off to Rawalpindi and was followed and brought back by Fazal Dad, lambardar. The motive for the offence alleged by the prosecution is that the deceased had an intrigue with the wife of the appellant. There is also certain evidence to the effect that a dog, which the deceased had obtained from a neighbour of the appellant about a month before the murder, was missing on the night of the murder, and on the next day was found at the house of his previous master. Jafar says that this dog was with the appellant when he met him on his way to the scene of the murder.

The case rests on the evidence of Musammat Niaz Bibi, Faxal Ahmad and Jafar. It is said that the night was starlit, but that there was no moon. Considering the short time that the flash of a fire-arm gives any light, we have grave doubt whether Musammat Niaz Bibi could have recognized the offender in the manner alleged. The shot was fired at close quarters and whoever fired the shot must have rushed away immediately. As to the evidence of Faxal Ahmad it is obvious that, if his story be true, the appellant after firing the shot must have run over the adjoining roof to the north-east of the spot where the deceased was sleeping and escaped from the village by the lane to the east; this is not at all what we should have expected from anybody living in a westerly direction. The learned Sessions Judge remarks that if the case was fabricated, there is no reason why the witnesses should not say that they had seen the appellant running straight towards his home. But the obvious answer to this is that any one going by the direct road from the scene of the murder to the appellant's house, would not pass anywhere near the house where Faxal Ahmad was sleeping. As to Jafar's evidence, if it be true that he started for the scene of the murder as soon as he heard the cries, he must have got a good distance on the way before any one leaving the village by the road to the east and then making a detour would have rejoined the road which leads from the village to Jafar's Dhok, and it is not easy to understand why any one who had bolted out of the village and wanted to escape observation should so quickly rejoin a public thoroughfare instead of making his way home through the fields. The evidence as to the dog is meagre and the learned Government Advocate states that he does not lay stress on this part of the case. That the appellant went off to Rawalpindi and was brought back by the lambardar is not denied, but this conduct is not inconsistent with that of an innocent man who had run away in fear knowing that an incorrect accusation had been brought against him. The alleged intrigue with the wife of the appellant is said to have been an old one. Assuming the story of the intrigue to be true and that the appellant and the deceased were on bad terms in consequence, it is easy to understand that Musammat Niaz Bibi, awaking on hearing a shot and finding that her husband had been murdered, at once jumped to the conclusion that it was the work of the appellant and so shouted out his name. As to the evidence of Jafar we note that his statement was not recorded by the Police until the third day of the investigation, and his explanation that he had gone off with the corpse to Rawalpindi is not very satisfactory, as there is no reason apparent why he should not have told the Police before he went that he had seen and recognized the appellant.

After carefully considering all the circumstances we are of opinion that the evidence as to identification of the appellant is unreliable, and that though there are, no doubt, grave suspicions against the appellant, the evidence is not strong enough to warrant his conviction. We, therefore, accept the appeal, reverse the conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant and order him to be released.

Appeal accepted.

Mr. N. Grant, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. A. Venkatrayaliah, for the Respondent.

MUHAMMAD v. EMPEROR.

ORDER.—I cannot say that the procedure followed by the Magistrate in this case is altogether satisfactory. The petitioner before me complains that he tendered 15 witnesses, out of whom only two were arbitrarily examined by the Magistrate. At the instance of the petitioner I called for a report from the Magistrate. His report is explicit on the point that he did not refuse to examine any witnesses that were tendered. Had this stood by itself, there would have been a clear and satisfactory answer to the petitioner's complaint. The Magistrate, however, indicates that he was aware of there being other witnesses present on behalf of the petitioner. These witnesses were not examined.

It is not as clear to me as I should have liked whether the petitioner's omission to examine the other witnesses was entirely uninfluenced by anything that fell from the Magistrate. If the petitioner in his own discretion changed his opinion and did not examine witnesses who had been summoned, of course there can arise no question as to the propriety of the Magistrate's proceedings. On the other hand it may be that, in accordance with the decision of Samir Sheikh v. Jahed Sheikh (1), under certain circumstances the Magistrate may take upon himself to refuse to examine witnesses that are in Court. The grounds for refusal are alluded to in that case in two places: (1) from the second paragraph of the judgment it would appear that the parties in that case agreed to let the Magistrate exercise a discretion in the selection of the witnesses; (2) in the penultimate paragraph the Judges refer to the Magistrate's refusal to examine witnesses, on the ground that the case of the petitioner had broken down and that to examine more witnesses would be waste of time. With reference to the first of these I can only say that the Magistrates should always be chary of taking upon themselves the duties of deciding on behalf of the parties which witnesses should be examined. At the same time it might occasionally be difficult in practice to draw the line between such an expression of opinion for the guidance of the parties, as may well be expected from the Magistrate, and an arbitrary interference with the mode in which the parties are entitled to present their case for adjudication.

With reference to the second of the remarks of the learned Judges deciding Samir Sheikh v. Jahed Sheikh (1), I respectfully desire to express no opinion on them. Had it been necessary to do so I should have desired the question to be considered by a Bench.

The Magistrate's report, as I understand it, is to the effect that there was no refusal on his part to examine witnesses, though it may be that the decision of the petitioner to call no other witnesses may have been influenced by what transpired in the Court and possibly what fell from the Magistrate: I am not prepared, therefore, to say that the Magistrate acted in such a manner as to require interference in revision.

The question as to the order of costs under section 148 (3) has given me more anxiety. Had the point been brought to my notice when I called for a report from the Magistrate as to whether he had refused to examine any witnesses, I should certainly have called also for an explanation as to the mode in which the Magistrate arrived at the figure, see Rajendra Narain Roy v. Mohammad Arrumand Khan Chowdhury (2), but the point was not then brought to my notice. I cannot on the materials before me consider that it would be proper for me to interfere in revision on this question either.

The petition will, therefore, be dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Retracted confession of co-accused, value of—Corroboration necessary for conviction.

A retracted confession of a co-accused is admissible under section 30 of the Evidence Act and may be taken into consideration against him, but a conviction cannot be based on it unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other evidence.

MUHAMMAD v. EMPEROR.

Appeals from the orders of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 26th May 1914, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. B. Broadway (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Three persons, Muhammad, Surab and Musammat Khatun, have been found guilty of having murdered Sahib on the night of the 15th and 16th March 1914, and each has been sentenced to transportation for life. The convicts have preferred to this Court two appeals: Muhammad, Appeal No. 544 of 1914 and Surab and Musammat Khatun, a joint Appeal No. 545 of 1914. Both the appeals being closely connected will be disposed of by this judgment.

The learned Sessions Judge has stated the facts in sufficient detail, and after hearing Mr. Nand Lal we think that there is no doubt as to the guilt of Muhammad. Against him, there is his own statement made before the Committing Magistrate incriminating himself and the two co-accused, which amounts to a confession of murder and is clearly admissible against him. In the Sessions Court Muhammad retracted his confession, but the reason given by him for making it before the Committing Magistrate does not appear to us to be convincing. In corroboration of the confession, we have the fact that the accused gave information which led to the discovery of an axe and a chadar from the house of his brother, Madad. Both these articles are the property of the accused, and the report of the Chemical Examiner shows that blood colouring matter was found on them. Then we have the testimony of two persons, Shah Nawaz (P. W. No. 6) and Gheba (P. W. No. 7), who saw, on the evening of the 15th March 1914, the three accused going together with the deceased on the road which leads from their village, Parhal, to Miswal where the murder took place. It is true that the witnesses made their statements before the Police on the 19th of March 1914, but this delay is not a sufficient reason for thinking that they are not telling the truth.

The confession of Muhammad, coupled with the discovery of the property in consequence of the information given by him and with the evidence of the above two witnesses, makes out a sufficiently strong case against them. He has, in our opinion, been rightly convicted and his conviction must, therefore, be affirmed.

The case against Surab and Musammat Khatun, however, stands on a different footing. The retracted confession of Muhammad co-accused is admissible under section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act and may be taken into consideration against them. But it is a well-established principle of law that the confession of a co-accused cannot be regarded as sufficient to support a conviction, unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other evidence. This remark applies with greater force to this case, because Muhammad in his confession assigned the leading part in the commission of the murder to his co-accused and tried to make out that he himself took a minor part. Now, the only corroborative evidence, on which the learned Counsel for the Crown has relied, is the testimony of Shah Nawaz and Gheba which has been already mentioned. The exact distance of the place, where these witnesses met the accused, from their village is not known, but probably it is not more than two miles. It is, therefore, possible that Surab and Musammat Khatun, after meeting the witnesses returned to their own village and did not continue their journey and were not present at the time and the place of the commission of the crime. The evidence is altogether inconclusive and does not shew that these accused participated in the crime. The material on the record in support of a liasion between Surab and Musammat Khatun, which is alleged to be the motive for the murder, is meagre and relates to a general rumour. The learned Sessions Judge was inclined to hold that the intrigue had not been proved, and we think the evidence for the prosecution does not establish the fact.

After a careful consideration of the case, we think that as against Surab and Musammat Khatun, there is no sufficient corroboration of the confession of Muhammad and that their guilt has not been established. Their convictions must, therefore, be set aside. The appeal of Muhammad is dismissed.

Appeal No. 544 dismissed;

KASHI RAM AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 537—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211—Trial for an offence under s. 182—Facts alleged showing offence under s. 211—Conviction, whether to be set aside—Prosecution for minor offence, whether legal.

A Sessions Judge is not justified in ignoring the provisions of section 537, clause (b), of the Criminal Procedure Code in setting aside on appeal, without going into the merits of the case, a conviction for an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, on the ground that the facts alleged disclosed the commission of an offence punishable under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, for which no sanction as required by the Code was taken.

It is perfectly legal to prosecute for the minor offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, when it is doubtful whether the facts alleged constitute a graver offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Farrukhabad.

Mr. D. R. Sawhny, for the Applicant.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision filed under somewhat peculiar circumstances. In the course of an inquiry in a case of dacoity, a statement was made to the investigating Police Officer implicating one Gur Baksh Singh. It appears that Gur Baksh Singh was arrested and remained for some period in custody. He was eventually released by the Police Officer concerned, on the ground that the investigation did not disclose evidence warranting his prosecution. Several persons implicated in the same dacoity were prosecuted to conviction. Gur Baksh Singh subsequently applied to the Superintendent of Police for sanction to prosecute Kashi Ram and Baldeo for having given false information to the investigating Police Officer to his injury and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. Sanction was given by the Superintendent of Police and Kashi Ram and Baldeo were prosecuted to conviction in the Court of a Magistrate of the first Class. They appealed to the Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge formed an opinion that the facts alleged by Gur Baksh Singh disclosed the commission of an offence punishable under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, and presumably also held that, this being the case, it was not legal to prosecute Kashi Ram and Baldeo for the lesser offence. He held that there could be no conviction under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code for want of sanction from the Court in which, or in relation to some proceedings in which, the offence, if any, had been committed. He accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence against the appellants before him, without going into the merits of the case or discussing the evidence in any way. An application for revision of this order has been filed by Gur Baksh Singh and we have entertained it. We treat this case as an exception to the general rule of practice by which this Court declines to entertain an application for revision against an order of acquittal presented by a private person.

The complaint made by Gur Baksh Singh is that Kashi Ram and Baldeo, the persons accused by him, have been acquitted and released without any trial of their appeals on the merits, and in reality without any finding that they either have or have not committed the offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, of which they had been convicted by the trying Magistrate. We are both of opinion that the Sessions Judge was not justified in ignoring the provisions of section 537, clause (b), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There had been a conviction by a Court of competent jurisdiction and, if there was any question as to sanction, the provisions of section 537 could have met the case. Apart from this, the conviction had actually been obtained in respect of an offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code upon a prosecution based on a sanction granted by a competent authority. The Sessions Judge has in fact held that Gur Baksh Singh was not entitled to institute the prosecution for an offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code upon facts which might perhaps also constitute a graver offence punishable by section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. The question of the relation of these two sections inter se has been much debated. In the opinion of one of us, at any rate, Gur Baksh Singh was perfectly entitled to institute a prosecution for the minor offence only, more particularly as it is at least open to doubt whether the facts alleged would constitute an offence under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, whereas there can be no doubt that they fall within the purview of section 182.

On these grounds we set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and send the record back to his Court, directing him to re-admit the appeals of Kashi Ram and Baldeo to the file of pending appeals and dispose of the same on the merits. We understand that the accused Kashi Ram and Baldeo have been released on bail. They should continue at large on the same security until the appeal itself has been properly disposed of.

Application allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133—Removal of encroachment—No finding as to extent of encroachment or bona fides of claim—Order, whether proper—Encroachment, extent of, how ascertained.

Where in a proceeding taken under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, an order was passed for the removal of a house which was said to represent an encroachment or obstruction on a public way, but without any finding as to the extent of the encroachment or as to the claim not being made in good faith:

Held, that the order could not be sustained.

The extent of encroachment should be ascertained by re-laying the map on the ground or otherwise.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sewan, District Saran, dated the 6th Februray 1914.

Babu Rajendra Prosad, for the Petitioner.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, at the instance of one Bhagwat Prosad proceedings were taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sewan under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the removal of a house, which was said to represent an encroachment or obstruction on a public way, namely, plot No. 4257 of the Cadastral Survey Map of the village. The persons to whom the conditional order was directed in showing cause alleged that the house had been built on the site of their pre-existing house and on their own land, being plot No. 4278 of the same Cadastral Survey Map.

Both parties produced certified copies of the village map. These copies were found to disagree in respect of plot No. 4257, but on a copy made by the Vandyke Process having been obtained from the drawing office it was ascertained that the certified copy produced by the complainant was correct.

Thereupon, on the 6th February 1914, the Sub-Divisional Officer made the conditional order absolute and directed the removal of the house in so far as it represented an encroachment on plot No. 4257.

This order clearly cannot be supported. In the first place, there is no finding as to the extent to which the house in question encroaches upon plot No. 4257. The extent of the encroachment should have been ascertained by re-laying the map on the ground or otherwise and should have been definitely specified in the order.

In the second place, there is no finding that the claim made by the petitioners before us was not made and put forward in good faith.

In this connection we may refer the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, inter alia, to the cases of Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee(1), Queen-Empress v. Bisseswar Sahu (2) and Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (3).

We, therefore, set aside the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order of the 6th February 1914 and direct that he do proceed in the manner provided in section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code and dispose of the case in accordance with law.

Order set aside; Case sent back.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182, cls. (5) and (6)—Step-in-aid of execution—Decree-holder accompanying peon to identify judgment-debtor—Ex parte decree, effect of—Judgment-debtor, not having notice, right of.

The mere fact that one of the decree-holders went along with the serving peon to identify the judgment-debtors, is not itself a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of either clause (5) or clause (6) of Article 182 of the Limitation Act.

An ex parte decree passed by a Court is a good decree; but, if the decree is made in the absence of and without notice to the other party, that decree does not bind the other party or does not stand in his way of showing what were the true facts of the case.

Therefore, a judgment-debtor, not having any notice of an order of the Court admitting a previous application for execution as not time-barred, is entitled to show that the application was barred on that date.

Appeal against an order of the Sub-Judge of Hooghly, dated the 8th January 1913, reversing that of the Munsif of Amta, dated the 21st June 1912.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly dated the 8th January 1913. The sole question raised by the appellants in this case is whether the application for execution of a certain decree is barred by limitation. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that it is barred, and the present appeal has been preferred by the decree-holders against that order.

The decree-holders obtained the decree as long ago as the 14th April 1903 in the Court of the Munsif of Gobindpur in the district of Manbhum for Rs. 500. The first application for execution was made as long ago as the 23rd July 1903. That application was dismissed for default on the 5th September 1903.

The next application for execution was dated the 9th July 1906. Notice of that application was ordered to be issued on the 21st July 1906; and according to the appellants, the notice was actually served on the 27th July 1906, one of the decree-holders identifying the judgment-debtors to the serving peon. It is essential for the appellants in the present case to show that what took place on the 27th July 1906 comes under either clause 5 or clause 6 of Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. How the appellants can say that the mere fact that one of them went along with the serving peon to identify the judgment-debtors was itself a step-in-aid of execution, I do not understand. If a person goes along with the serving peon to identify a party, that would not be a step-in-aid of execution, but is one of the necessary preliminaries to enable the Court to deal with the matter when the party, if served, comes before it. In the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the 21st July 1906, when notice was directed to be issued, was the proper date from which he should calculate the time from which the period of limitation commenced to run. I think the learned Judge rightly rejected the 27th July 1906 as being that date, on the ground that one of the decree-holders went along with the serving peon to identify the judgment-debtors. That application was also dismissed for default on the 4th August 1906.

Then the third application was made on the 27th July 1909. The office reported on the next day that the application was barred by limitation. The learned Judge, on the 9th August 1909, without any notice to the judgment-debtors, held that the application for execution of the decree was not barred and directed notice to issue. On the same day the application was registered and nothing else having been done, on the 4th September 1909 the application was dismissed for default.

Then the present application was made on the 24th April 1911 and the decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif at Amta in the district of Hooghly for execution, and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the decree became incapable of execution, because no steps-in-aid of execution had been taken between the 21st July 1906 and the 27th July 1909. It is said that the order of the Court dated the 9th August 1909 holding that the decree was not barred is binding on the judgment-debtors until it is set aside. But this is not so. It is quite true that an ex parte decree passed by a Court is a good decree; but, if the decree is made in the absence of and without notice to the other party, of course that decree does not bind the other party or does not stand in his way of showing what were the true facts of the case, and it seems to me that the judgment-debtors, not having had any notice of the order of the 9th August 1909, are entitled to show that the decree has become barred by limitation by reason of no steps having been taken between the 21st July 1906 and the 27th July 1909. I think the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to a correct conclusion when he held that this decree was not capable of being executed. That being so, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed. Having regard to the fact that the judgment-debtors have got rid of the liability under the decree, I think there ought not to be any order as to the costs of this appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Suit by reversioner against purchaser—Legal necessity, issue of, determination of—Suit failing for portion of property—Second suit for that portion—Issue of legal necessity—Decision in former suit, whether res judicata—"Litigating under the same title."

Where in a former suit between a reversioner to the estate of a widow and a purchaser from her, an issue was raised as to whether there was legal necessity for the widow's alienation and it was decided adversely to the purchaser, but the reversioner's suit failed for a moiety of the property because it was not found that that moiety had passed to him then, and he filed the present suit after that moiety had passed to him:

Held, that the decision on the issue of legal necessity in the former suit, was res judicata between the parties in the present suit as in both the suits the plaintiff litigated as the owner of the reversion and the defendant as the purchaser from the widow.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by one claiming to be entitled to a reversion for recovery of possession of a moiety of a property, after setting aside an alienation purporting to have been made by the original owner's widow. Prior to the present suit, another had been instituted by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for the purpose of recovering the property of which that now in suit forms a part. The issue was raised in that case as to whether there was legal necessity for the widow's alienation, and it was held adversely to the present defendant that there was no legal necessity for the purported alienation to him. But it was further held that the plaintiff's suit must fail as to a moiety, because it was not shown that more than a moiety of the reversion had passed to him. The present suit was commenced in 1909 at a time when this moiety had passed to the plaintiff so that he was in the position of a reversioner in regard to it, and in this suit he claims the moiety which he failed to recover in the former suit. He brings this suit against the same defendant, seeking to recover the moiety that was included in the former suit and impugns the same transaction as was successfully impugned in the former suit. In these circumstances it has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the determination by the Court of the former suit as to the existence of the legal necessity concluded the matter. That view has been accepted by both the Courts,

It has been argued before us that the provisions of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not cover the present case, for it is urged that it cannot be said that the parties are litigating under the same title. The learned Vakils have not been able to bring to our notice any decision which defines with precision what the meaning is of the phrase "litigating under the same title." But in my opinion these words cannot exclude application of the rule of res judicata to the issue of legal necessity which has been raised. That issue was tried and determined between the present litigants in the former suit, and in that suit as in this the plaintiff has litigated as the owner of the reversion and the defendant as the purchaser from the widow. This, therefore, is eminently a case where the doctrine of res judicata should apply.

We must, therefore, uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

HIRNASHI NAIK AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Decree based on compromise—Compromise made by unauthorised persons—Ex parte decree.

A decree based on a compromise cannot be treated as an ex parte decree and set aside as such simply because some of the parties had no authority to compromise on behalf of others.

Civil Revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, in the matter of Miscellaneous Case No. 3 of 1914, arising out of Title Suit No. 82 of 1913, in the first Court of the Munsif at Cuttack.

FACTS.—On 7th January 1913, the petitioners instituted the Title Suit No. 82 of 1913 in the first Munsif's Court at Cuttack for declaration of title and for possession of land against 5 persons—the opposite party—being defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and two other defendants Nos. 4 and 5. On 10th February 1913 service of summons was proved against all the five defendants and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 appeared and filed written statements and on that day issues were framed. On 9th April 1914 a petition of compromise was filed by defendants Nos. 4 and 5 for themselves and for the other defendants. The Court, however, directed fresh summons to issue on defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. On 7th May 1913 a petition of compromise was filed by persons who represented them to be defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and who were identified by a Mukhtear. The petition also contained thumb impressions purporting to be those of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. On that day the Munsif passed a decree on that compromise petition. On 9th January 1914 the opposite party made an application under Order IX, rule 13, praying that the decree might be set aside and alleging that there was in fact no compromise, the petition of compromise was a a forgery and the decree was obtained by false personation and forgery and that as a matter of fact they did not receive any summons at all. The Munsif thereupon took evidence and had the thumb impressions o the defendants examined by an expert, who found that the thumb impressions did not tally with those on the petition of compromise. The Munsif then found the petition of compromise a forgery and the decree as obtained by fraud and in the absence of the opposite party, who were absent and did not receive the summons, and on the 28th February set aside the decree and restored the suit for hearing. Against that order this Rule was obtained. The opposite party opposed the Rule and contended that even if. Order IX, rule 13, did not apply the Court had inherent powers to set aside a decree obtained by fraud.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, for the Petitioners.

Babu Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Opposite Party.

GAJADHAR AHIR v. BHIKARI LAL.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioners before us instituted a suit for declaration of their title to and for possession of certain lands. The suit was instituted on the 7th of January 1913 against five defendants. On the 9th of April in the same year, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 filed a petition of compromise and asked for a decree so far as they were concerned on that compromise and an ex parte decree against the other defendants. Fresh service, however, was ordered on the other defendants; and, on the 7th of May, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 appeared in Court with a petition of compromise purporting to be executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as well as by themselves. On this petition a decree was made in terms of the compromise. Afterwards defendants Nos. 1 to 3 put in a petition to the Court stating that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 had no authority to present the petition of compromise on their behalf, that no summons had ever been served on them as had been ordered and that the petition was fraudulently represented as being made by them. On this the Court, acting under Order IX, rule 13, Code of Civil Procedure, set aside the decree that had been passed and ordered the case to be set down for trial in the usual way. A Rule has now been granted to the plaintiffs calling upon the opposite parties to show cause why the order setting aside the decree should not be set aside.

The Rule must be made absolute, for the reason that the decree in this case cannot be treated as an ex parte one and that consequently Order IX, rule 13, Code of Civil Procedure, does not apply. It is argued before us that, on the evidence that has been given, it appears that the petition of compromise was not the petition of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and that consequently they cannot be considered to have appeared before the Court and that the decree was ex parte. We cannot dispose of the case from this point of view. The Judge, when he made his order, was under the impression that all the parties in the case were before him and that the petition was the petition of all the parties. Consequently in granting the petition he did not intend to make it ex parte and it does not appear that he did so on the face of the record. We cannot go behind the record to decide whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were properly represented or not. That would be begging the question which was sought to be raised before the Court.

The Rule is made absolute with costs, two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Suit for recovery of possession—Person entitled to half share, whether can eject one from whole—Decree, nature of—Partition, right of.

A person entitled to an undivided half share of a piece of land cannot sue to eject anybody from the whole of it.

Where the proprietor of an eight-annas share sued the proprietors of the other eight-annas share and joined the tenants admitted by the latter to the whole land as parties and prayed for joint possession with the tenants, if joint possession with the other proprietors could not be granted.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against all the defendants for recovery of joint possession of the eight-annas share and that he was entitled to enforce his right by a suit for partition, if he was not satisfied with delivery of possession of an undivided half share.

Second appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge, Second Court of Saran, dated 14th July 1911, reversing that of the Munsif of Gopalganj, dated 31st March 1911.

Babu Debendra Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Rajendra Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for recovery of possession of a plot of land to the extent of an 8-annas share. The plaintiff appears to be the proprietor of the land to the extent of 8-annas and defendants Nos. 5 and 6 to be proprietors to the extent of the other 8-annas. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 claim to be tenants on the land and they are supported by defendants Nos. 5 and 6;

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for khas possession to the extent of an 8-annas share jointly with defendants Nos. 1 to 3, but not so as to entitle the plaintiff to remove certain cattle troughs and pegs fixed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 thereon. The plaintiff was not satisfied with this success and appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the title of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had not been proved and that the plaintiff should recover possession of a moiety share in the disputed land jointly with defendants Nos. 5 and 6 after removal of the nads and pegs. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have appealed to this Court. On their behalf it is first urged that as the plaintiff asked in the alternative for joint possession with defendants Nos. 1 to 3 or with defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and obtained a decree for joint possession with defendants Nos. 1 to 3, he could not subsequently appeal for joint possession with defendants Nos. 5 and 6. In the first place, it is clear that the plaintiff only asked for joint possession with defendants Nos. 1 to 3, if joint possession with defendants Nos. 5 and 6 could not be granted. But it appears to us that that matter does not really arise in this case. All that the plaintiff could ask for was joint possession of an 8-annas share. He could not in this suit ask the Court to decide who was entitled to possession of the other 8-annas share of the land with which he had no concern.

Secondly, it is argued that as defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had been recognised as tenants by the co-sharer landlords Nos. 5 and 6, they could not be ejected from the whole of the land nor could the cattle troughs and pegs be removed. We have not been shown any authority for holding that a person entitled to an undivided half share of the land can sue to eject anybody from the whole of it.

This contention, therefore, must succeed. Accordingly the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified; the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree against all the defendants for recovery of joint possession of an 8-annas share of the disputed property. He will be entitled to enforce this right by a suit for partition, if he is not satisfied with the delivery of possession of an undivided half share. Until the land is partitioned the cattle troughs and pegs will not be removed.

The appeal will be decreed in thes terms.

Appeal allowed.

It is not until a Record of Rights is finally published that the presumption of its correctness arises. Therefore, entries in a draft Record of Rights, published under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, are not admissible in evidence.

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 8th August 1911, modifying that of the first Court, at Arrah, dated the 10th of November 1910.

Babu Rajendra Prashad, for Babu Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh, for the Appellants.

Babu Raghunath Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are second appeals from the decision of two rent-suits. The Munsif granted decrees for the whole amount claimed in both the suits. These decrees have been modified by the lower Appellate Court and the plaintiffs have preferred these second appeals. The learned District Judge has based his decision as to the amount of rent and cesses payable by the defendants on certain entries in a draft Record of Rights which was published under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion these entries were not admissible in evidence. It is not until the Record of Rights is finally published, that the presumption of its correctness arises.

AKHIL PRODHAN v. MANMOTHA NATH KAR.

We accordingly decree this appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court: the amount of rent and cesses payable in each suit will be the amount found payable by the first Court. To this amount will be added damages at the rate of 12½ per cent., the rate allowed by the District Judge.

The appellants will get their costs in all Courts.

Fraudulent transfer—Suit for declaration—Fictitious proceedings—Equity—Fraudulent confederate, when entitled to retain property fraudulently transferred to him—Suit, if for specific performance—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 317, applicability of.

To enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must be effected, then and then alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with.

The plaintiff, in order to protect himself from a fictitious deed executed by him in favour of a third person, induced his landlord to institute a fictitious suit for rent. The suit was instituted and decreed and the property was sold and purchased by the landlord and formal possession was also given to him, but actually the plaintiff remained in possession. The landlord thereafter forcibly took away the crop. The plaintiff then sued for a declaration that the entire proceedings in the rent-suit were fictitious:

Held, that the plaintiff is not disentitled to protection in a Court of Equity and that as the suit is not for the specific performance of a contract, no question of limitation arises in it.

Section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, contemplates a real sale in execution of a real decree in a real suit and does not bar a suit for possession of a property purchased in a fictitious sale held in execution of a fictitious decree in a fictitious suit.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the proceedings in a rent-suit brought against him by the first and second defendants were fictitious and have not affected his title to the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint, and also for confirmation of possession of those lands. The circumstances under which the plaintiff seeks relief are not in controversy. The subject-matter of litigation was held by the plaintiff under the Kar defendants as a tenant. In 1894 his landlord sued to eject him on the allegation that he was a trespasser. This suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance and that decree was ultimately affirmed on appeal by this Court on the 20th July 1897. In this litigation, the plaintiff was assisted by the Jana defendants. Accordingly in 1898 he executed fictitious conveyances in their favour with a view to protect himself from further aggression on the part of the Kars. In 1899 he found that the Janas were unfaithful and so to protect himself against the Janas, he induced his landlord to institute a fictitious suit for rent. That suit was decreed on the 7th November 1899. The Kars took out execution of this decree. The Janas thereupon preferred a claim which was disallowed on the 20th January 1900. The decree was subsequently executed and at the sale which followed, the Kars purchased the holding on the 19th March 1900. The plaintiff alleges that possession was formally delivered to the Kars on the 5th June 1900, as a matter of fact he himself has ever since continued in occupation of the land. On the 10th April 1900, the Janas sued the plaintiff and the Kars for declaration of their title on the basis of their conveyances; but on the 23rd July 1900 this suit was withdrawn. In 1906 the Kars turned against the plaintiff, and with the help of the Police took away by force the crops raised by him. On the 15th March 1907 the plaintiff commenced this suit for declaration that the entire proceedings in the rent-suit of 1899 were fictitious and that the Kars did not acquire any title on the basis of their purchase at the execution sale. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff and made a decree in accordance with the prayer in the plaint. Upon appeal that decree has been set aside by the District Judge, on the ground that as the plaintiff entered into this fraudulent arrangement with the Kars with a view to defraud the Janas he is not entitled to any relief in a Court of Equity. The District Judge has further found that the suit is in essence a suit for specific performance of a contract and is consequently barred by limitation. On the present appeal the decision of the Distric Judge has been assailed on two grounds namely, first, that the suit is not barred by limitation and secondly, that the conduct of the plaintiff has not been such as to disentitle him to relief in a Court of Equity. These points have been controverted on behalf of the Kar defendants, who have further urged that the suit is barred under section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. In our opinion, the decree of the District Judge cannot be supported.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, no question of limitation arises in this case. The suit is not one for specific performance of a contract No doubt the plaintiff alleged that the Kar defendants had agreed to execute a release and in the prayer clause of the plaint he asked for a decree for execution of such release by the Kars. But the suit is in essence one for declaration of title to land and for confirmation of possession. The plaintiff seeks a declaration that the proceedings in the rent-suit were fictitious and did not operate to affect his title in any manner, he also prays for confirmation of possession. As the Kars turned against the plaintiff and took away the crops grown by him in November 1906 and the suit was commenced on the 15th March 1907, it is amply in time. We hold accordingly that the suit is not barred by limitation.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it is clear that the plaintiff is not disentitled to relief in a Court of Equity. It may be conceded that the fictitious suit for rent was instituted against him by the Kars at his instance with a view to make it impossible for the Janas to assert their claim under the conveyances. But the Janas cannot be said to have been defrauded unless it is established that they had a valid title. Upon this point, the Court of first instance found that the Janas, who are said to have been defrauded, paid no consideration for the conveyances in their favour; in other words, that the conveyances were fictitious documents which had been executed by the plaintiff with a view to protect himself from any invasion of his right by the Kars. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to maintain the view that the Janas were defrauded. On behalf of the Kars, we have been pressed to remand the case for consideration of the question whether the Janas had any subsisting title; but we cannot accede to this request. It is plain from the grounds of appeal taken by the Kars before the District Judge that the findings of the Court of first instance upon this question were not specifically assailed and it is clear that if the point had been argued before the District Judge, there would have been a discussion of the evidence on this point in the judgment. It appears to have been assumed before the District Judge that the Janas were defrauded, because the effect of the execution sale was to make it impossible for the Janas to assert their title. But it appears to have been overlooked that if they had no real title to the property, they could not be defrauded. The case thus falls within the principle of the decision of this Court in Jadu Nath Poddar v. Bup Lal Poddar (1) and of the Judicial Committee in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai (2), namely that to enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must be effected, when and when alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with. The plaintiff is consequensly not disentitled to protection in a Court of Equity.

The only other point which requires consideration is whether the suit is barred under the provisions of section 317 of the Code of 1882. That section provides that no suit shall be maintained against a certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person or on behalf of a man through whom such other person claims. The case before us is not a suit of this description. Section 317 contemplates a real sale in execution of a real decree in a real suit. Here, we find a fictitious suit for rent in which there was no controversy between the parties. In that fictitious suit a fictitious decree was made and the sale held in execution of that decree was equally fictitious. To a suit of this description the observation of Lord Brougham in Earl of Bandon v. Henry Becher(3) applies: "A sentence is a judicial determination of a cause agitated between real parties, upon which a real interest has been settled;—in order to make a sentence there must be a real interest, a real argument, a real prosecution, a real defence, a real decision. Of all these qualities not one takes place in the case of a fraudulent and collusive suit; there is no Judge, but a person invested with the ensigns of a Judicial Office, is mis-employed in listening to a fictitious cause proposed to him; there is no party litigating, there is no party defendant, no real interest brought into question." [See Radha Madhab v. Kalpataru Roy(4)]. To a suit of this description section 317 cannot possibly have any application.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside, and the suit decreed with costs in all the Courts in the manner following. The decree will declare that the suit for rent (No. 369 of 1899) instituted against the plaintiff by the Kar defendants in 1899 and all proceedings based thereon were fictitious and have not affected his title in any manner; his possession will further be confirmed, or if he has meanwhile been dispossessed, he will be restored to possession in execution of this decree.

CIVIL RULE No. 284 OF 1914.

RATAN CHAND DHARAM CHAND—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 20, 80, O. VII, r. 11 (d)—Notice, whether necessary in all suits against Secretary of State for India in Council—Jurisdiction—District, meaning of—Acquiescence in jurisdiction, whether presumed from defendant's failure to apply for transfer.

Notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is necessary in every case instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The term "district" in that section must mean the district in which the suit is instituted, and the notice required under section 80 must be served on the Collector or on one of the Collectors of that district.

A suit instituted at Sealdah based on a notice to the Collector of Purneah under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code and on a cause of action arising mainly at Howrah against defendants, one of whom carries on business at Howrah, is wholly untenable.

Order VII, rule 11 (d), does not apply where there is no statement in the plaint which suggests that the suit is barred.

Secretary of State v Rajlucki Debi, 25 C. 239 referred to

A defendant who objects to the jurisdiction of a Court cannot be said to have acquiesced in the trial of the suit if he does not apply for a transfer.

Petition in the matter of Suit No. 3808 of 1913 of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah.

JUDGMENT.

COXE, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued for damages, on the allegation that he had booked 44 bales of cotton at a station in the Eastern Bengal State Railway in the Purneah District for transmission to Howrah and that 40 bales only were delivered. He made the Secretary of State the first defendant, as representative of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and the East Indian Railway Company the second defendant. The suit has been dismissed and the plaintiff has obtained this Rule on the defendants to show cause why the order of dismissal should not be set aside.

The Rule must, I think, be discharged. The suit was brought at Sealdah, though the cause of action arose partly in Purneah, but mainly at Howrah; and the place of business of the second defendant is at Howrah. The Small Cause Court Judge has held that the suit must fail against the first defendant, because no notice was served in accordance with section 80 of the Code. A notice was served on the Collector of Purneah, but the suit was not instituted at Purneah and reading section 80 as a whole, I think the term 'district' must mean the district in which the suit is instituted and that the notice must be served on the Collector or on one of the Collectors of that district.

It has been argued that no notice is necessary in cases arising out of contract, and reference has been made to the case of Manindra Nath Nandi v. Secretary of State for India (1).

The terms of the section, however, as they stand, seem to me to show that notice is necessary in every case, and this is the view taken in Secretary of State v. Baj Lucki Debi (2) from which the decision in Manindra Nath Nandi v. Secretary of State for India (1) does not dissent.

Finally, it was argued that the suit ought not to have been dismissed, but the plaint should have been rejected under Order VII, rule 11 (d). That rule obviously has no application, for there was no statement in the plaint which suggested that the suit was barred. On the contrary it was specifically stated that notice under section 80 had been served on "the Collector" without specifying the district. The defect was not discovered till after the defendants had entered appearance and it was then too late to reject the plaint.

(1) 5 C. L. J. 148; 34 C. 257.
(2) 25 C. 230.

As against the second defendant, the suit has been dismissed on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction. This view is evidently right. The 2nd defendant objected at once to the jurisdiction. It is argued that as he did not apply for a transfer he must be taken to have acquiesced in the trial of the suit at Sealdah. I dissent altogether from this contention. It was the duty of the plaintiff when this substantial objection was taken to take the necessary steps to meet it, and the defendant was not in any way bound to have the defect, that he had pointed out, cured for the plaintiff's benefit.

A suit at Sealdah based on a notice to the Collector of Purneah and on a cause of action arising mainly at Howrah against defendants one of whom carries on business at Howrah, seems to me wholly untenable. I think that this suit was rightly dismissed and would discharge the Rule with costs. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur for each defendant.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

Messrs. N. Sarkar and S. Ghosh, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. H. D. Bose and A. N. Chaudhri, for the Defendnts.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed by Sri Lal on the 26th June 1912 against Arjun Das and his brothers for a declaration that he was entitled to a half share in several businesses, that the businesses should be dissolved, and accounts taken. On 14th July 1913 all matters in dispute in the suit were referred to the arbitration of Daulatram Chokhani and Siv Prosad Goradia, and they were directed to make their award within ten weeks from the date of the delivery to them of the said order. The arbitrators were unable to proceed with the matter at once and so the ten weeks elapsed without an award being made.

On 5th January 1914 I made an order allowing the arbitrators until 28th February 1914 within which to make their award. By a slip in the said order, instead of the word "make" the word "file" was used, but that appears to me to be a matter of little importance. The order purported to be one under Schedule II, paragraph 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and the word should undoubtedly have been "make." The arbitrators held numerous meetings and eventually on 28th February 1914, the last day for making their award, they drew up and signed an award in Hindi. The 28th was a Saturday, and the award could not be filed on that afternoon. Accordingly on the Sunday the arbitrators saw Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan and asked him whether it would not be better that the award should be submitted to the Court in English. Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan accordingly put into formal English the Hindi award, which was read out to him by Siv Prosad Garodia. He did this partly on the Sunday and partly on Monday, 2nd March 1914. Though not a literal translation, the English award reproduces the Hindi award clause for clause and term for term. On 2nd March 1914 the arbitrators and the parties were all present in Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan's office when the English award prepared by Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan was signed by the arbitrators, as was also the letter from the arbitrators to the Registrar forwarding the award. In that letter they stated: "We met and signed our award on the said 28th day of February, but the same could not be filed in Court on the said day, being a Saturday. We understand that the time to file the award having thus expired, the parties are going to apply to the Court for leave to file the same." On the advice of Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan an agreement was drawn up on an eight-anna stamp paper and signed by the parties on that day. It was to this effect:—"We agree on and to the terms set forth in the award made by Babus Daulatram Chokhani and Siv Prosad Garodia, which has been fully explained to us, and further agree not to raise any objections thereto as to its validity whether on the ground of expiry of time or otherwise howsoever." The plaintiff Sri Lal, being dissatisfied with the award, at first took up the position that he signed that agreement without knowing its contents and without understanding to what he was putting his name. That contention has been expressly withdrawn by his Counsel and the plaintiff now admits that when he signed that document, which was explained to him by Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan, he knew its contents and understood what he was doing. That, however, did not prevent him from taking steps at once to object to the award as having been filed out of time. I have now before me three matters: (1) a petition by the plaintiff that the award may be set aside as having been filed out of time; (2) a petition by the defendants that, if necessary, the time may be extended and that the plaintiff may be at liberty to file the award; and (3) the defendant's application that judgment be passed in accordance with the award. Plaintiff's Counsel admits that there are no merits whatsoever in his client's contention. He could hardly do otherwise, as a more shameless attempt to get out of his agreement on a highly technical point can hardly be conceived. The plaintiff relies upon the case of Shib Krishna Dawn and Co. v. Satish Chunder Dutt (1), in which Mr. Justice Harington held that the Court had no power to extend the time for filing an award which had already been made before the application was presented. The learned Judge relied upon the case of Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudhrain Bhagwant Kuar (2), but that was a case decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an award made out of time was invalid and that the arbitrators by such effluxion of time were functus officio. In so doing they followed the express words of section 521, which ran that "no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court." With all respect to the learned Judge who decided the case in Shib Krishna Daun and Co. v. Satish Chunder Dutt (1), it appears to me that he did not give sufficient weight to the change which was made in the wording of section 521 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 in enacting paragraph 15 of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. As paragraph 15 runs, it appears to me to have a discretion to the Court in deciding whether an award shall be set aside on the ground of its having been made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court. I feel some doubt, therefore, whether the decision in Shib Krishna Daun and Co. v. Satish Chunder Dutt (1) is correct in law. Section 148 of the present Code is in no way restricted, nor indeed is paragraph 8 of the second Schedule. It might, therefore, be argued not without reason that they ought not to be restricted in the manner there held. It is, however, unnecessary to decide that point, because I am unable to see how in the face of his agreement of 2nd March 1914 the plaintiff can possibly contend that he is not bound by this award. His objection is highly technical and it may be met in various ways. It may be said that that agreement operated as a fresh submission to arbitration, and acceptance of the award as signed on that day by the arbitrators. It might also be said that it was a lawful adjustment of the suit which might be enforced by a decree against the plaintiff under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3. It might further be said that the plaintiff is precluded from putting forward his present objection by the concluding words of his agreement not to raise any objection to the award or to its validity, whether on the ground of expiry of time or otherwise howsoever. The difficulty might again be got over by directing that not the English award, but the Hindi award, which is in identically the same terms though not in the same language, should be filed as the award of the arbitrators. It appears to me quite unnecessary to go through these formalities. It is abundantly clear that an award was made within time. The arbitrators decided to have the award drawn up in English, but before doing so they took an agreement from the parties not to raise any objection to this being done. I must, therefore, dismiss the application of the plaintiff Sri Lal with costs and pass a decree in terms of the award.

Application dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2740 OF 1911.

January 30, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

AMULYA RATAN SARKAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

TARINI NATH DEY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Occupancy holding, right of—Testamentary disposition of occupancy holding, validity of—Statute, construction of—Right, whether conferred by mere implication—Estoppel—Testator and legatee—Heir-at-law of raiyat, whether estopped from questioning validity of gift by raiyat—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26, 178 (3) (d).

In the absence of proof of any local usage to the contrary a raiyat is not competent to make a testamentary disposition of his right of occupancy.

A right cannot be conferred by mere implication from the language used in a Statute; there must be a clear and unequivocal enactment to confer the right.

Arnold v. Gravesend Borough, 2 K. & J. 574 at p. 591; 110 R. R. 372; 25 L. J. Ch. 776; 2 Jur. (N. S.) 703; 4 W. R. 478; 99 E. R. 911, referred to.

As between the testator on the one hand and the legatee or the executor on the other, there is not estoppel; therefore the heir-at-law of a testator raiyat is estopped from questioning the transfer of a holding made by a Will.

Hari Das v. Udoy Chandra, 8 C.L.J. 261; 12 C. W. N. 1066, not followed.

In every case of gift, the doctrine of estoppel does not apply as between donor and donee.

AMULYA RATAN SARKAR v. TARINI NATH DEY.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 26th July 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, first Court, Alipore, dated 30th September 1910.

Babu Girija Prosunna Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, is one-half share of an occupancy holding, which admittedly belonged at one time to Tarapada Chatterjee. The right to this one-half share is claimed on the one hand by the transferee from the heir-at-law, who is the plaintiff-appellant, and on the other hand by the transfrees from the executor, who are the defendants-respondents. The occupancy holding, it is not disputed, is not transferable by custom or local usage. In so far as the plaintiff is concerned, his transfer from the heir-at-law has been recognised by the landlord, and no question can arise as to its validity on that ground. The substantial question in controversy is, whether the testamentary disposition was valid and operative so as to exclude the heir-at-law, because if there was a valid testamentary devise, the property passed to the executor and the heir-at-law consequently took nothing. On behalf of the defendants-respondents, it has been contended that the occupancy holding, though not transferable by custom or local usage, may be the subject of a valid testamentary disposition. The Bengal Tenancy Act admittedly does not contain any provision expressly applicable to this subject. But our attention has been drawn to section 26 which regulates the devolution of occupancy right when a raiyat dies intestate, and it has been argued that the Legislature has herein, by implication, indicated that a raiyat is competent to make a testamentary disposition of his occupancy right. There is clearly no force in this contention. In the first place, if we were to accept the mode of interpretation of section 26 suggested by the respondents, we would have to contravene the elementary rule of construction that right cannot be conferred by mere implication from the language used in a Statute; there must be a clear and unequivocal enactment [Arnold v. Gravesend Borough (1)]. In the second place, full effect would be given to the implication contained in section 26, if it were shown that a raiyat is competent to make a testamentary disposition of his right of occupancy in certain events. Now, section 178, sub-section (3), clause (d), indicates that in this respect the right of an occupancy raiyat stands on the same footing as his right to transfer his holding. Clause (d) provides that nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act shall take away the right of a raiyat to transfer or bequeath his holding in accordance with local usage. In the case before us, no local usage has been proved and the respondents are not in a position to support the validity of the bequest as made in accordance with a local usage. The respondents have consequently been driven to take up a different position. Their contention is that the heir-at-law is estopped from questioning the validity of the devise made by the testator, and in support of this view reliance has been placed upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Doss in the case of Hari Das v. Udoy Chandra (2). It may be conceded that the view taken by that learned Judge does support the argument for the respondents. But it is worthy of note that when an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent against the decision of Mr. Justice Doss, the decree was affirmed on a different ground: Udoy Chandra Das v. Hari Das Bairagi (3). It is consequently impossible for us to treat the matter as concluded by authority, although the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Doss must be deemed entitled to the highest consideration. On behalf of the appellant, the correctness of the view taken by Mr. Justice Doss has, however, been controverted: and we have been invited to examine the grounds upon which that opinion is based.

Mr. Justice Doss points out, in the first place, that a transfer of an occupancy holding is not a void transaction, that it is binding between the parties, namely, the transferor and the transferee and all persons claiming through them, and that it is voidable only at the option of the landlord or his representative-in-interest. This view is founded on the doctrine of estoppel, which was clearly recognised by Phear, J., when he observed in Bibee Suhodra v. Maxwell Smith (4) that the raiyat "certainly could not himself recover it (the holding) from the stranger to whom he had transferred it for valuable consideration," and by Couch, C. J., when he remarked in Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (5) that "the raiyat could not recover possession from the transferee as he would be bound by his act of transfer." To the same effect is the express decision in Bhagirath Changa v. Hafizuddin (6) where Stevens, J., pointed out that when the occupancy raiyat has transferred his holding on the representation that he had a transferable interest therein, he cannot, on principles of equity and good conscience, be permitted to prove against the transferee, who had paid consideration for the transfer, that he had no transferable interest to convey. This is an intelligible principle recognised so long and so firmly established that its soundness cannot now be successfully challenged. Mr. Justice Doss then concludes that if this is the character of the transaction, namely, the character of a voidable transfer, "it seems to follow that the heir of an occupancy raiyat ought to be held bound by a transfer of the holding made by a Will." The learned Judge then proceeds to state the reasons for this inference, namely, that if the heir is bound by a transfer for valuable consideration or by a gift, there does not seem to be any reason why he ought not to be held bound by a transfer made by a Will. Before we test this reasoning, it is necessary to observe that the broad proposition that the heir of an occupancy raiyat is bound by a gift made by the raiyat himself may, when occasion arises, require examination. Cases are, no doubt, conceivable where the donee may, by the acceptance of the gift, have altered his position and may in such circumstances be entitled to rely upon the doctrine of estoppel in support of his title. To take a concrete illustration: A is offered two gifts by two of his relations, on the condition that if he accepts one, he must renounce the other; he makes his election in favour of one of the gifts. His position would be altered if that donor were permitted thereafter to prove against him that the donor had no transferable title to convey. But, on the arguments addressed to us, we are not prepared at present to accept it as an invariable principle of law that, in every case of gift, the doctrine of estoppel may be applied as between donor and donee. Let it be assumed, however, for the purposes of the present argument—and for that purpose alone—that in all cases of transfer for valuable consideration as also in all cases of gift, the heir is bound by the same estoppel as the transferor or the donor himself, does it follow that this principle is applicable to cases of testamentary devise? In the case of transfer inter vivos, with or without consideration, there is, on the assumption made, an estoppel in favour of the transferee as against the transferor, and that estoppel is binding upon the heir of the transferor. In the case of a testamentary devise, is there any estoppel as between the testator and the intended legatee or the executor? It cannot be disputed that it is open to the testator, up to the very last moment of his life, to change his mind, and to revoke the disposition made by him. His testament does not come into operation till the moment after his death. Consequently, as between the testator on the one hand and the legatee or executor on the other, there is no room for any possible application of the doctrine of estoppel. The position becomes plain when we recall to mind the nature of the estoppel applicable to cases of transfer for consideration. The principle is stated lucidly by Lord Denman in Pickard v. Sears (7) in the following terms:—"Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." The principle was amplified and re-stated by Lord Selborne in Citizen's Bank of Louisiana v. The First National Bank of New Orleans (8) in these terms :—"The foundation of that doctrine, which is a very important one, and certainly not one likely to be departed from, is this, that if a man dealing with another for value makes statements to him as to existing facts, which being stated would affect the contract and without reliance upon which, or without the statement of which, the party would not enter into the contract, and which being otherwise than as they were stated, would leave the situation after the contract different from what it would have been if the representations had not been made; then the person making those representations shall, so far as the powers of a Court of Equity extend, be treated as if the representations were true, and shall be compelled to make them good." Lord Selborne then proceeded to add a very important qualification, "but those must be representations concerning existing facts," and thereby emphasised the statement of Lord Cranworth in the case of Jordan v. Money (9) to the effect that in order to found an estoppel the representation must be of existing facts and not of mere intentions. It is clear, therefore, that as between the testator on the one hand and the executor or legatee on the other, there is no estoppel. Consequently, so far as the heir-at-law is concerned, he cannot be deemed bound by any derivative estoppel traceable to an estoppel which bound his ancestor. If he is to be bound by any estoppel, it must be an independent estoppel against him; but on behalf of the respondents no intelligible principle of justice, equity or good conscience has been suggested upon which any such independent estoppel can be reasonably founded. The truth is that the testament, if it takes effect, comes into operation immediately after the death of the testator; at the same moment, precisely, the statutory right of inheritance comes into operation, and there is no reason why an estoppel should be applied against the heir-at-law so as to deprive him of what he is entitled to take under the Statute. We are thus constrained to hold that the view taken by Mr. Justice Doss cannot be supported on principle and that in the case of a testamentary devise of a non-transferable occupancy holding, the heir-at-law is not debarred by the doctrine of estoppel from questioning its validity. In the case before us, the result follows that there was no valid disposition in favour of the executors. The plaintiff, as the transferee from the heir-at-law by successive devolution, is consequently entitled to the property claimed, in respect whereof the defendants are trespassers in the eye of the law.

(1) 2 K. & J. 574 at p. 591; 110 R.R. 372; 25 L. J. Ch. 776; 2 Jur. (N. S.) 703; 4 W. R. 474; 69 Eng. Rep. 911.

(3) 8 Ind. Cas. 417; 10 C. L. J. 606; 13 C. W. N. 937.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 282, 283—Decree—Property sold subject to mortgage lien—Mortgage lien, order for, not contested within a year—Suit by mortgagee—Defence—Fraud—Purchaser, whether entitled to contest mortgage as fraudulent—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 44.

A claimed to be the holder of a mortgage upon certain property which had passed to B on a sale in execution of a decree. In the execution proceedings under that decree A's claim was recognized under section 282 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882 but B did not challenge that claim under section 283 of the Code. The property was sold subject to the charge. A then sued to assert his mortgage. B set up that the mortgage was fraudulent. A contended that the order under section 282 was conclusive, as it was not set aside in a suit filed under section 283 within a year from its date:

Held, that section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, can only contemplate a suit based upon facts known to the party against whom an order was passed under section 282 within a year from the date of the order and that if B was not aware of the fraud within a year and became aware of it afterwards, he could, under section 44 of the Evidence Act, assert the fraudulent nature of A's application and the consequent invalidity of the order passed upon it in any proceeding instituted by A on the strength of such order.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Khandesh, in Appeal No. 39 of 1909, reversing the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Civil Suit No. 406 of 1907.

Mr. Setlur (with him Mr. T. R. Desai), for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and P. D. Bhide, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present plaintiff claims to be the holder of a mortgage for Rs. 3,000 and interest upon certain property which has passed to the 5th defendant, the respondent, on a sale in execution of a decree. In the execution proceedings under that decree the present plaintiff intervened and asserted his claim as a mortgagee and prayed that the auction-sale should be held after reserving the mortgage lien of the amount of Rs. 3,580 with future interest, and that the said sum should be awarded to the plaintiff. The executing Court ordered notices to issue to the opponents, namely, the plaintiff and the defendant in the suit in which the execution proceedings had been instituted, and on the returnable date of the notices the order was made that "the mortgage is admitted, I grant the application with all costs on the opponents." That, we think, was clearly an order under section 282 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and it was an order against both the opponents and, therefore, the plaintiff (the present respondent and defendant No. 5) was bound, if he wished to challenge the order, to institute a suit to establish the right that he claimed within the year prescribed by the Limitation Act. That suit was not instituted. The property was sold and in the proclamation it was stated to be subject to mortgage liens to the extent of upwards of Rs. 9,000, and it is not contended that that sum did not include the mortgage alleged by the present plaintiff. The present respondent was a purchaser through the Court and remained in possession of the property for some years. Then the plaintiff took steps to assert the alleged mortgage which was operative, as he said, not only against the property held by the present respondent but against the property held by defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in this suit, and they set up that the mortgage was fraudulent. The lower Appellate Court has allowed the present respondent to set up the same defence, and it has been held in the lower Courts that the mortgage was fraudulent. The plaintiff-appellant contends that the order under section 282 was conclusive, not having been set aside in a suit filed within a year from its date. It appears to us that section 283 can only contemplate a suit based upon facts known to the party against whom an order was passed under section 282 within a year from the date of the order. If he was aware of the fraudulent nature of the mortgage, it was part of the cause of action he would have to allege in such a suit filed within a year; if, however, he was not aware of the fraud and became aware of it afterwards, he could under section 44 of the Evidence Act assert the fraudulent nature of the plaintiff's application and the consequent invalidity of the order passed upon it in any proceeding instituted by the plaintiff on the strength of such order. The question, therefore, we must have decided in this case before we can deal with it in appeal, is whether the defendant No. 5 was aware of the fraudulent nature of the plaintiff's mortgage transaction within a year of the date of the order of the 6th of March 1897. We remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding upon that issue, the finding to be returned within three months. The onus of proof will be upon the 5th defendant.

Case remanded.

NISTARINI DEBYA v. BEHARI LAL MOKHOPADHYA.

Where property is given to a person with power to sell, make a gift or hiba, etc., he takes thereby an absolute interest in the property.

The ordinary rule of construction where the testator has given an absolute gift to a legatee and then has made a gift over simpliciter on a contingency of death is that he was referring to death before the period of distribution.

The rule laid down in section 111 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) is a statutory rule of construction which the Courts are bound to follow.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J. – This is an appeal from a judgment of the learned Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, dated the 15th February 1912, reversing the decision of the Munsif, first Court, of Bolpur. This suit was brought by the plaintiff claiming through one Srimati Sindhubala Debi, who was the widow of one Mohesh Chunder Mukherjee, for an one-half share of the estate of Mohesh Chunder and the sole question that we have got to decide in this case is what is the true construction of the Will of Mohesh Chunder. Mohesh Chunder made his Will on the 30th August 1884. There are first the usual recitals and then the Will runs in the following terms: – "I bequeath to both of you" that is, his widow Srimati Sindhubala and Srimati Nistarini, the daughter of his late brother, "by this Will the rest of the properties and also the properties that will exist after the death of my neice (brother's daughter), Srimati Tincouri Debya, out of the properties given to her." Then follow these words: "You will become entitled to sell or make a gift or hiba, etc., in respect of the said properties and hold and enjoy the same." Now, pausing here for a moment, let us see what is the nature of the interest that Sindhubala and Nistarini, the present appellant before us, took under the terms of that gift. It seems to me that it is impossible to say that a person to whom a property is given with power to sell, make a gift or hiba, etc., and, I presume, to do anything else he likes with, has an interest less than an absolute interest in the property. Those words in the Will cannot be given effect to except by holding that Sindhubala Debi and the defendant Nistarini Debi took an absolute interest in the property. Then comes the clause that has given rise to this litigation: "If, by the will of God, one of you should die before the other." Now what was the testator contemplating when he said, "if one of you should die before the other"? What the testator was contemplating when he provided that if one of them should die before the other, must have been some period which he had in view. The only period that is possible to give effect to on this Will is the period of distribution, that is if one should die before the estate is liable to be divided between the two ladies. So far as I can see, on the wording of this Will, it is impossible to hold that the testator had in view the contingency of one of the ladies dying before the other, which obviously must happen at some time. Then the testator provided that in that event, "whoever will survive will hold and enjoy the whole of the property as malik." The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below has held that that clause applies only in the case of the death of one of the residuary legatees in the life-time of the testator, that is, before the period of distribution. That is clearly provided for in section 111 of the Indian Succession Act which applies to Hindu Wills, and that rule in section 111 of the Indian Succession Act is an absolute rule of construction. It is not a rule of construction like the rule in Home v. Pillans (1), which may be contradicated by other evidence appearing on the face of the Will. The rule laid down in section 111 of the Indian Succession Act is a statutory rule of constructions which the Courts are bound to follow. It is quite true that in this case, if one applies the rule laid down in Home v. Pillans (1) one arrives at the same result. There is nothing in this Will to show that the testator meant death after the period of distribution. The ordinary rules of construction where the testator has given an absolute gift to a legatee and then has made a gift over simpliciter on a contingency of death is that he was referring to death before the period of distribution. That rule has been established and, in spite of the elaborate arguments addressed to us by the learned Vakil for the appellant, I still remain unconvinced that the rule has been departed from in this country. This case falls within section 111 of the Indian Succession Act and the widow Sindhubala not having predeceased her husband and having survived the period of distribution, in my opinion, took an absolute interest under the Will. I, therefore, agree with the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below and think that the present appeal ought to be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 43 (2) (b), 46 (1)—Order refusing to take action against insolvent—Creditor, whether an aggrieved person—Appeal.

A creditor is not a person aggrieved, within the meaning of section 46 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, by an order refusing to take action against an insolvent under section 43 (2) (b) and he has, therefore, no right of appeal.

Kadir Bakhsh v. Bhawani Prasad, 14 A. 145; A. W. N. (1892) 6, distinguished.

Mr. T. M. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. S. Rangasami Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under section 46, clause (2), of the Provincial Insolvency Act from an order of the District Judge of South Arcot, dismissing a petition put in by a creditor asking the Court to take action against an insolvent under section 43, clause 2 (b), of the Act. A preliminary objection is taken that a creditor has no right of appeal, in that he is not a person aggrieved by the order within the meaning of section 46 (1). In a case reported in Kadir Bakhsh v. Bhawani Prasad (1) a Judge of a Small Cause Court refused to take action under section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure against an insolvent, and a revision petition was entertained by the High Court against the order at the instance of a creditor. This, however, does not assist the appellant, as in revision the Court acts suo motu. It has been held in In the matter of Rash Behary Roy v. Bhagwan Chander Roy (2) under the Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Victoria, Chapter 21, that section 50 should be administered as the criminal law is administered and specific charges framed, and this has been the practice of this Court. What the Court has done in effect is that it has taken cognizance inquired into an allegation of a criminal offence and refused to frame a charge. Under no principle of criminal law is a complainant entitled to appeal against such refusal, as in all criminal proceedings the Crown is in theory the prosecutor and we see no reason why a different principle should prevail where the criminal jurisdiction is exercised by a Civil Court. Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the Court has power to commit. Vide section 165. Section 104 (2) gives an appeal in bankruptcy matters "at the instance of any person aggrieved." Section 73 of the Indian Insolvency Act gave an appeal by way of petition to the Supreme Court from any proceeding of the Commissioner at the instance of any person "who shall think himself aggrieved." We have not been referred to any case under either of these Acts or earlier Bankruptcy Acts in England where a creditor has been held a person aggrieved by the refusal of the Court, nor can I find any such case. The absence must be attributable to the principle above stated; and in that view the preliminary objection must be upheld and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Partition—Compromise by some of the parties—Consent decree, validity of—Appeal against consent decree, when maintainable—Suit to declare such consent decree inoperative, unnecessary—Dismissal for default, effect of.

In a partition suit the defendants, who were not parties to the compromise effected between the plaintiffs and the other defendants, will not be bound by the terms of the compromise, and the decree based thereon would not have greater validity than the contract upon which it is based.

A partition of joint property cannot be effected on a compromise which binds only some of the co-owners, and, therefore, a consent decree based upon such a compromise cannot bind any of the parties to the suit.

Ordinarily an appeal does not lie against a decree made by consent, but an appeal may be preferred by persons who were not parties to the consent decree.

Nityánand Dasi v. Gokul Chandra Sen, 9 Ind. Cas. 210; 13 C. L. J. 16, referred to.

The dismissal for default of a suit for declaration that the consent decree was not operative cannot give greater efficacy to the consent decree than it really possesses. It is unnecessary for persons who are not parties to a consent decree to institute a suit for such a declaration.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of 24-Parganas, dated the 13th of July 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court, Diamond Harbour, dated the 13th of December 1909, and remanding the case to his Court for trying it de novo.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghosal, for the Appellants.

Babus Sunil Madhab Mullick, Provash Chandra Mitra, Trailokya Nath Chakravarty and Prabodh Chandra Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for partition of joint property, which was commenced so far back as the 29th October 1897. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the 13th March 1899. Upon appeal, the case was remanded by the Subordinate Judge on the 11th July 1899. The case was re-tried after remand and a preliminary decree was made on the 16th August 1900. The result of the preliminary decree was that the suit was dismissed in so far as the property comprised in schedule ka was concerned, but it was decreed in so far as the pond and tank mentioned in schedules kha and ga were concerned. The plaintiffs were not satisfied with this preliminary decree and preferred an appeal. They joined as respondents to their appeal all the eleven defendants who were parties to the suit. A compromise was arrived at as between the plaintiffs on the one hand and some of the defendants on the other hand; namely, defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4, 7 and 11. The other defendants, namely, Nos. 2, 5, 6 and 8 to 10 were not represented at the hearing of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge. The fact was apparently not brought to his notice that all the defendants had not consented to the compromise. The result was that the Subordinate Judge accepted the compromise as if it was binding upon all the defendants and proceeded to modify on the basis thereof the preliminary decree made by the Court of first instance. The case then went back to the original Court, and an attempt was made to effect a partition by metes and bounds. The defendants, who were not parties to the petition of compromise and the consent decree, protested against the adoption of this course. Their contention was that they were in no way bound by the consent decree which had been made by the lower Appellate Court. This objection was overruled and partition was effected. These defendants then appealed to the Subordinate Judge and on the 13th July 1910 he held that the consent decree could not be made the foundation for the final decree in the suit, inasmuch as it was not binding upon all the parties to the litigation. He, therefore, set aside the final decree made by the Court of first instance and remanded the case for trial de novo. The Subordinate Judge, however, proceeded to add that nothing in his judgment should be construed to mean that the compromise decree of the Appellate Court was not binding on the parties to the compromise so far as the same related to the suit.

The plaintiffs have now appealed against this decree, and on their behalf it has been contended that the defendants were not at liberty to challenge the consent decree because first, their remedy was by way of an appeal to this Court; and, secondly, because they had failed in a regular suit instituted for a declaration that the consent decree was not operative in so far as they were concerned. In our opinion, there is no force in either of these contentions.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it is plain that the defendants who were not parties to the petition of compromise are not bound by its terms and the decree based on that compromise cannot have greater validity than the contract upon which it was based [Huddersfield Banking Company v. Lister (1), Rajlakshmi Dassee v. Katayayani Dasee (2), Keshab Panda v. Bhobain Panda (3), Wentworth v. Bullen (4)]. No doubt, it might have been open to the defendants to prefer an appeal against the consent decree, because it has been held that although ordinarily an appeal does not lie against a decree made by consent, an appeal may be preferred by persons who are not parties to the consent decree [Nityamoni Dasi v. Gokul Chandra Sen (5)]. In so far as the appeal preferred by the plaintiffs against the decree of the Court of first instance was concerned, the appeal had never been heard on the merits as against these defendants and no decree had been made which could be legally binding upon them. The first ground, on which the appeal is sought to be supported, fails.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it appears that the suit instituted by these defendants for a declaration that the consent decree was not operative against them was dismissed for default and was never tried on the merits. If, then, the consent decree was not operative against them, as we have held it was not, it was clearly unnecessary for them to institute a suit for declaration that the decree was not operative, and the fact that the suit was never tried on the merits but dismissed for default could not give greater efficacy to the consent decree than it really possessed. We are clearly of opinion that in so far as the merits of the case are concerned, the consent decree made by the Subordinate Judge on the 29th March 1901 cannot be made the foundation for the final decree in the partition suit.

The question remains, what course should be adopted at this stage. As the consent decree is not binding upon some of the defendants, obviously it cannot bind any of the parties to the suit, because the property which has to be partitioned is joint property and a partition thereof cannot be effected on a compromise which binds only some of the co-owners. The proper course to follow is to ignore completely the compromise and the decree based thereon. The parties must consequently be relegated to the position which they occupied before the consent decree was made on the 27th March 1901.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that he may now, on the materials on the record, hear the appeal which was preferred by the plaintiffs against the decree of the Court of first instance dated the 16th August 1900. If that appeal fails on the merits, the result will be that the preliminary decree made by the Court of first instance will stand confirmed and partition will be effected by metes and bounds on the basis of such decree. On the other hand, if the appeal by the plaintiffs against the preliminary decree of the Court of first instance is allowed in whole, or in part, a new preliminary decree will be made by the Subordinate Judge, and partition must be effected on the basis of such preliminary decree. The effect of this judgment is to set aside the consent decree of the 29th March 1901 as also all orders in the suit made thereafter, whether by the Court of first instance or by the lower Appellate Court; the appeal preferred by the plaintiffs against the preliminary decree of the 16th August 1908 will stand restored, to be heard on the merits. The appellants must pay the respondents, who have entered appearance, their costs throughout these proceedings. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Injunction, suit for—Plaintiff what has to show to succeed in such a case—Purchaser of lessee's right in coal mine, rights of, to take entire coal—Barrier to pen back water, right of—"Instroke and outstroke", meaning of—Instroke, right of, when exercised—Fraud, ground for injunction—Support, right of.

A man who seeks the aid of a Court by an injunction must show that the act complained of is in fact a violation of his right or at least is an act which, if carried into effect, will necessarily result in a violation of the right The mere prospect or apprehension of injury or the mere belief that the act complained of may or will be done is not sufficient.

In order to succeed in such an action the plaintiff must show a strong case of probability that the apprehended mischief will, in fact, arise.

The plaintiff must show the existence of an intention on the part of the defendant to do the act complained of; but direct evidence of such intention may be unnecessary, if a man insists on his right to do or begins to do or threatens to do or gives notice of his intention to do an act which must, if completed, give a ground of action.

Where, therefore, a purchaser of the rights of a lessee of a coal mine claims the right to take away the entire coal, the Court is competent to grant an injunction if it is established that what the purchaser asserts he has a right to do, would constitute a breach of contract between the lessor and the lessee.

An owner of a lower mine must, if he wishes to guard against the natural flow of water from the mines of his neighbours, have a barrier in the upper part of his mine to pen back the water and the lessee of such a mine may be held liable for any damage done by breaking down the barrier between the mines.

It is, however, not obligatory upon the lessee to leave a barrier of coal merely to prevent communication with adjoining mines and, therefore, where the object of a plaintiff is only to prevent communication an injunction cannot be issued.

The right of instroke is the right of conveying minerals leased to the surface through a pit or shaft in an adjoining mine, it is the converse right to that of outstroke, which is the right of conveying minerals from an adjoining mine to the surface through a pit or shaft in the mine leased.

A lessee is prima facie entitled to work by instroke, but not by outstroke.

Where it can be assumed that the lessee has the right to work by instroke, he cannot be permitted to exercise that right fraudulently to the detriment of his lessor but where no fraud is established, an injunction cannot be granted.

Prima facie the owner of the surface has a right of support and the lessee is not entitled to work the mine so as to cause a subsidence, and an injunction will be granted if the Court is satisfied that injury is imminent and certain to result from the defendant's acts or where the defendant claims the right to do acts which must inevitably cause subsidence.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are directed against the decree in a suit for a perpetual injunction to restrain the lessee of a coal mine in three respects. On the 14th December 1906 the plaintiff granted a lease of the disputed mine for a term of 999 years to one Ghanasyam Das Agarwala, the father of the first four defendants in this litigation. On the 3rd July 1911 and 15th February 1912 these defendants transferred their interest in the mine by two conveyances executed in favour of the fifth defendant, Ramjas Agarwala, who had mines in the immediate vicinity towards the east and north-west. On the 2nd August 1911 the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a perpetual injunction to restrain the purchaser-defendant in three respects, namely, first, that he may not connect the disputed mine with the adjacent mines, secondly, that he may not raise the coal from the demised mine through the pits of his mines, and thirdly, that he may not ever cut off or change the form or diminish the thickness of the pillars of coal delineated in the working plan of the demised mine. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the conveyances had been executed by the first four defendants in favour of the fifth defendant with a view to enable the latter to injure him by an improper working of the mine; he further asserted that there was a conspiracy amongst the defendants, who had threatened to cause him loss. The defendants denied the truth of these allegations. With regard to the three grounds specified for the grant of an injunction, the fifth defendant in particular stated that he was not bound to leave a boundary wall of coal between the demised mine and the adjoining mines owned by him, that he had never intended to raise the coal of the demised mine through the pit of another colliery and that it would, as a matter of fact, be very costly and inconvenient for him to raise the coal except through the pits of the colliery in suit, and, finally, that he was not bound to maintain the pillars in their present condition, but that it was his interest to keep them strong enough so that the surface might not sink and damage the works. The Subordinate Judge has granted an injunction on the first two grounds and has refused an injunction on the third ground. This decree has been assailed both by the plaintiff and the defendant. On behalf of the plaintiff it has been argued that an injunction should have been granted with regard to the maintenance of the pillars. On behalf of the defendant, it has been contended that no injunction should have been granted, as the suit is premature and as the lessee is not bound to leave a boundary wall of coal to separate the demised mine from the adjacent mines and is also entitled to carry the coal from the demised mine in any manner he chooses. The questions which emerge for consideration may consequently be enumerated as follows:—namely, first, is the claim for perpetual injunction premature and, if so, to what extent and secondly, if the suit is not premature, what are the respective rights and obligations of the lessor and lessee in respect of the maintenance of a boundary wall of coal, the preservation of pillars of coal for the protection of the surface, and the mode in which coal may be raised out of the demised mine? Before we examine these questions, it is necessary to state that no oral evidence was given by the parties and no attempt was made by the plaintiff to establish the allegation of conspiracy amongst the defendants or of the threats held out to damage the property. We must consequently proceed on the facts admitted in the pleadings.

The first question for consideration is whether as alleged by the defendant the suit is premature. It is well settled that a man who seeks the aid of the Court by an injunction must show that the act complained of is in fact a violation of his right or is at least an act which, if carried into effect, will necessarily result in a violation of the right. The mere prospect or apprehension of injury or the mere belief that the act complained of may or will be done is not sufficient. As Lord Brougham said in Earl of Ripon v. Hobart (1). proceeding upon practical views of human affairs, the law will guard against risks which are so imminent that no prudent person would incur them, although they do not amount to absolute certainty of damage; it will go further according to the same practical and rational view and balancing the magnitude of the evil against the chances of its occurrence, it will even provide against a somewhat less imminent probability in cases where the mischief, should it be done, would be vast and overwhelming. To succeed in such an action, the plaintiff must show a strong case of probability that the apprehended mischief will in fact arise [Attorney-General v. Manchester Corporation(2)] or in the words of Fitz Gibbon, L. J., in Attorney-General v. Bathmines (3), the law requires proof by the plaintiff of a well-founded apprehension of injury, proof of actual and real danger [Attorney-General v. Nottingham Corporation (4)]. The plaintiff must show the existence of an intention on the part of the defendant to do the act complained of, but direct evidence of such intention may be unnecessary, if a man insists on his right to do or begins to do or threatens to do or gives notice of his intention to do an act which must, if completed, give a ground of action. As was observed by Wood, V. C., in Tipping v. Eckersley (5), the Court may interfere by injunction whether the defendant has or has not actually committed the breach in respect of which the interference of the Court is sought, for in a case of contract it is enough if the defendant claims and insists on a right to do the act, although he has not already done it modo et forma, as alleged. To the same effect is the observation of Jessel, M. R., in Cooper v. Whittingham (6): wherever an act is illegal and is threatened, the Court will interfere and prevent the act being done, and as regards the mode of granting an injunction, the Court will grant it either when the illegal act is threatened but has not been actually done, or when it has been done and seemingly is intended to be repeated. Of similar import is the observation of Mellish, L. J., in Hext v. Gill (7) which arose in connection with the exercise of mining rights: where persons claim to have the right to do a thing, even though saying they have no present intention of doing it, it is idle for them to say that they do not threaten to do the thing and to contend that they are not proper parties to a bill for a declaration of right and for an injunction. The same principle has been affirmed in numerous judicial decisions, amongst which may be mentioned Attorney-General v. Forbes (8), Shafto v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (9), Carlton Illustrators v. Coleman (10), Thornhill v. Weeks (11), Pots v. Levy (12). Tested in the light of these principles, it is plain that as the defendant claims right to take away the entire coal, the Court is competent to grant an injunction if it is established that what the defendant asserts he has a right to do, would constitute a breach of contract between the lessor and the lessee. As regards the mode of removal of the coal, however, the defendant asserts that he never intended to take it out of the mine through a pit in his own colliery, and that it would, indeed, be needlessly expensive and inconvenient to do so. The plaintiff has, therefore, failed to prove that he has any ground for an injunction in this respect. The suit cannot consequently be deemed premature in respect of all the reliefs claimed, though the objection may hold good with regard to one of them.

As regards the first ground on which an injunction is sought, the Subordinate Judge has held that the defendant is bound to leave a barrier of coal between the demised mine and the adjoining mines, on the principle that a lessee who removes a barrier between the demised mine and an adjoining mine is, as was ruled in Marker v. Kenrick (13), prima facie guilty of waste. That doctrine has no application to the circumstances of the present case. No doubt, the owner of a lower mine must, if he wishes to guard against the natural flow of water from the mines of his neighbours, have a barrier in the upper part of his mine to pen back the water, Marker v. Kenrick (13), Earl of Mexborough v. Power (14), Baird v. Williamson (15), and the lessee may be held liable for damage done by breaking down the barrier between the mines, Llynvi Coal Co. v. Brogden (16). In the present case, the lessee entitled, under the lease, to remove all the coal of the demised mine; but he undertook to manage the work according to the prevailing practice with special care and expertness. It has not been suggested that the defendant has acted in breach of this covenant. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether a lease of all the coals in certain lands without any stipulation as to barriers entitles the lessee to work the minerals, so as not to leave a barrier to prevent the invasion of water from an adjacent mine, but there is authority for the proposition that in such a case the lessee is relieved by implication from an obligation to leave a barrier as protection against the invasion of water, Wemyss v. Hopes (17), Wark v. Bargaddie Coal Company (18), Mundy v. Duke of Rutland (19). It is plain that, in any view, it is not obligatory upon the lessee to leave a barrier of coal merely to prevent communication with adjoining mines; and this is the sole object with which the plaintiff seeks an injunction against the defendants. Reference may, in the connection, be made to the tenth paragraph of the lease, by which the lessee undertook not to cut the coal so as to overleap the boundaries of the land settled with him; obviously no question of trespass into the mine of an adjoining owner could arise unless the parties contemplated that the lessee was entitled under the lease to work the mineral right up to the extremity of the boundary of the demised mine. We hold accordingly that the injunction granted by the Subordinate Judge which restrains the defendant from breaking through the existing barrier of coal cannot be supported.

As regards the second ground on which the injunction is sought, the Subordinate Judge has held that the defendant is not entitled to raise coal from the demised mine through the pits of his own mine. The question has turned out to be of practical importance to the plaintiff under somewhat exceptional and possibly unforeseen circumstances. The lessee of the demised mine is bound under the lease to pay the lessor a royalty of 5 annas per ton on all coal raised from the mine and despatched by railway or sold at the mouth of the pit, subject to the payment of a minimum annual royalty of Rs. 960. The original lessee has no other land in the neighbourhood and could work the mine only through the pits sunk therein. The defendant transferee, however, holds other mines in the vicinity, on the condition of payment of only a fixed dead rent, without royalty on the output of the coal. The position consequently is that if the defendant raises, through the pit of his own colliery, coal from the demised mine, separate accounts must be kept of the coal raised from the different sources. The plaintiff apprehends that the defendant will pass off the coal raised from the demised mine as coal from his own colliery and thus deprive the plaintiff of his legitimate royalty. The plaintiff contends that in these circumstances, the defendant should not be allowed to raise coal from the demised mine through the pit of his adjacent mine or, in other words, to work the demised mine by instroke, as it is technically called. The question raised is by no means free from difficulty and is not covered by any authority precisely in point. The right of instroke is the right of conveying minerals leased to the surface through a pit or shaft in an adjoining mine; it is the converse right to that of outstroke, which is the right of conveying minerals from an adjoining mine to the surface through a pit or shaft in the mine leased. As regards these rights it has been held that a lessee is prima facie entitled to work by instroke but not by outstroke, Whalley v. Ramage (20), Lewis v. Fothergill (21), Jegon v. Vivian (22), Duke of Hamilton v. Graham (23), Ramsay Blair (21), Mangle v. Young (25). This doctrine is defended on the principle that by instroke working the lessee puts his own property to a legitimate use as a roadway by conveying through it the minerals leased, and it matters not to the lessor how the minerals in the mine leased are excavated, provided, as a well-known author adds, the royalty accounts of the two mines are kept separate (Stewart on Mines, page 115). The question, however, has arisen, as the reports show, only in connection with the right of the lessor to compel the lessee to sink a pit or shaft in the demised mine, and it has been ruled that if the lessor desires to deprive the lessee of his right of instroke working, he must do so by clear and unambiguous provision, making it obligatory on the lessee to sink pits or shafts, James v. Cochrane (26), and the obligation to sink a pit, where not expressly laid on the lessee, is one readily inferred, Wheatley v. Westminster Brymbo Coal & Coke Co. (27). The question of the exercise of the right of instroke has not been, so far as we have been able to discover, raised and considered under circumstances similar to those of the present case, viz., where there are pits on the mine demised and the lessee holds adjacent mines under conditions substantially different from those on which the demised mine has been transferred to him. It may be a question of some nicety whether in circumstances like these, the Court should assume that the parties intended that the lessee should possess the right to work by instroke. It is perfectly plain that, in the present case, the original parties to the lease did not contemplate the contingency which has happened and did not make provision therefor, in the contract. There would consequently be a presumption of right in the lessee to work in the most advantageous way, subject to his not committing a fraud on the lessor. One position is thus obvious, viz., that if it be assumed that the lessee has the right to work by instroke, he cannot be permitted to exercise that right fraudulently to the detriment of his lessor, and if it were established that he has fraudulently passed off coal raised from the demised mine by instroke as coal of his own colliery, the Court would not hesitate to grant an injunction to restrain him from a repetition of the fraudulent act. No such attempt at fraud has even been sought to be proved. On the other hand, the defendant in the ninth paragraph of his written statement distinctly stated that the apprehension of the plaintiff was entirely unfounded, that he had no intention to work by instroke, and that it would, as a matter of fact, be needlessly expensive and inconvenient for him to carry the coal out of the demised mine through the pits of the adjoining mines. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the injunction granted by the Subordinate Judge to restrain the defendant from working the mine by instroke cannot be sustained.

As regards the third ground on which the injunction is sought, the Subordinate Judge has held that the defendant cannot be directed to maintain the pillars in their present shape and size. The plaintiff contends that the injunction in this respect has been improperly refused. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention. Prima facie the owner of the surface has a right of support, and the lessee is not entitled to work the mines so as to cause a subsidence, Bugdale v. Robertson (28), Eadon v. Jeffcock (29), Hunt v. Peake (30), Davis v. Treharne (31), Butterknowle Colliery Co. v. Bishop Auckland Industrial Co-operative Society (32), New Moss Colliery Ltd. v. Manchester Corporation (33), Howley Park Coal Co. v. London & N. W. Ry. Co. (34), Butterley Co. v. New Hucknall Colliery Co. (35), Rowbotham v. Wilson (36). This right to support will be protected by an injunction, if the Court is satisfied that injury is imminent and certain to result from the defendant's acts, Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell (37), Birmingham Corporation v. Allen (38), Siddon v. Short (39). The Court will also interfere by injunction when the defendant claims the right to do acts which must inevitably cause a subsidence, Proud v. Bates (40), Heat v. Gill (7), Attorney General v. Conduit Colliery Co. (41), Hilton v. Granville (42). In the case before us there are no materials to show that the plaintiff has the right to the surface and till such right has been established, he would have no right to claim protection against subsidence of the surface. Assuming, however, that the plaintiff has rights in the surface, there is no evidence to show that the pillars need be maintained in their present size and numbers to prevent a subsidence, and in view of the statutory rules for the working of mines, it is extremely improbable that the defendant could alter the pillars in such a way as to endanger the surface. The defendant further protested in the twelfth and thirteenth paragraphs of his written statement that he has no intention to alter the pillars in such a way as to cause a subsidence of the surface, for the obvious reason that the subsidence would mean destruction of his works. We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has rightly refused to grant an injunction in this respect.

The result is that the appeal by the plaintiff (No. 340 of 1912) must be dismissed the appeal by the fifth defendant (No. 314 of 1912) allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge discharged. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in both Courts payable by the plaintiff to the fifth defendant alone. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs in each appeal.

Mortgage—Foreclosure suit—Preliminary decree—Mortgagor failing to redeem—Mortgagee failing to obtain decree absolute—Fresh suit for redemption—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 47.

If a mortgagee does not apply in a foreclosure suit for a decree absolute, he does not get rid of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee.

Therefore, in such a case a mortgagor or his representative who was allowed in the suit six months' time to pay the decretal amount, is not barred by reason of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, from filing a fresh suit for redemption, nor is his suit barred by section 11 of the Code, but he cannot go behind the decree in the mortgagee's suit in so far as it settles the amount of the mortgage-debt up to the date of that decree.

Obiter dictum:—A dismissal for want of prosecution of a mortgagor's action for redemption does not prevent the mortgagor from bringing a fresh suit for redemption.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 195 of 1912, confirming the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Nasik, in Civil Suit No. 297 of 1911.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims to be the assignee of the equity of redemption of a certain mortgagor, named Chima, Chima's mortgage having been created on the 17th of June 1890 in favour of the first defendant. The assignment of the plaintiff is dated the 2nd April 1902. Subsequent to that assignment the Court under a money-decree obtained against Chima in Suit No. 229 of 1902 at a Court-sale held in July 1906 put up to sale, the right, title and interest of Chima in this property which was attached by the decree-holder in that suit, and at that sale the defendant-mortgagee was declared to be the purchaser.

Prior to that purchase the defendant No. 1 had brought a suit upon Chima's mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property in 1905, and the plaintiff's father, who was Chima's assignee, was joined as a party to that suit. A decree was passed by which the defendants, including the plaintiff's father, were allowed six months time to pay the money due under the mortgage, and in default the plaintiff was to recover the amount decreed by sale by applying for decree absolute. He never applied for sale but rested content with the title that he was supposed to have acquired as purchaser at the Court sale held under the decree in the money suit of 1902.

The plaintiff now brings this suit for redemption of the mortgaged property, but the learned Judge has dismissed his claim on the ground that the time of six months allowed by the decree for making payment of the mortgage claim had long expired, and that this was an application in execution which should have been brought under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that a separate redemption suit could not lie. We are of opinion that the defendant in a suit for sale under a mortgage who is given six months' time to pay the decretal debt, is not in the position of a decree-holder who has a decree to execute. His right of payment within six months is a right which he has in mitigation of his liabilities under the decree. The contention of the defendant would result in this anomalous position that having the right to apply for sale and for decree absolute he abstains from exercising that right, yet nevertheless after three years have elapsed, though he can no longer enforce the decree, he is put in the position of absolute owner of the property by reason of the defendant in the suit not having elected to pay off the mortgage. We think that if he does not apply for decree absolute he does not get rid of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee, and there is nothing to prevent the mortgagor or his representative from filing a suit for redemption. It has been held in England in Hansard v. Hardy (1) that a dismissal for want of prosecution of a mortgagor's action for redemption does not prevent him from bringing a fresh suit for redemption. A fortiori we think that his failure to pay the amount of the decretal debt within the six months allowed to him cannot, so long as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists, prevent him from filing a fresh suit for redemption, subject, however, to this that he cannot go behind the decree in the mortgagee's suit in so far as it settles the amount of the mortgage-debt up to the date of that decree. But it is not contended by the plaintiff in this suit that the mortgage-debt at that time was less than it is found to be by the Court, and, therefore, in permitting the present suit, there would be no violation of the provisions of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. We reverse the decree and remand the case for disposal on the merits. The plaintiff must have the costs of the two appeals against the opposing defendants.

Decree reversed.

A Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga school at his death left two daughters (his heirs) and a daughter-in-law, widow of a pre-deceased son. The daughter-in-law took possession of the estate to the exclusion of the daughters, who were living at their husbands' houses. The possession continued for more than 12 years:

Held, that the possession of the daughter-in-law was adverse and that under section 28 of the Limitation Act it extinguished the right of the daughters; and that the survivor of the two daughters became in on the death of her sister within 12 years of the suit, not by way of inheritance as reversioner, but by right of survivorship, and consequently Article 141 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act would not apply.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought to recover possession of land, and to understand the legal question at issue it is necessary to state briefly what the facts of the case are. There was a Hindu father governed by the Dayabhaga school of law who at his death left two daughters, Kasiswari and Harasundari, and a daughter-in-law, Umatara, the wife of a predeceased son. Kasiswari had two sons. On the death of the father, Kirti Narain, the daughters who were his heirs did not obtain possession, but Umatara, his daughter-in-law, did. She purported to alienate the estate to the predecessor of the plaintiff, and the possession of Umatara and those who claim under her by purchase was for more than twelve years. Not only was this possession for more than twelve years, but this possession was adverse to Kasiswari and Harasundari. The result was that section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act operated, with the consequence that the right of the daughters became extinguished. By some means, which are not disclosed, Kasiswari, defendant No. 3, and her sons, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, afterwards got into possession of the property, and the present suit is to recover possession from them. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have no present title. That would have been with Kasiswari, defendant No. 3, had it not been extinguished. So far as the original title to a moiety is concerned, it is not suggested before us that the claim of the plaintiff could be resisted, but it is said that inasmuch as Harasundari died in 1306, the plea of adverse possession and the consequent extinguishment cannot prevail as to the 8-annas that originally survived to Kasiswari on Harasundari's death. So the problem that arises in this case is, what was the effect of adverse possession against the two daughters who succeeded on the death of their father under the Dayabhaga system of law.

The nature of the right acquired by these two daughters is made apparent by the decision of the Privy Council in Asmritolall Bose v. Rajaneekanto Mitter (1) : and, it is abundantly clear from that case that the survivor of the two daughters came in on the death of her sister, not by way of inheritance as reversioner, but by right of survivorship. It necessarily follows from this that Article 141 does not apply and that the surviving daughter cannot now claim that she acquired a title, on the death of Harasundari, of the nature described in Article 141.

The result appears to me to be that so far as Kasiswari is concerned, her right was extinguished, not only in the original 8-annas that devolved on her, but in respect of the whole 16-annas which passed to her and her sister as a single inheritance on the death of their father.

It is unnecessary for us now to express any opinion as to what will be the position of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the death of Kasiswari. That depends on considerations which are outside the problem with which we have to deal. It is sufficient for our purpose to say that there was twelve years' adverse possession as against Kasiswari and Harasundari, and as against them and the survivor of them there was, by virtue of section 28, an extinguishment of their right in favour of the plaintiff or those under whom the plaintiff claims.

This in effect is the view taken by Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, and we must, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY OF LAHORE—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

versus

MUHAMMAD DIN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree against several defendants—Application to set aside made by some—Power of Court to set aside decree against non-applying defendants—Principal and surety—Liability of surety.

The plaintiff sued M as principal and N as surety. A decree was passed against both, but ex parte against M. On the application of M alone the Court set aside the decree against both M and N, and eventually released N from liability, holding that he was not liable as a surety and that he had signed the contract, the basis of the suit, as a witness only. On application for revision by plaintiff:

Held, that the Court was wrong in setting aside the decree passed against N, as the contract clearly showed that N was liable as surety, and the Court was not justified in finding that N had signed the contract as a witness only.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated 21st March 1911, decreeing claim in the plaintiffs' favour with proportionate costs against defendant No. 1 alone.

Messrs. Broadway and Obedulla, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-petitioners sued Muhammad Din, principal, and Nathu, as surety, for Rs. 160 on the 15th August 1910. A decree was passed against both defendants for Rs. 130, ex parte against Muhammad Din only.

On the 16th December 1910 the ex parte decree was set aside on an application by Muhammad Din alone, but the case was re-heard as if the decree against Nathu was still open.

On the 21st March 1911, the Court released Nathu from liability and gave a decree for Rs. 78 against Muhammad Din.

The plaintiffs have applied for revision both as to the amount of the decree and more particularly as to the release of Nathu from liability.

Neither defendants have appeared in this Court. There is no explanation of Muhammad Din's absence. Notice reached Nathu, but he declined to receive it on the ground that there was an omission of the words : "Mistri" in the description of his father's name. There appears to me no doubt that he was properly served, and that his refusal to accept notice was contumacious. The revision is accordingly heard ex parte against both defendants.

The Small Cause Court was clearly in error in setting aside the original decree against Nathu, and after examining the contract note in question, I consider that the Court was also wrong in eventually holding that Nathu did not sign as a guarantor. The latter finding that he signed as a witness only is not justified, especially as neither of the defendants ventured into the witness-box to deny the plaintiffs' clear allegations.

Counsel for plaintiffs does not press the question that a larger sum than Rs. 78 is strictly speaking due. The plaintiff is satisfied with the establishment of Nathu's joint liability and waives any further demand.

The revision is accordingly allowed ex parte. The lower Court's decree is altered to one for Rs. 78 and costs against both the defendants, Muhammad Din and Nathu.

The decree will carry costs to the plaintiffs in this Court also.

Revision accepted.

FRANK B. POOL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Promissory note—Principal and agent—Partnership—Money deposited with manager of business not in course of business—Liability of proprietor—Estoppel.

The plaintiff sued the defendant, on a document which purported to be a receipt in favour of the plaintiff, for a certain sum of money as a deposit bearing interest. The amount was stated to be on account of plaintiff's one-third share deposited by his grandfather for the plaintiff during his minority. It was not signed by the defendant, but by a person who was alleged by the plaintiff to be the partner of the defendant in a business and who was admittedly acting as its manager. It was not shown that he had received the money and signed the document in the course of the business, but on the contrary, it was found that the money was advanced to the executant to buy up the business from the defendant who was its sole proprietor. It was urged on behalf of the plaintiff (1) that the document was a promissory note and (2) that the defendant had in correspondence described himself as part proprietor of the business:

Held, that the document could not be treated as a promissary note, that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant and that the defendant was in no way estopped by merely describing himself as a part proprietor from showing the true nature of the transaction.

Second appeal from the decree of the Addition Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated 21st February 1910, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th July 1909, decreeing the claim.

Messrs. Pestonjee Dadabhoy and A. B. Broadway, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. A. Herbert and A. Brandon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH DIN, J.—(February 13th, 1914.)—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Frank B. Pool, against the defendant-appellant, Diwan Daya Kishen Kaul, to recover Rs. 3,766-10-4, principal and interest, alleged to be due on a document dated the 17th September 1906 (Exhibit P1). Both the Courts below have concurred in decreeing the plaintiff's claim, and the defendant has preferred a further appeal to this Court.

Exhibit P1, on the strength of which the suit has been brought, is in the following terms :—

"Symons and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, the Charing Cross Dispensary, Lahore, dated the 17th September 1906.

"Received from Mr. Frank B. Pool the sum of Rs. 3,333-5-4 (three thousand three hundred and thirty-three, annas five and piés four only) as a deposit bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 1st September 1906. This being one-third share of Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand only) deposited by his grandfather and guardian on his behalf during his minority and which minority ceases from 1st September 1906. (Signed) Symons and Co." Stamp one anna.

To elucidate the circumstances under which this document was executed, it is necessary to state a few facts and refer to certain letters on the record in chronological order. Some time before December 1898, a Mrs. Pollard of Simla, who was carrying on the business of Chemists, Druggists and Manufacturers of Ærated Waters at Lahore under the name and style of Symons and Company, sold the said business, including the stock-in-trade, book-debts, furniture, etc., to one Mr. Robert Dean O'Dell, it being agreed between the parties that the business may be carried on in future under the name and style of Symons and Company, Lahore. The said R. D. O'Dell, re-sold the business to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul on the 9th December 1898 for Rs. 10,000. After the purchase of the business from R. D. O'Dell, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul invested a further sum of Rs. 8,240-6-0 in the said business before November 1899, and by a deed of agreement dated the 18th November 1899 (Exhibit D13), executed between Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and R. D. O'Dell, the latter agreed that in consideration of the special knowledge of the business possessed by him, he will continue to manage the same on behalf of the said Pandit Daya Kishsen Kaul as heretofore on the terms and conditions agreed upon and set forth in the deed of agreement. Then followed ten clauses II to XI, of which clauses IV, VI, X and XI are the only clauses meterial to this case. Clause IV provides in effect that out of six annas of every rupee of the profits, after making certain payments on account of the interest on the capital fund due to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and also on account of the expenses incidental to the business, etc., R. D. O'Dell will draw his salary as Manager of the business. Under clause VI, R. D. O'Dell agreed that in consideration of the said share of profits as provided for in clause IV, he will devote his whole time and attention to managing, conducting, superintending, and improving the business. Clause X recited that the agreement was made for a period of four years ending with the 1st January 1904, and clause XI provided that at any time within the four years abovementioned it will be optional with the said R. D. O'Dell to pay the said Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul all the capital that may then remain invested (vide paragraph III) in the business together with interest at 8 per cent. per annum and become full proprietor of the business, good-will, stock-in-trade, etc., and thereafter Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul will cease to have anything to do with the business.

It seems that in the early part of 1903 O'Dell was trying to persuade one Mr. William Dorton to puchase the business of Symons and Company from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and thereafter to agree to the business being carried on in partnership by both Dorton and O'Dell. Dorton apparently made an offer by telegram to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul for the purchase of the business, and the latter communicated by telegram to O'Dell on the subject. This is shown by Exhibit P. W. 15, dated the 30th May 1903, which is a letter written by O'Dell to Dorton. In that letter O'Dell says that the initial outlay (on the business) is Rs. 20,000. On the 1st June 1903 two letters were written to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul one by O'Dell, Exhibit D7, and the other by Dorton, Exhibit P. W. 16. In Exhibit D7, O'Dell says that he got Mr. Dorton to send to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul the telegram that he did, and further says that the initial outlay is Rs. 18,240-6-0 which he (Dorton) is quite prepared to pay. In Exhibit P. W. 16, Dorton referring to a telegram received by him from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul says that the initial outlay on the business as borne out by the books and the agreement between Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and O'Dell [which no doubt means the agreement, dated the 18th November 1899 (Exhibit D13)] is Rs. 18,240-6-0, and Dorton adds that this amount he is prepared to pay as soon as Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul comes to Lahore and signs the necessary documents. The next important document is Exhibit P. W. 17, dated the 3rd June 1903, which is a letter from Dorton to O'Dell. In this letter reference is made to certain draft articles of agreement which were intended to be the basis of a deed of partnership between the two in connection with the business which Dorton was going to purchase from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, and the draft referred to in the letter is the document Exhibit D2 on the record. This draft agreement shows that Dorton had agreed to advance O'Dell Rs. 18,240-6-0 to enable him to buy out Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul by paying the latter the said sum as provided for by clause XI of the deed of agreement, dated the 18th November 1899; and that thereafter O'Dell and Dorton were to enter into partnership to carry on the business of the firm of Symons and Company. On the 10th June 1903, O'Dell wrote a letter to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, Exhibit D8, in which he enclosed a cheque for Rs. 8,240-6-0 and said: "As soon as I can raise a further loan of Rs. 10,000, you shall have it per return post. In order to enable me to do so as soon as possible, please send me a letter to the effect that I owe you Rs. 10,000 only, and that as soon as I can pay you that amount the business will be mine. Armed with this I shall try the several banks, and if I have good luck I hope to remit the amount soon." As requested by O'Dell, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul sent him a letter, dated the 11th June 1903, Exhibit D15, in which it is stated that as soon as the amount of Rs. 10,000 is paid by O'Dell the business will become his and Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul will cease to be a part proprietor of it.

It is important to note here that in Exhibit D8, O'Dell did not say that he had received Rs. 8,240-6-0 from Dorton or that he had sent this sum to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul on his (Dorton's) behalf; but it is clear from a letter, dated the 2nd October 1906, Exhibit P. W. 1, written by O'Dell to Dorton asking him to return the voucher for Rs. 10,000, that some time between the 3rd and the 10th June 1903, i.e., between the dates on which Exhibit P. W. 17 and Exhibit D8 were written, Dorton advanced to O'Dell in pursuance of the terms of the draft agreement, Exhibit D2, a sum of Rs. 10,000 to enable O'Dell to pay to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul part of the purchase-money of the business, Rs. 18,240-6-0. The voucher for Rs. 10,000 referred to in Exhibit P. W. 1 has not been produced in the case; but it is not disputed by either side that Rs. 10,000 was advanced by Dorton to O'Dell some time between the dates mentioned above. It would seem that although originally O'Dell had arranged to let Dorton purchase the business from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul on payment of Rs. 18,240-6-0, they subsequently agreed that the purchase should be made by O'Dell under the terms of clause XI of the agreement, dated the 18th November 1899; and Dorton therefore advanced Rs. 10,000 to O'Dell to make part payment to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul towards the purchase of the business in his own name. It is not clear why Dorton did not pay the whole amount of Rs. 18,240-6-0 to O'Dell, as apparently he was originally prepared to pay to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul. Whatever the reason for this may have been, Dorton paid O'Dell only Rs. 10,000 and it was clearly out of that Rs. 10,000 that O'Dell sent to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul a cheque for Rs. 8,240-6-0. At the same time O'Dell wrote to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul saying that he was arranging to raise the additional Rs. 10,000 to complete the purchase of the business, and he asked for a letter from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul to the effect that as soon as the sum is paid to him the business will be O'Dell's.

It is perfectly clear from the above correspondence that O'Dell intended to exercise the option that was given to him under clause XI of the agreement, dated the 18th November 1899, of buying out Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul after paying the latter the capital invested by him in the business in question, and that Dorton advanced Rs. 10,000 to O'Dell to enable him to carry out this intention. O'Dell paid Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul Rs. 8,240-6-0, as we have seen above, on the 10th June 1903; but for some reason or other he did not pay him the balance, Rs. 10,000, and so the intended purchase of the business by O'Dell from Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul was not completed. Meanwhile, it would seem that the Rs. 10,000 which was advanced by Dorton to O'Dell was treated by the latter as a deposit with the firm of Symons and Co. bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. It would further appear that the money really belonged to three of Dorton's grandchildren who were minors in 1903, but who attained majority some time before September 1906. On the 1st September 1906 O'Dell, on behalf of Symons and Co., wrote a letter, Exhibit P. W. 2, to Frank B. Pool, plaintiff in the present case, stating that his grandfather, W. Dorton, had written to O'Dell that from 1st September 1906 the firm of Symons and Company would have to deal direct with his three grandchildren, Oswold Pool, Mrs. Louisa Wight, and Frank D. Pool, in connection with the deposit of Rs. 10,000 and asking Frank B. Pool what his intentions were on the subject. On the 17th September 1906 the document (Exhibit P1), which is the basis of the present suit, was executed by O'Dell, in the name of Symons and Co., in favour of Frank B. Pool, and on the 2nd October 1906 he wrote a letter, Exhibit P. W. 1, to Dorton saying that as Symons and Co. had adjusted Mr. Oswold Pool's claim for Rs. 3,333-5-4 and had entered into an agreement with Mr. Frank B. Pool, the voucher for Rs. 10,000 might be returned to the company. Whether this voucher for Rs. 10,000 was returned or not is not known, and, as we have said above, the voucher has not been placed on the record. O'Dell died on the 30th November 1906, and on the 1st December 1906 Dorton sent a notice, Exhibit P. W. 3, to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul saying that as the co-partner of the firm of Symons and Co., Chemists, he (Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul) was indebted to Dorton and his grandson, Frank B. Pool, in the sum of Rs. 6,666-10-8 and asking for a settlement of accounts at once. In this notice O'Dell is referred to as the Managing Proprietor of the firm. After the death of O'Dell certain proceedings connected with the administration of O'Dell's estate were held in the Court of the District Judge, Lahore, and in the course of those proceedings certain applications were made by Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and his Legal Adviser, Mr. Harkishen Lal, to the District Judge which have been referred to in argument. In one of them, Exhibit P. W. 9, dated the 3rd January 1907, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul referred to O'Dell as "the Managing Partner" of the firm of Symons and Co., and to himself as "the partner in the business," and in another application, Exhibit P. W. 12, dated the 7th March 1907, Mr. Harkishen Lal described his client, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, as the surviving partner. On the other hand, an application dated the 15th April 1907 (Exhibit P. W. 13) was made by Dorton in the District Judge's Court in which he referred to O'Dell as Manager and to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul as Proprietor of the firm of Symons and Co. The real position of Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul was, however, explained by Mr. E. W. Parker, Advocate, in a statement which he made in the District Judge's Court on behalf of the Pandit on the 22nd October 1907, Exhibit P. W. 14.

The present suit has been filed by Frank B. Pool against Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul to recover principal and interest alleged to be due under the document of the 17th September 1906, Exhibit P 1, which was executed in his favour by O'Dell in the name of Symons and Co., and the question for decision before us is whether the defendant is liable to the plaintiff upon that document. The plaintiff has described the document throughout this litigation as a promissory note, but it clearly is not a promissory note and cannot be treated as such, but whether it can be so treated or not, it is not disputed that the defendant can be liable on this document only if it is proved that at the time when it was executed by O'Dell in favour of the plaintiff, O'Dell was a partner in the firm of Symons and Co., and further that he had borrowed the money in respect of which this document was executed in his capacity as such partner in the ordinary course of business. The Courts below have found on the affirmative on this question and have, therefore, concurred in decreeing the plaintiff's claim. We find ourselves unable to agree in this view. The whole course of the correspondence between Dorton and O'Dell, between O'Dell and Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul as also between Dorton and Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul indicates clearly that the sum of Rs. 10,000 was not advanced by Dorton in June 1903 to O'Dell in his capacity of partner of the firm of Symons and Co., but that it was advanced to him to enable him to buy out Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, who was known and considered to be the sole Proprietor of that firm, on the understanding that thereafter the business would be carried on in partnership by O'Dell and Dorton. The deed of agreement, dated the 18th November 1899, clearly shows, in our opinion, that O'Dell was not a co-partner in the firm with Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, but that the latter was its sole Proprietor and O'Dell was simply a Manager of the business who was being paid his salary as Manager out of a six-annas share of the profits of the concern. It is clear from O'Dell's letter to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, dated the 10th June 1903 (Exhibit D 8), that O'Dell did not consider himself a partner in the business and that his intention was to pay Rs. 18,240-6-0 to Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul and to become the sole Proprietor thereof in place of the latter. The words part proprietor used by Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul in his letter of the 11th June 1903 (Exhibit D 15) on which the Divisional Judge relies were used by Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul in a loose sense, as meaning that on payment of part of the purchase-money O'Dell had become as it were a part proprietor of the business to the extent of the money advanced by him. Strictly speaking this view of the position was incorrect, and it is manifest that at the time when the Rs. 10,000 was advanced by Dorton to O'Dell, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul was no less the sole proprietor of the business because in his letter of the 11th June he referred to himself as "part proprietor." Clearly no question of estoppel arises in this case with reference to the letter of the 11th June, and the plaintiff's suit must succeed or fail according as it is held that at the time when Dorton advanced the Rs. 10,000 to O'Dell the latter was or was not a partner in the firm of Symons and Co., who had power to borrow and had borrowed the money in the ordinary course of business as such partner. In our opinion O'Dell was at that time not a partner in the firm, nor did he borrow the money from Dorton on behalf of the firm in the ordinary course of business as such partner. The mere fact that O'Dell signed the voucher for Rs. 10,000 in the name of Symons and Co., (assuming that he did so sign it) is not sufficient to create any liability on the part of the Proprieter, Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul, and it follows that (Exhibit P1), which is sued upon in this case and which was executed by O'Dell in the name of Symons and Co., cannot furnish the plaintiff with a cause of action against Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul. Sections 249, 250 and 251 of the Contract Act, on which the Divisional Judge has relied in support of his view that Pandit Daya Kishen Kaul is liable to the plaintiff on Exhibit P1 have (upon our finding as to the position of O'Dell in the firm) no bearing whatever upon the case.

For the reasons given, we accept this appeal and reversing the decree of the Divisional Judge dismiss the plaintiff's suit. The record shows that at one time the defendant gave the plaintiff to understand that he was prepared to settle his claim on certain terms without prejudice; but that as the plaintiff found himself unable to forego any part of his claim, the defendant stood on his legal rights and denied his liability in toto. The plaintiff had a perfectly good claim against O'Dell who was managing the business of the defendant's firm, and it is unfortunate that owing to the death of O'Dell plaintiff has lost all that was advanced by his quondam guardian for his benefit to the deceased. In these circumstances we think that the ends of justice would be met by ordering the parties to pay their own costs throughout and we direct accordingly.

KENSINGTON, C. J.—I agree throughout with my learned colleague and regret that by an unfortunate oversight there has been delay in delivery of the judgment, which was announced at the hearing.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 58—Objection to attachment Court's duty to decide on merits.

An objection to an attachment of property under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, should not be dismissed and the claimant forced to file a regular suit to get the attached property released, on the ground that the question of possession is doubtful and of title complicated, but should be adjudicated on the merits.

Petition, under section 70 (a) of Act III of 1912, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd February 1912, dismissing the objection.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for Mr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge has refused to adjudicate upon the objection preferred by the petitioner, a minor, against the attachment of certain property, upon the ground that the question of possession is doubtful and of title most complicated. He, therefore, declined to deal with the question of title and possession in summary proceedings and cited In the matter of Deafholts v. Peters (1) in support of his view. The

(1) 14 C. 631.

Calcutta case has been distinguished by this Court in Musammat Chand Kuar v. Mela Ram (2), and the latter judgment is binding upon me. I find that the decree in the present case is very similar to the one in Musammat Chand Kuar v. Mela Ram (2) and the executing Court has ordered the attachment of the mortgaged property which has led to the objections by the petitioner. If a person is in possession of property as his own and satisfies the Court on that point, I fail to see why he should be forced to file a regular suit to get the property released from attachment.

In the present case, there is this further point in favour of the petitioner that he applied to be impleaded as a defendant in the mortgage suit and the plaintiff resisted his application and got it rejected. Surely the plaintiff cannot now ask the executing Court to refuse to give a decision on the rights of the minor when the latter claims to be in possession as owner. The refusal by the Court will lead to great injustice.

Following Musammat Chand Kuar v. Mela Ram (2), I set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to decide the objection case on the merits. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 8th June 1912 Musammat Juggo was appointed guardian of the persons and property of her minor sons one of whom is Parshotam Das, aged 13 or 14 years. He is at present living with his grand-uncle, Durga Das, who is a certificated and practising Mukhtar and apparently a man of means. Musammat Juggo's present application was under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act for return of Parshotam Das to her custody. The District Judge has refused the application and has ordered that the boy should remain with Durga Das for the present, the order to remain in force so long as the boy wishes to remain with him.

Musammat Juggo appeals,—and after a careful consideration of all the facts of the case, I cannot find any sufficient reason to interfere with the order of the District Judge. What the Court has to look to above all things in these cases is the welfare of the minor. The real reason why Musammat Juggo wishes the boy to live with her is that he may work for and help to maintain her; this emerges from the 6th ground of appeal. Considering his age, he is not fit to maintain his mother and brothers, and it is far more to his advantage that he should be comfortably maintained by his uncle who is well off and able to support him.

An objection is raised to the effect that Musammat Juggo was not given an opportunity of producing evidence. She summoned only one witness, who was, however, not examined; the reason for this is not apparent on the record. But in any case all the Court had to do was to satisfy itself what was best in the interests of the minor, and was not bound to make a protracted inquiry. The inquiry made appears to me to be quite sufficient.

The appeal is dismissed, but I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1125 AND 1264 TO 1268 OF 1912.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit for rent other than house rent, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court—Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), s 37 cl. (4)—Land on which a garden stood before, sold for arrears of revenue—Incumbrance, whether void—Landlord, right of, to annul notice—Notice, how sufficient—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Appeal, second, whether competent.

A suit for rent (other than house rent) is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court and in the absence of a notification issued by the Local Government expressly investing a Judge of the Court of Small Causes with authority to exercise jurisdiction with respect thereto, a second appeal in such a suit, although the value thereof does not exceed Rs. 500, is not barred by section 102, Civil Procedure Code.

The mere fact that a garden was made on a piece of land a quarter of a century before it was sold for arrears of revenue, would not make it land "on which a garden has been made" for all time to come, and it does not fall within the exception to section 37 of Act XI of 1859 and is liable to be annulled.

A sale for arrears of revenue does not ipso facto avoid incumbrances or under-tenures, but only renders them voidable at the option of the purchaser. It is, therefore, necessary that the purchaser must, by some unequivocal act, indicate his intention to avoid under-tenure if he desires to do so A formal written notice is not essential, but the election of the purchaser to avoid must be brought to the knowledge of the tenure-holder.

Per Beachcroft, J.—Section 37, clause (4), of Act XI of 1859 contemplates improvements or works of a permanent character and these are protected, irrespective of whether the lease was or was not given for the purpose of the work in question. But to afford protection the work must still be in existence or the land be used for the purpose of the work.

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 19th of February 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Sealdah, dated the 26th of April 1911.

JUDGMENT.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—These appeals arise out of suits for recovery of rent of homestead lands comprised in a mouroosi mokurari tenure which belonged to the plaintiffs. The defence was that the tenure held by the plaintiffs had been extinguished by the sale of the estate within which it is situated, for arrears of revenue under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, that the purchaser had entered into possession of the estate and that the defendants had paid the rents to the purchaser.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeals on behalf of the respondents under section 102, Civil Procedure Code. It has been contended that a suit for rent is of a nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and reliance is placed on the case of Soundaram Ayyar v. Sennia Naickan (1). Now, Article 8 of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act expressly exempts suits for rent other than house rent from the cognizance of Small Cause Courts, unless the Judge of the Court of Small Causes has been expressly invested by the Local Government with authority to exercise jurisdiction with respect thereto. But the majority of the Judges constituting the above Full Bench of the Madras High Court were of opinion that a suit for rent is of the nature of a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It appears that by a notification the Madras Government has invested all Subordinate Judges and District Munsifs within the Presidency with jurisdiction to try on their Small Cause Court side all suits for rent falling within the pecuniary limits of their special jurisdiction. No such notification has been issued by the Local Government in this Presidency and so far as this Court is concerned, second appeals in suits for rent (other than house rent), although the value thereof does not exceed Rs. 500, have always been entertained. I accordingly overrule the preliminary objection.

Two questions have been raised in these appeals. The first is whether the tenure of the plaintiffs is protected under the provisions of clause (4) of section 37, Act XI of 1859, and secondly, whether the tenure has been annulled.

As regards the first question it appears that the estate consists only of 2 bighas 14 cottas of basit land. The learned District Judge, however, has held the land is one on which a garden has been made, because it formed part of 10 bighas of land which was once a garden and is called Seal's Garden. I am of opinion that he is wrong in this view. The land ceased to be garden about a quarter of a century ago, and tenants have been settled on the land since then. The mere fact that a garden was made on a piece of land a quarter of a century before the sale would not make it land "on which a garden has been made" for all time to come. The land comprised in estate No. 1678 for a very long time has been, and at the time of the sale, was basti land. In the plaints themselves, the lands are described as homestead lands. I am accordingly of opinion that the tenure does not fall within the exception to section 37 of Act XI of 1859 and is liable to be annulled.

The next question is, whether the tenure has been annulled. It is no doubt true that a sale for arrears of revenue does not ipso facto avoid incumbrances or under-tenures, but only renders them voidable at the option of the purchaser. See Titu Bibi v. Mohesh Chunder Bagchi (2). But the purchaser may annul an under-tenure not only by the institution of a suit against the under-tenure-holder, but can do so by any suitable means. It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that, it is not necessary to give any notice to the under-tenure-holder for avoiding the tenure, and reliance is placed on an observation in the judgment in the case of Darsan Singh v. Bhawani Koer (3) viz., that "the purchaser may elect to annul an under-tenure not only by institution of a suit or by giving a notice to vacate, but may indicate it by other means." In that case a notice was in fact given to the under-tenure-holder, and all that was meant to be said was that a formal written notice was not essential. The effect of a sale is not ipso facto to avoid under-tenures; the purchaser has the option of avoiding them or keeping them intact. It is necessary, therefore, that the purchaser must by some unequivocal act indicate his intention to avoid under-tenure, if he desires to do so. A formal written notice to the tenure-holder would certainly be the most convenient mode of doing it, and this litigation demonstrates the difficulties in which the purchaser may be placed if he omits to serve a written notice on the tenure-holder. But I do not think that a formal notice is essential and although the election of the purchaser to avoid must be brought to the knowledge of the tenure-holder, a written notice is not the only mode in which it can be done.

The learned District Judge has held that the verbal notice said to have been given to the plaintiff was not proved, and that "the purchaser did nothing to avoid the incumbrance, but only started collecting rent on his own account which I hold cannot be sufficient notice to the plaintiff." But the Court of first instance found that on the purchaser's demanding rent from the tenants, they informed the plaintiff of it, but that he declined to assist them unless they paid off the arrears of rent due from them, that the purchaser sued the tenants for rent, took out warrant of attachment in execution of decrees and realised rents from the tenants in repudiation of the plaintiff's title, and that Court came to the conclusion that the purchaser is in actual possession of the taluk through the tenants. These findings have not been displaced on appeal. If these findings are correct, they show that the plaintiff had not only notice of unequivocal acts on the part of the purchaser indicating his election to avoid the mokarari, but that the purchaser had in fact obtained possession of the estate.

It was pointed out on behalf of the respondents that in the case of Mir Wasiruddin v. Lala Deoki Nandan (4) the forcible taking away of crops of the tenants by the purchaser and the institution of rent suits, which must be taken to be strong indications of the purchaser's intention to avoid under-tenures, were held not to be sufficient. But in that case the purchaser sought to annul under-tenures and recover possession more than twelve years after the date of the sale, and those facts were considered by the learned Judges as bearing upon the question of limitation. The rent suits instituted against some of the tenants were withdrawn as soon as the latter denied the plaintiff's title and no further attempt was made to enforce the right to realise any rent from any of the tenants of the property. The only attempt at possession consisted in an endeavour by a servant to take away crops grown by one of the many tenants of the estate, and the learned Judges held that an entry upon the land for this purpose, an entry which resulted in a conviction for theft and criminal trespass, did not constitute possession, much less possession of the entire estate for the purposes of limitation.

In the present case there is no question of limitation. Had the purchaser instituted a suit for annulment of the plaintiffs' mokarari, they could have no possible defence to the action, and if the purchaser has succeeded in obtaining possession of the estate peacefully and openly and is in possession of the estate by receipt of rent through the tenants, the mokarari of the plaintiffs must be held to have been annulled. The lower Appellate Court has, however, not come to clear findings upon the facts found by the Court of first instance. The decrees of the lower Appellate Court are accordingly set aside and the cases sent back to that Court. The Court will come to clear findings upon the facts found by the Munsif indicated above, and dispose of the appeals according to law. Costs to abide the result.

BEACHCROFT, J.—All civil suits the value of which does not exceed Rs. 500 are cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, subject to the exceptions contained in the first Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and to the provision of any special Act. Suits for rent, other than house rent, are included in the first Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. But the Local Government has authority to vest Judges of Small Cause Courts with powers to try rent suits. No notification has been made vesting Small Cause Court Judges in Bengal in general, nor the Judge of first instance in this particular case, with such powers. I am, therefore, of opinion that this appeal is not incompetent.

As regards the question of annulment of an under-tenure, I agree with my learned brother in thinking that no particular method of expressing an intention to annul an under-tenure is necessary, but that any unequivocal act is sufficient which indicates the intention to annul and which brings that intention to the knowledge of the under-tenure-holder. The learned Judge has found against the story that definite notice was given by the purchaser to the under-tenure-holder. There remains the question of the collection of rent from the tenants. In my opinion it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to how far collection from tenants may be taken, not only to indicate the intention to annul, but also to establish the fact that that intention was brought to the knowledge of the under-tenure holder. Collection from so large a majority of the tenants as to amount to obtaining possession of the estate would probably be sufficient to indicate the intention to annul to the under-tenure-holder. But other considerations might come in, e.g., whether the number of tenants was large or small, and whether collections were made openly or secretly. It is needless to multiply examples. It is sufficient to say that two things must be established: (1) a definite intention to annul, (2) an indication of that intention to the under-tenure-holder.

As the learned Judge has dealt with this part of the case apparently with the idea that a definite notice was necessary, I agree in the proposed order of remand.

As regards the remaining question whether the under-tenure was protected under clause 4 of section 37, Act XI of 1859, it is clear that in so far as protection is claimed on the ground that the land is garden land, the claim must fail. It is apparently now a mill basti, but the learned Judge held it was protected because it was part of a larger area on which a garden was once made. Now the 4th clause of section 37 clearly contemplates improvements or works of a permanent character. These are protected, irrespective of whether the lease was or was not given for the purpose of the work in question.

But to afford protection the work must still be in existence or the land be used for the purpose of the work. The wording of the clause is "leases of land whereon..... gardens have been made." The perfect tense denotes a present state. If the garden has ceased to exist, the fact that there was once a garden on the land will not protect it.

Whether the land would be protected as part of a mill basti would depend on a variety of circumstances. Land on which there are merely temporary huts is not of course on that account protected, but if the basti land is covered by the lease of land on which the mill stands, or if the basti is an integral part of the mill and exists only for the purposes of the mill, it is possible that it might be protected. It is not, however, necessary to pursue this point further as protection has not been sought on this ground.

Appeals allowed; Cases remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—Compromise decree—Compromise effected by unauthorised person—Decree, whether ex parte and can be set aside as such.

A decree based on a compromise cannot be treated as an ex parte decree and set aside as such simply because one of the parties was not authorised to compromise.

Revision, under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, in the matter of Miscellaneous Case No. 53 of 1913 of the Second Court of the Sadar Munsif, Mymensingh.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The facts underlying this Rule are these: The petitioner sued the opposite party for rent. The suit was decreed in accordance with a petition of compromise signed apparently by both parties and their Pleaders. After the lapse of some two years, the opposite party applied to the Court for restoration of the suit, on the ground that he had not authorised the compromise and that the decree obtained against him was, in effect, an ex parte decree. The Court below allowed the application apparently under Order IX, rule 13, and this Rule was issued on the opposite party to show cause why the order should not be set aside on the ground that the Court below had no jurisdiction to make it under the rule quoted above.

No cause has been shown and the Rule is made absolute. We make no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), ss. 223, 228—Consolidated rate first charge on property—Mortgage and charge, distinction between—Purchaser for value without notice—Purchaser under involuntary alienation—Inquiry.

Section 223 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, deals with the question of the personal liability (liability in personam) of the purchaser of the premises for arrears unsatisfied when the title vested in him. Section 228 deals with the question of the liability of the premises (liability in rem) for the rates due thereon. Section 228 is perfectly general in its terms and makes the consolidated rate, as it accrues due from time to time, a first charge on the property (subject to arrears of land revenue). The objects of the two sections are radically distinct and section 228 cannot be controlled by section 223.

A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. A charge only secures payment of money out of that property. The distinction becomes important in the determination of the question whether the property can be followed in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

Where only a charge has been created by express words of the Statute, the charge cannot be enforced against the property in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

A defendant to avail himself of the defence ought to plead in his written statement that he is a purchaser for value without notice, and the onus of proving it lies on him.

A purchaser with notice may shelter himself under the title of the person from whom he purchased if the latter could successfully raise the defence of want of notice.

To a purchaser acquiring title under an involuntary alienation, constructive notice cannot be imputed to the same extent as to a purchaser at a private sale. A purchaser without notice from a person who had notice is protected.

Where a purchaser should, and could, have ascertained before his purchase the true state of affairs as to the charge upon the property purchased by him, he is in the same position as if he had made such inquiry and the purchasers from him are in no higher position, if they could have by inquiry, before they acquired title, ascertained the fact.

AKSHOY KUMAR v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Debendra Chandra Mullick, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by four of the defendants in a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. The land and buildings in suit lie within the jurisdiction of the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta and were originally owned by Saudamini Dasi. On the 11th September 1897 she executed a mortgage of this property by way of conditional sale. On the 13th January 1903 her right, title and interest were sold in execution of a decree for money against her and were purchased by Hari Charan Ojha, the first defendant to this suit. In 1904 the mortgagee, Bankubihari Ghose, sued to enforce his security, obtained the usual foreclosure decree, and ultimately, when the decree was made absolute, became full owner of the property. On the 19th February 1907 Bankubihari Ghose transferred the property to the four persons who are defendants other than the first defendant to this suit. On the 20th August 1908 the Corporation of Calcutta commenced this action against the five defendants to enforce a charge on the property in their hands in respect of arrears of consolidated rates. These arrears had accrued due during the three years from the 1st April 1903 to the 31st March 1906. The first defendant resisted the claim on the ground that she was not the owner in possession of the property and that no personal decree could be made against her. The remaining four defendants contended that there was no statutory charge enforceable against the property in their hands, and that as the arrears had accrued due more than one year before they became owners of the property, no personal decree could be made against them. The Courts below have dismissed the suit against the first defendant as also the claim for a personal decree against the other defendants. But they have made a decree which entitles the Corporation to realize the arrears by sale of the land and buildings, if the decretal amount is not paid within thirty days of the decree. On the present appeal, which has been preferred by the defendants other than the first, two points require consideration, namely, first, whether an arrear of consolidated rate is a charge on the land and buildings in respect of which it has accrued due and, secondly, if there is such a charge, whether it can be enforced against the property in the hands of the present appellants.

The answer to the first question, namely, whether an arrear of consolidated rate is a charge on the land and buildings in respect of which it has accrued due, must depend upon the true construction of the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899. For this purpose, reference may briefly be made to the relevant sections. The fourth part of the Calcutta Municipal Act deals with the subject of taxation, and comprises Chapters XII to XIX which include sections 147 to 235. Chapter XII treats of rates. Section 147 specifies four different classes of rates, which the Corporation is authorised to impose upon buildings and lands within its jurisdiction. Section 149 lays down that these rates are to be levied as one consolidated rate. Section 171 makes the consolidated rate payable in equal halves by the owner and the occupier. Sections 178 and 186 specify the circumstances under which the entire consolidated rate may be levied from the owner or from the occupier. We next come to Chapter XVIII which defines the special procedure for recovery of the consolidated rate. Section 212 lays down that the provisions of the Chapter shall be deemed to be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any powers conferred in other Chapters for the collection or recovery of the consolidated rate. Section 215 provides for one mode of realization of the rate, namely, by distress. Sub-section 3 of section 222 places a restriction upon the recovery, by distress against the occupier, of an arrear due from the owner; no arrear of the consolidated rate can be recovered by distress from any occupier or sub-tenant, if it has remained due for more than one year or if it is due on account of any period for which such occupier or sub-tenant was not in occupation of the premises on which the rate is assessed. Section 223 defines the extent of the liability of the purchaser of any building or land for his vendor's share of arrears of consolidated rate; the purchaser is liable for the amount due on account of the owner's share for any period not exceeding one year prior to his purchase. Section 227 authorises a suit for recovery of arrears of consolidated rate, in substitution for or addition to the summary remedy by distress and sale. Section 228 which makes the consolidated rate a first charge on the premises is in these terms: "The consolidated rate due in respect of any building or land shall subject to the prior payment of the land revenue, if any, due to the Government thereupon, be a first charge upon the said building or land and upon the moveable property, if any, found within or upon such building or land and belonging to the person liable for such rate." The language of this section is perfectly plain, and the intention of the Legislature to make the consolidated rate a first charge upon the premises is obvious. But an earnest endeavour has been made, on behalf of the appellant, to restrict its scope and operation by a reference to section 223. It has been argued that as the purchaser of the premises is liable for arrears of consolidated rate, which have accrued due before title vested in him, only to the extent of arrears for the year immediately prior to his purchase, section 228 should be so interpreted as to restrict the charge on the property in his hands only to arrears for which he is liable. This contention is clearly fallacious, as the two sections are concerned with two entirely distinct aspects of the matter. Section 223 deals with the question of the personal liability (liability in personam) of the purchaser of the premises for arrears unsatisfied when the title vested in him. Section 228 deals with the question of the liability of the premises (liability in rem) for the rates due thereon. Section 228 is perfectly general in its terms and makes the consolidated rate, as it accrues due from time to time, a first charge on the property (subject to arrears of land revenue). The objects of the two sections are radically distinct and section 228 cannot be controlled by section 223. We may add that no attempt has been made here to support the view unsuccessfully put forward in the Court below, that the expression "belonging to the person liable for such rate" in section 228 qualifies, not only the expression "moveable property," but also the expression "building or land." We hold accordingly that section 228 makes the consolidated rate, as it accrues due from time to time, a first charge on the premises.

The answer to the second question, namely, whether such charge can be enforced against the property in the hands of the appellants, must depend upon the nature and incidents of the charge. A charge is defined in section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act in the following terms:

"Where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property." The distinction between a mortgage and a charge, thus indicated in section 100, is of a fundamental character and was explained by this Court in the case of Roysuddi v. Kali Nath [Sub-nom Roysuddi v. Kritarthanath Mukherjee (1)]. There is this well-marked distinction between the two, that a mortgage does, whereas a charge does not involve a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property, Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (2), Tancred v. Delagoa Bay and East Africa Ry. Co. (3) following Burlinson v. Hall (4), where Day, J., observed as follows: "A charge differs altogether from a mortgage. By a charge the title is not transferred, but the person creating the charge merely says that out of a particular fund, he will discharge a particular debt."

To the same effect is the decision in Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal (5): "A mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property, a charge only secures payment of money out of that property." When liability has been imposed upon property by act of parties, a question of some nicety may arise, whether a mere charge has been created or whether the property itself has been hypothecated. The point is of great practical importance, because whether the one view is taken or the other has an important bearing upon the question, whether the property can be followed in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, Maina v. Bachahi (6). No such question, however, arises where, as here, only a charge has been created by express words of the Statute, and not a mortgage as in cases under section 13 of the Patni Regulation or section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. What then is the position? The consolidated rate, as it accrued due, became a first charge upon the property, but no interest in such property was transferred by operation of law to the Corporation. The owner continued to be the full owner of the property; the entire interest therein remained vested in him; when he transferred his right, title and interest in the property, the transferee acquired the whole interest therein. The owner was not in the position of a mortgagor, who has in him nothing beyond the equity of redemption and can consequently convey to the transferee no larger interest in the property. From this principle, the conclusion is inevitable that the charge cannot be enforced against the property in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice; in other words, while a mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property in the hands of a transferee from the mortgagor, a charge can be enforced against a transferee only if he has taken with notice of the charge [Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram (7), Koynuddi v. Kali Nath (1)]. The question consequently arises, whether the appellants are purchasers for value without notice. Here, it is worthy of note that they did not, in their written statement, plead that they were purchasers for value without notice. If they wished to avail themselves of this defence, they should have pleaded it. It was ruled in Attorney-General v. Biphosphated Guano Company (8) and Wilkes v. Spooner (9) that it is not a case of, first a defence that the defendant is a purchaser for value, and then a reply that he had notice, but of a single defence that the defendant is a purchaser for value without notice, the onus of proving which is on the defendant. But even if we assume that the defence, though not expressly taken in their written statement, is available to the defendants, they are in a position of difficulty from which there is no escape. The appellants are private purchasers of the property, and if they had inquired at the time of their purchase they would have discovered that the rates were in arrear; as a matter of fact they would be personally liable under section 223 for the arrears of the year immediately prior to the date of their purchase, and they admit that they have satisfied such arrears, though they do not disclose whether by inquiry they had ascertained the existence of the arrears before they made the purchase. But let us assume that they had notice of the arrears at the time of their purchase; still, as a purchaser with notice may shelter himself under the title of the person from whom he purchased if the latter could successfully raise this defence, we must examine the position of the vendor of the appellants, Sweet v. Southcote (10), M'Queen v. Farquhar (11), Barrow's case (12), Wilkes v. Spooner (9). Now as regards the position of Bankubehari Ghose, the mortgagee who acquired title by foreclosure, he was no doubt not in the position of a private purchaser, and if he had inquired of his mortgagor or the subsequent purchaser of the equity of redemption, neither of them would have been bound to give him any information such as a vendor is under an obligation to furnish under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act to an intending purchaser of his property. The mortgagee, therefore, was in reality a person who acquired title under an involuntary alienation by his mortgagor; to a person in this position constructive notice cannot be imputed to the same extent as to a purchaser at a private sale Radha Madhab v. Kalpataru Roy (13), Magu Brahma v. Bholi Dass (14). But, by inquiry from the Municipal Authorities, he could still have ascertained whether any arrears of consolidated rate were due. When he took the mortgage, he knew full well that if the rate was not duly paid, the arrears would become a first charge upon the property and would gain priority over his debt; and in our opinion before he became full owner by foreclosure, he should have ascertained the true state of affairs. He is consequently in the same position as if he had made such inquiry; and the purchasers from him are in no higher position, because although a purchaser without notice from a person who had notice is protected [Harrison v. Forth (15)], the appellants cannot claim such protection, as before they acquired title, they might have by inquiry from the Municipal Authorities ascertained the precise period for which the rates were in arrears. We hold accordingly that the appellants are not entitled to protection as purchasers for value without notice.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Where both the judgment-debtor and the attaching creditor dispute the title of a person to property, it is open to him to file a suit for a declaration of title in respect of the property. The case is like the ordinary one where a person whose title to property is disputed seeks to establish it. I am of opinion that the present case is governed by the decision in Dwarka Das v. Kameshwar Prasad (1) and Fisher v. Arunachella Chettiar (2). The difference between cases where the judgment-debtor is a party and cases where he is not is pointed out in Dhan Devi v. Zamurrad Begum (3) and Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (4). Phul Kumari v Ghanshyam Misra (5) was one where the plaintiff wanted an injunction against the decree-holder from executing the decree. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the value of the action must be the value of the plaint and held that the suit fell within Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

The test is, what is the value of the quantum of interest which the plaintiff wants to establish.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where the question for abatement of rent had been raised in a previous litigation between the parties and by mutual consent it was left open for consideration by the Court, which was quite competent to do so, the matter would not be res judicata in a subsequent suit for rent.

A claim for rent, as it accrues due from year to year, is a recurring claim, and to each of such recurring causes of action, the defendant is entitled to interpose his claim for abatement of rent.

The parties in a second appeal are not entitled to call in question the accuracy of findings of fact, even if such findings are based upon additional evidence taken for the first time by the Court of Appeal below on remand from the High Court.

A lessee is entitled to abatement of rent in proportion to the loss of lands through eviction by title paramount.

To justify the inference that the tenant would continue liable for the entire rent even after such loss, there must be a clear and unambiguous provision in the lease to that effect.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for arrears of rent. The claim is based on a mourasi mokarari lease granted to them on the 24th January 1881.

There are two substantial matters in controversy between the parties at this stage, namely, first, whether the defendants are entitled to abatement of rent on the ground of eviction from a portion of the lands of the tenancy by title paramount, and secondly, whether the plaintiff is liable to be restricted in the first instance to the sale of the defaulting tenure for realisation of his dues.

As regards the first of these matters, the primary Court came to the conclusion, upon the evidence, that the defendants had been dispossessed of a share of the lands of the tenancy by title paramount, and that they were consequently entitled to a reduction of rent. Upon appeal, the District Judge did not determine whether there had been dispossession, as alleged, but he held that as in 1907 the plaintiff had obtained a decree for rent at the full rate, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the question of abatement of rent, although the decree stated explicitly that the question of abatement was left open for consideration in a subsequent litigation. When the present appeal came to be heard in the first instance by Mr. Justice Sharfuddin, the learned Judge consequently remitted an issue to the District Judge to determine whether the defendants had been evicted as alleged. The finding upon the issue sent down has now been received and is in favour of the defendants. The District Judge has in substance found that in the share permanently let out by the plaintiff to the defendants, there was included a share of 19 gundas odd in which the plaintiff had only a temporary right, that he was consequently not competent to sublet his limited interest in such share to the defendants in perpetuity and that upon the expiry of his term, the superior landlord has since 1889 re-entered on the land to the extent of that share. Exception has been taken to this finding on behalf of the plaintiff, on the ground that it is opposed to the weight of the evidence on the record. In these circumstances three questions arise for consideration with regard to the first matter in controversy between the parties, namely, first, is the question of abatement of rent open for consideration in this suit; secondly, is it open to the plaintiff, at this hearing, to challenge the finding of the District Judge on the question of eviction by title paramount, on the ground that it is based on an erroneous estimate of the evidence on the record; and thirdly, are the defendants, upon a true construction of the lease, entitled to abatement in the contingency which has happened?

As regards the first point, there is no room for serious controversy that the question of the right of the defendants to claim abatement of rent is open for consideration in this suit. The question was, no doubt, raised in the previous litigation between the parties, but it was, by mutual consent, left open for consideration. The matter is consequently not res judicata; there has never been an adjudication upon the question whether the defendants are entitled to abatement of rent. The decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Robert Watson v. Collector of Rajshahye (1) does not support the contention that it was not competent to the Court to leave the matter open in the way it was done. The claim for rent, as it accrues due from year to year, is a recurring claim, and to each of such recurring causes of action, the defendants are entitled to interpose their claim for abatement of rent. The question, consequently, must be determined on the merits.

As regards the second point, on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, it has been contended that, as the finding upon the question of the alleged eviction was not embodied in the original judgment of the District Judge, he is in the same position as an appellant in an appeal from original decree and is entitled to invite this Court to examine the correctness of the finding with reference to the evidence on the record. There is clearly no foundation for this contention, which is, besides, contrary to the established practice of this Court. The District Judge should have determined the question of eviction. He erroneously omitted to do so; the result was that he was directed by this Court to record a finding on the point. His determination has now precisely the same effect as if it had been incorporated in his original judgment; and as it has not been disputed that, had the finding been so embodied, it would not have been open to the respondent to challenge its accuracy with reference to the evidence, he is clearly in no better position now. This view is supported by the decision in the case of Bal Kishen v. Jasoda Kuar (2), although there is a dictum to the contrary in Arthur Richard Hinde v. Ponnath Brayan (3). In this Court, indeed, it has been held that the parties in a second appeal are not entitled to call in question the accuracy of findings of fact, even if such findings are based upon additional evidence taken for the first time by the Court of Appeal below [Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (4) and Beni Pershad Kuari v. Nand Lal Sahu (5)]. We must consequently determine the rights and obligations of the parties on the basis that the defendants have been evicted from a share of the lands of their tenancy, as alleged by them and as found concurrently by both the Courts below.

As regards the third point, it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that, under the terms of the lease of the 24th January 1881, the defendants are not entitled to claim abatement of rent on the ground of eviction by title paramount. Our attention has been invited specially to two clauses of the lease. The first of these clauses provides that the lessees would, at their own expense, recover possession of all the lands of the tenancy, even though there might have been an encroachment thereon by neighbouring landlords, and that if, at any time subsequent to the grant of the lease, there was such an encroachment, they would similarly bring suits for ejectment. The clause then proceeds to lay down that the defendants would not be entitled to claim abatement of rent on the ground that they were not in possession of all the lands comprised in the lease. This plainly refers to what immediately precedes, and applies only to the case of eviction by a person without title. This clause, consequently, is not of any assistance to the plaintiff.

The second clause upon which reliance has been placed refers to the diminution of the lands of the tenancy by acquisition for the purpose of a Railway or for any other public purpose; it is stated that in such event, the compensation money would be distributed between the parties in the prescribed manner and that the tenants would not be entitled to claim abatement of rent on any other ground.

This clearly cannot be construed in the way suggested by the plaintiff-respondent, to cover the case of loss of lands through eviction by title paramount. If the contention of the respondent were to prevail, the position would follow, as was stated by Sir Barnes Peacock, Chief Judge, in the case of Gopaniund Jha v. Lalu Gobind Pershad (6) that the tenant would continue liable for the entire rent, even though it transpired that the landlord had no title to any portion of the lands of the tenancy. To justify an inference of this description, there must be a clear and unambiguous provision in the lease to that effect [Satyendra Nath v. Nilkantha (7)]. We are, therefore, of opinion that, upon the terms of the lease, the defendants are not precluded from claiming abatement of rent on the ground of eviction by title paramount. The fact of such eviction has been established on the evidence, and in view of the decisions in Gopanund Jha v. Lala Gobind Pershad(6), Horo Kishen Banerjee v. Joy Kishen Mookerjee (8), Brojonath Pal Chowdhury v. Heera Lal Pal (9) and Rung Lall Singh v. Roodur Pershad(10), which are based on the rule of English law that the rent is apportionable when the lessee ceases to have possession of part of the demised premises, because he is evicted from that part by a person lawfully claiming under title paramount [Co. Litt. 148*a* Walker's case (11), Smith v. Malings (12), Eybridge v. Meidon (13)], it cannot be disputed that the defendants are entitled to abatement of rent. We may add that it has been found by the Courts below that, during a period of years antecedent to the institution of the suit, whenever the rent has been amicably paid, the landlord has granted abatement to the tenants, as now claimed by them. This not only confirms the finding that there has been, as a matter of fact, an eviction by title paramount, but also supports the construction which we have placed on the contract between the parties. In so far, therefore, as the first matter is concerned, we must hold that the Court of first instance rightly allowed abatement of rent to the defendants.

With regard to the second matter, the Court of first instance held, upon a consideration of the contract between the parties, that the landlord was, in the first instance, limited to proceedings against the tenure for realisation of the judgment debt, and that it was only in the event of the failure to realise the whole sum by sale of the tenure, that he could proceed against the judgment-debtor personally. The lease has been read to us and we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge took a correct view of its legal effect. It has been faintly suggested, however, that this provision of the lease was ultra vires because contrary to the rule laid down in section 61 of Act VIII of 1869, B. C., which was in force when the lease was granted. In our opinion, section 61 has no application to the case, and the clause in question is operative between the parties.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored.

The appellants are entitled to their costs of two hearings in this Court, as also in the Court of the District Judge.

Appeal allowed.

Water, flow of—Right ancillary to property—Lands adjoining each other on different levels.

Where A owns land adjoining that of B on a higher level and the water falling on the land of A naturally flows on to the land of B, it is the duty of B to allow the water from A's land to pass on through his land, and then to dispose of it as B thinks best.

The question is not one of easement, but of a right ancillary to property.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 17th February 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Arrah, dated the 6th of June 1910.

Mr. C. R. Dass (with him Babu Surendra Nath Ghoshal), for the Appellants.

Babus Ramcharan Mozumdar and Raghunath Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs own some land on the south of that of the defendants on a higher level, and the water falling on the land of the plaintiffs naturally flows on to the land of the defendants. The defendants recently built a bund on their land so as to obstruct the water accumulated on the plaintiffs' land from flowing towards the north through the defendants' land. The plaintiffs allege that they are entitled to have the water on their land discharged through the defendants' land; but they do not claim it as an easement. They claim it as a right ancillary to their property which they have not parted with. This raises a question in a very simple form; namely, whether there is any such right. On the authorities placed before us, we are of opinion that there is; although the plaintiffs do not claim the right to discharge their water and do not in fact discharge their water on to the defendants' land by any definite channel. The duty of the defendants is to allow the water from the plaintiffs' land to pass on through their land. It is then open to them to dispose of it in the way they think best. The lower Courts have ordered the defendants to remove the bund which they have erected. It is not necessary in order to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim that this should be done, but it will be sufficient if the defendants make some arrangement by which the water coming on to their land from the plaintiffs' land may pass over their land in such a way as not to remain on the plaintiffs' land. So far the appeal is allowed.

A second point has been raised in connection with two maps, which it is said the Court below refused and which the defendants say ought to have been judicially noticed. On considering the nature of the case and the course followed and from what we understand the contents of the maps to be, we do not think that the defendants have made out any grounds for appeal on this ground. We accordingly allow the appeal only to the extent we have indicated above.

Under the circumstances of this case we make no order as to costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 297 OF 1913.

October 14, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar and Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

NAMAGIRI LAKSHMI AMMAL—DEFENDANT No. 3—APPELLANT

KO. SRINIVASA AIYANGAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Remission of debt to defeat creditors—Voidable—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Registered deed—Rescission or cancellation cannot be proved by oral agreement or unregistered document—Agreement to pay lesser amount in full discharge or fixing different period—Variation in terms—Endorsement on mortgage-deed, when admissible and when not.

Under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, it is not necessary that the transferor should reserve a benefit to himself, as gifts to a third party are as much voidable as other transfers. Though the section does not apply in terms, the principle on which it is based will apply to a creditor voluntarily remitting, with a view to defeat his creditors, the whole or a portion of a debt due to him.

Section 92, clause 4, of the Evidence Act precludes evidence of an oral agreement to rescind a registered contract.

Srinivasaswami Aiyangar v. Athmarama Aiyar, 2 Ind. Cas. 612; 32 M. 281; 19 M. L. J. 280; 5 M. L. T. 84; Iyetaly Surayya v. Nalamilli Venkanna, 9 Ind. Cas. 340; 9 M. L. T. 326, referred to.

Appanna Nayudu v. Ramanna, 23 M. 92; 9 M. L. J. 124; Trimbak Gangadhar Ranade v. Bhagwandas Mulchand, 23 B. 348; Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Krishnamma, 30 M. 231, 17 M. L. J. 80, distinguished.

Where it is sought to prove that though the parties provided in the registered-deed for performance in a particular way, e. g., by re-payment of the debt in a particular manner, an agreement whereby a lesser amount was agreed to be taken in full discharge or a different period was fixed, would be a variation of the terms and would fall within section 92.

A mortgage having been created by a registered document cannot be cancelled or rescinded either orally or by an unregistered endorsement on the mortgage-deed, reciting that the bond was cancelled and returned as the amount due was paid.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 491 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakkal, in the Original Suit No. 441 of 1910.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The 3rd defendant is the appellant. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are sisters, while the plaintiff is their brother and the 3rd defendant their niece. The plaintiff filed Original Suit No. 60 of 1900 against the 1st defendant and obtained a money decree, in execution of which he attached and purchased on the 11th August 1906 the mortgage-debt alleged to be due by the 2nd defendant to the 1st defendant on a deed of mortgage dated the 26th November 1890. Prior to his purchase, the 2nd defendant sold the mortgaged property to the 3rd defendant by a registered deed of sale dated the 20th June 1901; the deed of mortgage, with an endorsement that the amount due on it had been paid, was given to the purchaser. The suit out of which this second appeal arises was filed by the plaintiff as purchaser of the mortgage-debt for the recovery of the amount due on the ground that the mortgage was not discharged and that the sale to the 3rd defendant was a fraudulent transaction entered into with the object of defrauding him. The 3rd defendant pleaded inter alia that the sale to her was bona fide and for consideration and that the mortgage was discharged by payments made by the 2nd defendant to the 1st defendant out of moneys paid by the 3rd defendant.

The District Munsif disbelieved the evidence of discharge and held that the amount due on the mortgage was not paid. On appeal the District Judge held that it was proved to the extent of Rs. 215, and modified the decree of the District Munsif. The 3rd defendant files this second appeal against that part of the decree as in favour of the plaintiff and the plaintiff has filed a memorandum of objections against that part of the decree which modified the decree of the District Munsif.

The only issue raised on this part of the case was issue No. 3 which runs as follows:—'Was the plaint debt paid up as alleged by the 3rd defendant?" Treating the case as one of discharge, pure and simple, it is difficult to see how we can in second appeal disturb the findings of fact.

It is argued by the appellant's Vakil that as it was open to the mortgagee to remit the whole or any part of the mortgage debt, as the mortgagor and mortgagee agreed to treat the mortgage as discharged long prior to the attachment and purchase by the plaintiff and as the property was sold free from all encumbrances to the 3rd defendant, it was not open to the plaintiff to treat the mortgage as subsisting. It is also argued that section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application as there is no transfer of any immoveable property, but only the relinquishment of a debt without any benefit having been reserved for the transferor.

The endorsement, Exhibit I, on the deed of mortgage (Exhibit A) runs as follows: "1901 May 26, Towards principal and interest on this bond the amount received previously in several instalments is Rs. 870. The amount received in cash to-day is Rs. 215. Total Rs. 1,085. As this sum of Rs. 1,085 has been paid, this bond has been cancelled and returned". The mortgage, therefore, was alleged to have been discharged by payments made from time to time amounting to Rs. 870 and a payment of Rs. 215 made on the date of the endorsement. Both Courts have found that Rs. 870 was not paid and having regard to the relationship between the defendants and the fact that the plaintiff had obtained a money decree against the 1st defendant shortly before the endorsement and sale to the 3rd defendant, there can be no little doubt that the object of the defendants was to prevent the plaintiff from attaching the mortgage debt. The effect of a creditor voluntarily remitting the whole or a portion of a debt will be to put it out of the reach of his creditor just as much as a gift of the debt to a third person. In either case there is no consideration for the transaction and though section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act will not apply in terms, the principle on which it is based will apply. It is not necessary under section 53 that the transferor should reserve a benefit to himself, as gifts to to a third party are as much voidable as other transfers. Supposing that the only property a person has is a large sum due to him from a relation of his and that he to defeat his creditors, remits the debt, is there any principle on which the case can be distinguished from one where he makes a gift of the debt to a third person? We think not. No authority has been cited for such a distinction being drawn, and it would open a wide door to fraud if the remission of a debt is placed on a different footing from a transfer.

Even assuming that the parties agreed to receive Rs. 215 in full settlement of the mortgage-debt and that the transaction was bona fide, the mortgage having been created by a registered document, it cannot be cancelled or rescinded either orally or by an unregistered document. Exhibit I, the endorsement on the mortgage bond, was cancelled and returned as the amount due was paid. It, therefore, falls under section 17, clause (n), of the Registration Act. Hari Narain Banerjee v. Shama Sundari Dasi(1) and Uppalakandi Kunhi Kutti v. Kunnam Mithal Kottaprath (2) were cases where the endorsement of receipt did not purport to extinguish the mortgage. Exhibit I cannot, therefore, be received in evidence to prove discharge. Nor is oral evidence admissible to show cancellation. In Srinivasaswami Aiyangar v. Athmarama Aiyar (3) it was held that section 92, clause 4, of the Evidence Act precludes evidence of an oral agreement to rescind a registered contract. This case was followed in Iyotaly Surayya v. Nalamilli Venkanna (4). It has, no doubt, been held in Appamma Nayuralu v. Rumanna (5) that an instrument which purports to extinguish a mortgage might even if unregistered, be received in evidence of payment and that oral evidence can be admitted in proof of payment, even if the receipt was inadmissible for want of registration. A similar view was also taken in Trimbak Gangadhar Ranade v. Bhagwandas Mulchand (6), Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kishnamma (7). In these cases the question was one of discharge by payment. No terms were sought to be varied, but it was sought to prove that the debt was extinguished by payment, that is, that the contract was fulfilled in the manner specified in the registered deed of mortgage. Where however it is sought to prove that though the parties provided in the registered mortgage for performance in a particular way, e. g., by repayment of the debt in a particular manner, an agreement whereby a lesser amount was agreed to be taken in full discharge or a different period was fixed, would be a variation of the terms and would fall within section 92.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The memorandum of objections is also dismissed with costs, as it does not raise any question of law.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant—Under-raiyati holding, not transferable—Tenure, when can be transferred—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 49, applicability of—Relinquishment or abandonment—Transfer of the whole holding—Landlord, right of, to eject.

An under-raiyati holding is not transferable. Where a tenure or holding, apart from the Transfer of Property Act, is not transferable, it cannot become so unless it is expressly made so by some other Statute.

Hira Mota Dasayya v. Annoda Prosad Ghosh, 7 C. L. J. 553 at p. 555, referred to.

Where a transfer of the whole holding has been made, the landlord is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding and a relinquishment of the whole holding without any proof of payment of rent or any arrangement made to pay the rent is a relinquishment in fact, which would entitle the landlord to eject the tenant. Section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to such a case.

What is relinquishment or abandonment depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 22nd of April 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, first Court, at Sudharam, dated the 30th of April 1912.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for declaration of her raiyati right in the land in suit and khas possession thereof. It appears that the plaintiff became 16-annas tenant of an occupancy holding by purchase from her husband in the year 1314 and that she then found that the under-raiyat on the land, who is defendant No. 2, had sold the under-raiyati to defendant No. 1 eight years before, in 1306.

It is admitted that the lease was only for a term and it appears that now that lease must have expired, since more than nine years have elapsed from the time when it was sold to defendant No. 1. Be that as it may, it is conceded that the learned Judge's finding that all lease-hold property is saleable and that there is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act to prevent the sale of an under-raiyati is not a correct view of the law. That is a rule of English Law and it is incorporated in the Transfer of Property Act. But the Transfer of Property Act by section 117 clearly excludes all agricultural lands from that rule, and the true rule is as was laid down by the late Sir Francis Maclean in the case of Hira Moti Dasayya v. Annoda Prosad Ghosh (1), that where a tenure or holding apart from the Transfer of Property Act is not transferable, it cannot become so unless it is expressly made so by some other Statute. The learned Chief Justice pointed out, if it had been intended to make holdings transferable which were before non-transferable we might have expected the Legislature in framing the Bengal Tenancy Act to have said so. It was clearly laid down in 1878 by Chief Justice Garth and Jackson, J.,* that jumma rights of a kurpha under-tenant are not transferable without the consent of the raiyat landlord. Mr. Justice Jackson goes so far as to say, "I would only add that I never heard before that the question as to the possiblity of selling a kurpha tenant's right could be raised, and it appears to me to be contrary to the nature of things that such a thing could happen." The Tenancy Act has not made any change in the law as laid down there, and it must be held as a matter of law, contrary to what has been said by the learned Judge in the Court below, that an under-raiyati is not transferable.

That being so and the plaintiff being the landlord of the entire 16 annas and the defendant having transferred the whole holding to defendant No. 1, the case falls within the second heading of the recent Full Bench ruling. Where the transfer of the whole holding has been made, the landlord is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding, and such a relinquishment as the relinquishment of the whole 16 annas without any proof of payment of rent or any arrangement made to pay the rent is certainly a relinquishment in fact which would entitle the plaintiff to eject the defendant.

It is sought to be argued that an under-raiyat cannot be ejected except under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But the answer to that is that the defendant No. 2 has by his own acts ceased to be an under-raiyat, and defendant No. 1 has never obtained the status of an under-raiyat; therefore, section 49 does not apply. It has further been contended that every transfer does not operate as an abandonment or as forfeiture. But the transfer, which is found as a fact by the Munsif in the first Court and has not been set aside by the Judge in this case, is certainly such a transfer as would in our opinion constitute a complete abandonment in fact, and what is relinquishment or abandonment has been held by the Full Bench to depend on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case. The substantial effect of what has been done in this case appears to be that the recent purchase has deprived the plaintiff of the tenant to whom alone she could look for her rent and to whom alone she could look for the proper cultivation of her holding; and we do not know who the defendant No. 1 may be or whether he is in any way a proper person to cultivate her land. It does not appear that any rent has been paid since the year 1306, at any rate that it has been paid to the plaintiff.

The appeal must, therefore, be decreed. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the Munsif restored, with costs in all Courts to the plaintiff.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 49—Under-raiyat—Suit for rent by raiyat dismissed—Res judicata as to title—Under-raiyat claiming to hold directly under landlord and paying rent to plaintiff as gomastah—Notice to quit necessary.

The plaintiff, a gomastah of the landlord of a village obtained certain lands from the landlord and let them out to the defendant. In a previous rent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, the defendant had pleaded that he had always paid his rent to the plaintiff for the benefit of the landlord and that the plaintiff was nothing more than a gomastah, and he was a raiyat holding directly under the landlord. The rent suit was decided in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiff then sued that in establishment of his title as raiyat he could eject the defendant without notice as a trespasser.

Held, that the decision in the rent suit did not operate as res judicata on the question of title of the plaintiff, that the defendant could not be evicted without notice to quit as required by section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit in which the plaintiff sued for khas possession of some land mentioned in schedule II of his plaint.

It appears that the plaintiff was the gomastah of the landlord of the village and that he obtained certain lands from the landlord and let them out to the defendant. In a previous rent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, the defendant pleaded that he always paid his rent to the plaintiff for the benefit of the landlord and that the plaintiff was nothing more than a gomastah, and he was a raiyat holding directly under the landlord. That rent suit was decided in his favour, and the plaintiff now sues that in establishment of his title as raiyat he can eject the defendant without notice as trespasser.

The first point that was taken by the defendant was that the case is barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had been unable to prove that he was in actual possession within twelve years. The first Court found that there was such limitation. The lower Appellate Court has clearly found that within four or five years the plaintiff was in possession as raiyat of the land and is the defendant's landlord, and, therefore, there was no limitation. This decision, we think, cannot be impugned.

The next question raised was the question of res judicata. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that the decision in the rent suit operated as res judicata, so as to bar the plaintiff from putting forward his title as superior landlord to the defendant. We think that the case of Sahadeb Dhali v. Ram Rudra Haldar (1) entirely disposes of this contention.

But then there comes the third question, whether the plaintiff can eject the defendant without notice. It seems to us that as regards this question he is on the horns of a dilemma. If he pleads denial of his title in the rent suit and the finding against him in that suit did not operate as res judicata, then he has to allege, as he does allege in his plaint, that the defendant is still his under-raiyat and that he is still a raiyat. Now if he alleges that, then it seems on the authority of the rulings of this Court [we may refer to the case cited by the learned Subordinate Judge, Dhora Kairi v. Ram Jewan Kairi Mahton (2)] that where it is found by the lower Appellate Court that the defendant was an under-raiyat of the plaintiff, he could not be evicted from his holding except after notice to quit, and this applies to all cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act applies. We are referred as against this decision to a decision in Fayaj Dhali v. Aftabuddin Sirdar (3) and to a case reported as Ekab- bar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah (4), where the case of Dhora Kairi v. Ram Jewan Kairi Mahton (2), to which we have just referred, is discussed and distinguished. We may say that in the same way as Dhora Kairi's case (2) is distinguished by the learned Chief Justice from the case that was before him, so we can distinguish Ekabbar's case (4). This case appears to us to fall within the rule in Dhora Kairi's case (2), and that rule has never been doubted. In the case in Ekabbar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah (4), there was no question of under-raiyati or of notice, and it appears to us that if the plaintiff were to carry his plea of res judicata so far as to exclude the defendant's right to any notice, then he would be in grave jeopardy of himself falling within the law of res judicata, which we have just now held does not apply.

It, therefore, appears to us consonant with justice and with the true interpretation of law to hold that the plaintiff, having in this case pleaded that the defendant was an under-raiyat and the defendant not having denied tenancy in the land but having stated that he held it on a higher basis, he still remains on the finding of the lower Courts an under-raiyat and can only be ejected upon notice. For these reasons we decree the appeal and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed without prejudice to any action that he may take under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

We make no order as to costs, as the plaintiff has lost his rent for a long time.

Appeal allowed.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Mortgagor purchasing benami in revenue sale—Subsequent mortgage sale, validity of—Right of bona fide lessee.

The plaintiff mortgagee brought a suit on a mortgage and it was dismissed by the first Court and while an appeal against that dismissal order was pending, the mortgagor let the revenue of the mortgaged land fall into arrears and had it brought to sale by the Revenue Department for the recovery of such arrears and purchased the property himself in the name of the 2nd defendant. The plaintiff succeeded in appeal and the property was sold and purchased by him but he failed to get actual possession as the judgment-debtor had let the lands to the first defendant. The plaintiffs then sued for possession of the land and the crops standing on it:

Held, that the sale under the mortgage decree was valid and conveyed the full title to the plaintiff, as the 2nd defendant was only the benamidar of the plaintiff's judgment-debtor, who was the owner notwithstanding the revenue sale, and that the first defendant who was a bona fide lessee of the properties from the 2nd defendant was entitled to the crops raised during the continuance of the lease, and that the auction-purchaser could only get the rent during the remaining portion of the tenancy.

Section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act has no application in a case where the mortgagor purchases the property at a revenue sale benami in another person's name and the revenue sale need not be set aside by a mortgagee suing on a mortgage.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 194 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Kavali, in Original Suit No. 449 of 1910, and petitions, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the District Court of Nellore, in Appeals Suits Nos. 187 and 186 of 1911 respectively, against those of the Court of the District Munsif of Kavali, in Original Suits Nos. 325 and 329 of 1910 respectively.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. N. Sitaram and B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They had brought a suit, Original Suit No. 108 of 1896, to obtain a mortgage decree against one K. Subbayya. That suit was ultimately dismissed by the first Court about the beginning of 1906. The plaintiff appealed against the dismissal of that suit to the District Court in Appeal Suit No. 171 of 1906 on the file of the District Court of Nellore. While that appeal was pending, the heirs of the defendant Subbayya let the revenue of the mortgaged lands fall into arrears, had it brought to sale by the Revenue Department for the recovery of such arrears and purchased the lands themselves in such revenue sale in December 1906 in the name of the 2nd defendant. The plaintiff succeeded in his Appeal Suit No. 171 of 1906 in obtaining a decree for sale of these properties on the 1st November 1907 (See Exhibit B). He brought the properties to sale in pursuance of that mortgage-decree, as the properties of Subbaya's heirs who are his judgment-debtors, and purchased them himself in the year 1909 (Exhibit S.) He seems to have also obtained a sort of possession through Court at the end of October 1909, but he was unable to get actual possession as the first defendant had been let into the lands as lessee by the judgment-debtors, who made the first defendant execute the muchilika (Exhibit VIII) in July 1909 to their creature, the 2nd defendant, for a term of three years.

These are the facts found by the lower Appellate Court as we understand its judgment. The lower Appellate Court on these facts decreed the plaintiffs' claim for possession of the lands as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but dismissed the plaintiffs' claim for the crops which stood on the land on the date of delivery through Court to the plaintiffs and which the 1st defendant had bona fide raised as lessee of the land. The plaintiffs' appeal relates only to the disallowance of the value of the said crops which the mediator, the 3rd defendant, gave up to the lessee, the 1st defendant. The reason given by the lower Court for disallowing the value of the said crops was that the question was res judicata by the decree in Original Suit No. 325 of 1910, which was heard with Original Suit No. 449 of 1910 out of which this second appeal has arisen. The learned District Judge is, however, mistaken in holding that the plaintiffs did not appeal against the decree in Original Suit No. 325 of 1910 on this question of the 1st defendant's liabilty to give the plaintiffs the value of the crops. Further even if they did not so appeal, the Full Bench case in Panchanadha Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (1) shows that such failure to appeal could not make the decision on that question res judicata as the same question was raised in the appeal in the other suit filed contemporaneously.

We however think that, on the finding that the 1st defendant was a bona fide lessee who raised the crops during the continuance of a lease which was not affected by the plaintiff's mortgage-decree for sale, the plaintiff's claim for the crops raised by the 1st defendant was rightly rejected. Order XXI, rule 96, Civil Procedure Code, recognises the right of a tenant who is not affected by a decree to occupy the land till his tenancy is over, if the period of the tenancy was the usual or a reasonable term. The crops raised during his tenancy of course belong to him. The purchaser at the Court sale can only get the rent during the remaining portion of the tenancy. The second appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with the 1st defendant's costs.

The 2nd defendant's legal representatives (respondents Nos. 3 to 5) have filed a memorandum of objections, contending that plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation and ought to have been dismissed in its entirety as the plaintiffs did not bring their suit within six months of the revenue auction sale at which the 2nd defendant purchased the property. They rely on section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act and on the cases reported in Venkata v. Chengalu (2), Narayana Nambudri v. Damodaran Nambudri (3) and Raman Naidu v. Bhassoori Sanyasi (4).

Though the plaintiffs state in paragraph 12 of the plaint that if the Court is of opinion that the plaintiffs should have the revenue sale set aside the cancellation of that revenue sale is also prayed for among the reliefs in this suit, they state in the previous sentence that there is no necessity for their having the revenue sale set aside. On the facts found, we hold that it is not necessary to have the revenue sale set aside because it has been decided by the lower Courts that the 2nd defendant was only the benamidar of the plaintiffs' judgment-debtors; the latter continued to be the owners notwithstanding the revenue sale certificate issued in 2nd defendant's name, and the sale under the mortgage decree passed against them transferred the title to the plaintiffs. The memorandum of objections is, therefore, dismissed with plaintiffs' costs. The connected Civil Revision Petitions No. 899 and 1027 of 1912 follow the result of the second appeal and are dismissed with the respondents' costs.

Will—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 46—Testamentary capacity, meaning of—Burden of proof—Opinions of witnesses as to competency, value of—Extraordinary terms—Requisites of valid Will—Testator of sound mind at time of giving instructions for Will—Subsequent execution, whether valid—Facts, finding of, by trial Court—Appellate Court, power of, to disturb.

It is the duty of the propounders of a Will to show that the testator had testamentary capacity, i. e., capacity to comprehend the nature and effect of his act; to discharge the burden of proof, it must be shown that he was able to dispose of his property with understanding and reason, that he was able to realise his position, to appreciate his property and to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he decided to benefit.

The opinions of witnesses as to competency of a testator are entitled to little regard, unless supported by good reasons founded on facts which warrant them.

Mere ability to sign one's name does not necessarily imply the possession of the full mental powers requisite for a valid disposition of property. Nor is it sufficient to show that the testator was conscious when he executed the instrument.

A Court will not reject a Will merely because its terms appear extraordinary, against clear evidence of due execution by a competent testator. But where the terms are unusual and the evidence of testamentary capacity doubtful, the vigilance of the Court will be roused and, before pronouncing for the Will, the Court will require to be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the testator was fully cognisant of its contents and in a condition to exercise and did exercise thought, judgment and reflection respecting the act he was doing.

When a testator is of sound mind when he gives instructions for a Will but at the time of signature accepts the instrument drawn in pursuance thereof, even though not able to follow its provisions then, he must be deemed to be of sound mind when it is executed.

The proof eminently lies on him who sets up a Will, and it is more fatal to him than to his adversary if he leaves difficulties entirely without explanations.

Where, therefore, a Will was executed by a man about two hours before his death, when his condition was critical and when he was restless with pain, and there was no information whatsoever either as to instructions, if any, given by him, or the time when and the person to whom the directions were given and there was no evidence to show that the Will, as prepared, was, before execution read over to and approved by him;

Held, (1) that the propounders had failed to establish that the testator had sound and disposing mind when he affixed his signature to the Will;

(2) that the propounders could not be given any further opportunity of filling up the deficiencies in the proof, offered by them as there was a real danger of manufacture and manipulation of evidence if witnesses were allowed to speak to events which happened many years ago.

The principle that "it is always difficult for Judges who have not seen and heard the witnesses to refuse to adopt the conclusion of fact of those who have," is not of universal application. Where the case is one not so much of estimate of credibility of witnesses who have been believed by the trial Court, as of the effect of their statements, on the assumption that they have spoken the truth, the Appellate Court will refuse to adopt the conclusion of the trial Court if good grounds are shown.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Alipur, dated the 2nd January 1913.

Babu Susil Madhab Mullick, for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra, Babus Pramatha Nath Ganguli and Probodh Chandra Dutta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the grant of Letters of Administration, with a copy of the Will annexed, to the estate of one Haralal Banerjee, who died on the 22nd August 1895. Haralal Banerjee was the eldest of three brothers, of whom the second was Kaliprasanna Banerjee and the youngest was Sarat Chandra Banerjee. In 1890 a suit for partition had been brought by the youngest brother, and when Haralal died, the brothers had apparently ceased to be members of a joint family. Haralal left a widow, Nistarini (who is described as his second wife), a daughter by her named Faring, alias Sukamari, and four other daughters by his first wife, Gangamani, who had predeceased him, namely, Apsari, Puti alias Sarojini, Baraburi alias Promila and Chotaburi alias Soroshbala. At the time when Haralal died, his wife Nistarini was in the family way and was on the 15th November 1895 delivered of a posthumous son, subsequently named Susil Kumar Banerjee. On the 19th February 1912, more than sixteen years after the death of Haralal, his three daughters by the first wife (other than Promila who had died meanwhile) applied for Letters of Administration to his estate with copy annexed of a Will alleged to have been executed by him on the day of his death. The application was opposed by the infant son of Haralal through his mother, on the ground that the alleged Will was not genuine and that his father had no testamentary capacity at the time when he is said to have executed the instrument. The District Judge has pronounced in favour of the Will and has directed Letters of Administration to issue to the three surviving daughters by the first wife, each of whom is a legatee under the Will. On the present appeal, preferred by the infant through his mother, it has been argued that the genuineness of the Will has not been established, and that the propounders have failed to discharge the burden which lay upon them to prove that the deceased had testamentary capacity at the time of the alleged execution of the Will. Before we examine the evidence, it is desirable to set out briefly the provisions of the Will.

The Will recites that the executant had been suddenly attacked with illness, that his body had become very weak and that he was in apprehension of death. The Will then states that the testator had no male issue, that he accordingly thought it advisable to make some arrangement, and that to carry out his directions, he appointed his brothers Kaliprasanna and Sarat Chandra as the executors. Then follow two schedules: in the first, the debts and assets are stated; in the second, various legacies are specified. In the first schedule, in the enumeration of the assets, a sum of Rs. 5,525 is mentioned as money for purchase of a house; this, it has been said, is an erroneous statement, as a house had been purchased precisely for that sum on the 12th November 1893 (Exhibit B). In the second schedule, there is a legacy of Rs. 2,000 for the eldest daughter Apsari, Rs. 1,500 for her daughter, Rs. 1,000 each for Puti, Baraburi and Chotaburi, Rs. 2,000 for the marriage of Faring (the daughter by the second wife) and an additional sum of Rs. 1,000 for her. There is also a direction to pay Rs. 100 to one Nanigopal Mookerjee, possibly the sister's son of the testator. There is finally a direction that the balance do belong to his wife Nistarini. The Will purports, on the face of it, to bear the signatures of two attesting witnesses, Satya Charan Mookerjee and Chandra Kumar Bannerjee, both residents of the locality where the testator resided, the former a medical practitioner, the latter a Government pensioner.

Before we determine whether the alleged testator was of sound mind, within the meaning of section 46 of the Indian Succession Act, we must consider how far the case for the petitioner is affected by the fact that there has been a delay of many years before the Will has been actually produced in Court. The District Judge has held that satisfactory explanation has been offered in this respect and that the mere fact of delay does not tend to throw doubt upon the genuineness of the Will. In concurrence with the District Judge we hold that, after the death of Haralal, the Will was in the custody of his youngest brother, Sarat Chandra, and that after the death of the latter, the Will was found amongst his papers by his son Krishnahari, who, after some delay, made it over to Apsari, the eldest daughter of the testator. The evidence shows that Krishnahari found the Will among the papers of his father in April 1911, but did not make it over to Apsari till November 1911; as he explains, he took time to consider whether he should make over the Will which had been kept by his father in the iron safe so long. It is needless to consider whether this is an absolutely true explanation of his conduct; it is not altogether improbable that he decided to deliver the Will to Apsari, only after his mother had been sued by the infant son of Haralal for recovery of money due on a promissory note executed by his father. It is only necessary to observe that it is proved that Apsari did not obtain possession of the Will till within three months of the date when she, along with her two sisters, applied for Letters of Administration. In these circumstances, we hold that the delay in the production of the Will has been sufficiently explained.

Two points now require consideration, namely, first, whether what purport to be the signatures of the testator on the Will were made by his hand, and, secondly, whether he had at the time sound mind within the meaning of section 46 of the Indian Succession Act. As regards the first question, we are inclined to adopt the view that the signatures are genuine. No good reason has been assigned to discredit, in this respect, the testimony of the two witnesses who have deposed that the testator signed the document. We are fortified in this opinion by a comparison of the signatures in the Will with the admitted signatures of the testator. There is a striking resemblance between the two sets of signatures, but not that absolute identity which, in many instances, may furnish indications of deliberate imitation by the careful forgerer. The first signature, however, on the face of it, gives ample indication that it had been written by a man in a very feeble state of health. The second signature consists of initials and ends in a scrawl, as if the effort to make the first signature had proved too much for the strength of the executant. We now proceed to consider the second question, namely, that of testamentary capacity, on the assumption that the Will was signed by Haralal.

It appears from the evidence on both sides that Haralal had been ill for about ten or twelve days before he died. It is also clear that he had an attack of fever, but the medical witness for the petitioners adds that he had also dysentery. He was, during the first week of his illness, under the treatment of a Kabiraj. Three days before his death, Satya Charan Mookerjee, an Allopathic Medical Practitioner, was called in. He treated him for two days. On the third day, he called in, for purposes of consultation, Dr. Rajendranath Mallik. This was on the day that Haralal died. The evidence on both sides shows that Dr. Mallik came to see the patient in the afternoon between 5 and 6; according to Satya Charan, Dr. Mallik attended also in the morning. It further appears, from the evidence on the side of the objector, that on the same day, at about 2 P.M., Manimohan Mookerjee, father-in-law of Haralal, called in another physician, Dr. Mohendranath Ray. Satya Charan admits that he himself came to see the patient twice on that day, once in the morning and a second time in the afternoon. Haralal died early in the evening. The evidence indicates the time as between 7 and 8 o'clock, possibly a little later. We have, therefore, the fact that the physicians attended on the dying man five times in the course of the day, namely, Satya Charan twice, Dr. Mallik twice and Dr. Ray once. The Will is said to have been executed by Haralal in the afternoon between 5 and 6 P.M., i.e., about two hours before his death. The frequent visits of the different physicians indicate plainly that the condition of the patient was grave, and there are other circumstances which unmistakably indicate that the illness had taken a serious turn at least two or three days before his death. We have, first, the fact that the mode of treatment was changed, and Satya Charan, in whose charge the patient was placed, found it necessary to call in a consulting physician on the third day after he had taken him in hand. We have, in the second place, the fact that messengers were sent to bring in the daughters of Haralal. Nanigopal, his nephew, went away to Jessore on the night of the 20th August and returned with Apsari on the morning of the 22nd August, the day on which Haralal died. The other daughters arrived late in the same evening after Haralal had passed away. All these circumstances incontestably show that the illness of Haralal had caused serious anxiety to his relations at least three days before his death and that, on the day of his death, his condition was such as to necessitate the attendance of three physicians on five occasions at his bedside. The Court must, consequently, scrutinize with care and caution the evidence as to his testamentary capacity at the time when he is said to have executed the Will.

It is unfortunate that of the three medical attendants, who saw the patient on that date, Dr. Mallik and Dr. Ray are both dead, and we are left with the testimony of the sole survivor, of whom it is no disparagement to say that he does not hold the diploma of any 'recognised' medical institution. It is a matter for legitimate comment that no attempt was made on behalf of the petitioners to obtain from the witness detailed information as to the nature of the illness and the condition of the patient. Satya Charan made the somewhat bald statement that Haralal died of fever and dysentery and was in full possession of his senses up till 5-30 or 6 P.M. Satya Charan had been asked to produce his prescription book; he did so and was at liberty to refresh his memory by reference thereto. It does not appear that he did so; but it seems probable that a reference to the prescriptions might have enabled him to give more definite information as to the condition of the patient than he actually did. It also appears from the evidence on the side of the objector that Dr. Mallik injected some medicine into the body of the patient when he saw him in the afternoon. No attempt was made to get out from Satya Charan what happened when Dr. Mallik came in, though it is clear from the evidence that the two met and were with the patient for some time. We have, on the other hand, the assertion of the witnesses for the objector that the temperature of Haralal was very high and that he was delirious. Even if it be assumed that there is an element of exaggeration in the descriptions given by the witnesses for the objector who are laymen, it cannot be seriously disputed that the evidence adduced by the petitioners is by no means convincing. The burden was upon the propounders to show that the testator had testamentary capacity i.e., capacity to comprehend the nature and effect of his act; to discharge this burden, it must be shown that he was able to dispose of his property with understanding and reason, that he was able to realise his position, to appreciate his property and to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he decided to benefit. The direct evidence, upon which the propounders rely, is, from this point of view, not of much assistance; an assertion by a witness that the man was in full possession of his senses is of little value; it is merely an expression of his opinion, the value of which depends in a large measure on the facts observed by him. As Williams, J., observed in Kinne v. Kinne (1), the opinions of witnesses as to competency are entitled to little regard, unless supported by good reasons founded on facts which warrant them. It is concievable that, at this distance of time, the witness might have found it extremely difficult to recollect the facts he had then observed; we are not unmindful that lapse of time may sometimes account for the meagreness of the evidence or for lacuna therein. But it is a matter for legitimate comment that, in the present case, no attempt whatever was made on behalf of the propounders to obtain the details from the witness; it is not as if the witness was asked to give the information and failed to recollect what he had noticed many years previously.

The difficulty in the way of the petitioners is further enhanced by the fact that no particulars are given as to the time and mode of preparation of the Will. The two attesting witnesses merely state that they signed the Will. Satya Charan does not state in examination-in-chief the name of the person who had asked him to be an attesting witness, but in cross-examination it has been brought out that the request came from the testator. Chandra Kumar Banerjee cannot recollect who asked him to become a witness. Neither witness is able to give any information as to whether there was a draft and whether instructions had been given as to the contents of the Will, and, if so, by whom. In these circumstances, the evidence of the writer would have been a valuable aid in determining the question of validity of the Will. Satya Charan cannot say who the writer was. Chandra Kumar Banerjee has no personal knowledge of the subject, but adds that he had heard that one Annada Prosad Sarkar was the scribe. Krishnahari then comes forward with the story that they had two officers, Bishunpada Banerjee and Annada Prosad Sarkar, both of whom had left their service some years previously. He then states that the Will was in the handwriting of Annada Prosad Sarkar, and adds that Annada was in some village not known within Katwa in the District of Burdwan. This is said obviously with a view to explain why Annada had not been called. The next witness, Nibaran Chandra Mookerjee, however, asserted that Annada had a rice-shop in Kidderpore where the parties resided, and, though asked, had not agreed to give evidence. In cross-examination, it transpired that no corroboration could be obtaind of the allegation that Annada had refused to give evidence, because none else besides the witness was present when Annada is said to have made the statement. We have consequently the fact that the writer has not been called; it is not proved beyond doubt that a serious effort was made to obtain his evidence; in any event, if the petitioners had good reason to suppose that he could not be trusted to tell the truth, they might have asked the Court to summon him, with liberty to both parties to cross-examine him, if necessary. We have thus no information as to the instructions, if any, given by the testator for the preparation of the Will, except the bare statement by Satya Charan that he spoke about the Will for two or four days previously. Even this does not give any indication that the testator had expressed his intention to make a Will, or as to the details of its terms, or that he had consulted anybody about making a Will. We do not know when, if at all, instructions were given. We do not know that the provisions in the Will, as it stands, represent the wishes of the testator. In addition to this, we have the fact that there is no reliable evidence to show that the Will as drawn up was, before execution, read over to the testator, and its terms approved by him. Satya Charan, in his cross-examination, alleges that some one read out the Will, who he could not remember; he does not say, however, at what stage the Will was so read over. The person who read over the Will, if the story be true, should undoubtedly have been examined. We have consequently a Will executed by a man about two hours before his death, when his condition was critical and when, according to the evidence, he was restless with pain, without any information either as to the instructions, if any, given by him, or the time when and the person to whom the directions were given, and without any evidence to show that the Will as prepared was, before execution, read over to and approved by him. The Court called upon to pronounce in favour of such a Will, would, on well-recognised principles, to which a brief reference will presently be made, refuse to hold in favour of the propounder.

But in the present case we have the additional fact that the contents of the Will tend materially to confirm the conclusion against the operative character of the instrument. As we have already stated, the Will contains a serious misstatement, inasmuch as it includes amongst the assets a sum of money for the purchase of a house which, as a matter of fact, had been purchased by the testator twenty months earlier; the recitals in the conveyance, together with the details of the currency notes paid to the vendor, show that the transaction had been completed. But, in addition to this misstatement in the Will, we have what cannot but be regarded as a serious omission from the Will. As we have already mentioned, the wife of the testator was in the family way and a posthumous son was born within three months of his death. It may safely be assumed that the testator was aware of the condition of his wife; yet the Will makes no provision whatsoever for the possible child, though legacies are given to every one of the daughters and even to the grand-daughter. The Will recites that, up to that time, the testator had no male issue; yet it makes no reference to the possible child and makes a disposition of the properties which would completely disinherit the son, if one was born. It is difficult to believe that if the Will, as drawn up, was really the act of the testator and represented his wishes and judgment, no reference should be made to the possible child and no provision made for it, whether a daughter or a son. On the other hand, if the terms of the Will were practically settled by the brothers or other well-meaning relations of the testator, when enfeebled by mortal illness and almost within sight of the end, they might have arranged for provisions like those we find in the Will, in ignorance of the condition of the testator's wife. It is further clear that if the available cash alone was taken into account, very nearly the whole of it was given away in legacies, and practically nothing but the houses was left for the widow. The provisions of the Will are consequently such as are calculated to excite suspicion. No doubt, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Musammat Bulli Kunwar v. Musammat Bhagirathi (2), a Court will not reject a Will merely because its terms appear extraordinary, against clear evidence of due execution by a competent testator. But where the terms are unusual and the evidence of testamentary capacity doubtful, as the Judicial Committee observed in Dufour v. Croft (3) and Harwood v. Baker (4), the vigilance of the Court will be roused, and before pronouncing for the Will, the Court will require to be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the testator was fully cognizant of its contents and in a condition to exercise and did exercise thought, judgment, and reflection respecting the act he was doing: Tyrrell v. Painton (5). Upon a careful scrutiny of the entire evidence, we are of opinion that the propounders have failed to establish that the testator had sound and disposing mind when he is said to have affixed his signature to what purports to be his Will.

The principle applicable to cases of this character is now settled beyond possibility of dispute. Mere ability to sign one's name does not necessarily imply the possession of the full mental powers requisite for a valid disposition of property. Nor is it sufficient to show that the testator was conscious when he executed the instrument. As Creswell, J., said in Sefton v. Hopwood (6), "it is not sufficient in order to make a Will that a man should be able to maintain an ordinary conversation and to answer familiar and easy questions. He must have more mind than suffices for that. He must have what the old lawyers called a disposing mind; he must be able to dispose of his property with understanding and reason. This does not mean that he should make what other people may think a sensible Will or a reasonable Will or a kind Will. But he must be able to understand his position, he must be able to appreciate his property, to form a judgment with respect to the parties whom he chose to benefit by it after death; and if he has capacity for that, it suffices." Sir John Nicholl observed in Marsh v. Tyrrell (7): "it is a great but not uncommon error to suppose that because a person can understand a question put to him and can give a rational answer to such question, he is of perfectly sound mind and is capable of making a Will for any purpose whatever, whereas the rule of law, and it is the rule of common sense, is far otherwise." As Redfield, J., said in Converse v. Converse (8), "in order to execute a valid Will, one must have sufficient active memory to recall his family and his property and to form a rational judgment in regard to the deserts of the one, and the disposition of the other with reference to such deserts." [Delafield v. Parish (9)]. The position is somewhat different where a testator has given instructions for his Will while his mind is still in vigour, and, then, with the requisite decree of knowledge, executes the instrument shortly before his death: Parker v. Felgate (10); Woomesh Chunder Biswas v. Rashmohini Dassi (11), affirmed by the Judicial Committee on appeal, Rashmohini Dasi v. Umesh Chunder Biswas (12). As Lord Macnaghten said in Perera v. Perera (13), where a testator is of sound mind when he gives instructions for a Will, but at the time of signature accepts the instrument drawn in pursuance thereof, even though not able to follow its provisions then, he must be deemed to be of sound mind when it is executed. The case before us does not fall within this rule, of which the cases of Kusum Kumari v. Satishendra Nath Bose, (14) and Venkata Rangavulu v. Baggimmal (15) may be mentioned as recent illustrations. On behalf of the respondents the view, however, has been earnestly pressed upon us that a Court of Appeal should be extremely slow to disagree with the primary Court on a question of appreciation of oral evidence. We are not unmindful that, in the words of Lindley, M. R., in Coghlan v. Cumberland (16), quoted with approval by Lord Collins in Shunmugaroya Mudaliar v. Manika Mudaliar (17), it is always difficult for Judges who have not seen and heard the witnesses to refuse to adopt the conclusion of fact of those who have: Shama Charan Kundu v. Khettromoni Dasi (18), Marmavula Venkatakrishnayya

v. Annapurni Ammamori (19). The principle mentioned, no doubt, embodies the general rule, but is not of universal application, and cases are by no means rare where an Indian Appellate Court has taken a different view on the facts with reference to the validity of a Will from that taken by the primary Court, and the conclusion of the Appellate Court has been ultimately affirmed by the Judicial Committee: Rashmohini Dasi v. Umesh Chunder Biswas (12), Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdhry (20), Mussammat Bulli Kunwar v. Mussammat Bhagirathi (2). Here, however, the case is one not so much of estimate of credibility of the witnesses for the petitioners, who have been believed by the trial Court, as of the effect of their statements on the assumption that they have spoken the truth. The decision of the District Judge is vitiated by his failure to test the evidence from the standpoint of the fundamental principle that the testator must be of sound and discerning mind and memory, so as to be capable of making a disposition of his property with sense and judgment, in reference to the situation and amount of such property and to the relative claims of different persons who are or might be the objects of his bounty. It does not necessarily follow that in order to entitle us to disagree with the conclusion of the trial Court, we must disbelieve the witnesses who have been accepted as truthful by that Court. In this connection, the observations of Baron Parke in Baker v. Batt (21) may be usefully remembered: "in a Court of Probate where the onus probandi most undoubtedly lies upon the party propounding the Will, if the conscience of the Judge, upon a careful and accurate consideration of all the evidence on both sides, is not judicially satisfied, that the paper in question does contain the last Will and Testament of the deceased, it is bound to pronounce its opinion that the instrument is not entitled to probate. And it may frequently happen that this may be the result of an inquiry in cases of doubtful competency in particular, without the imputation of wilful perjury on either side: or it may be, the Judge may not be satisfied on which side the perjury is committed, or whether it certainly exists." To the same effect are the observations of Lord Brougham in Panton v. Williams (22): "There is no duty cast upon the Court to strain after probate, and to grant it where grave doubts remain wholly unremoved, and great difficulties oppose themselves to our progress, which we are quite unable to surmount. It may suffice to say that the proof eminently lies on him who sets up a Will, and further that it is more fatal than to his adversary if he leaves difficulties entirely without explanations. It is much less material that those who seek to impeach a testamentary instrument should be unable to explain certain things in their case and should be forced to admit that their argument is not in every point consistent with all the facts, than that they who seek to establish the Will should give no rational, consistent or intelligible solution of those difficulties which encumber their suppositions and obstruct the path towards the conclusion they would have us arrive at." In the case before us, we are unable to say that the propounders have satisfied us that the instrument put forward as the last Will of Haralal Banerjee was executed by him when he had a sound disposing mind.

The only other matter for consideration is, whether the case should be re-tried and the propounders allowed an opportunity to fill up the deficiencies in the proof offered by them, after an anxious examination of all the circumstances, we have arrived at the conclusion that the matter should not be re-opened. There would be a real danger of manufacture and manipulation of evidence if witnesses were now allowed to be brought forward to speak to events which happened nearly twenty years ago.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the application for Letters of Administration made on the 19th February 1912 with reference to the alleged Will of Haralal Banerjee dismissed. We direct, however, that the parties do bear their own costs throughout these proceedings.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu Law—Impartible zemindari—Maintenance allowance, whether charge—Intention of parties—Heir taking as donee under a gift—Santhathi Paramparayai —Annuity in nature of personal estate—Assignment of heir's rights.

Where a suit for the recovery of a certain zemindari was compromised and the plaintiff agreed to receive a sum of Rs. 700 monthly for himself and his heirs from the then and future holders of the zemindari and on the allowance falling into arrears, the son of the grantee instituted a suit for the amount and obtained a decree, but the decree was held to be not executable by his heirs, who were referred to a regular suit, which was duly brought:

Held, (1) that the grant was chargeable on the zemindari and enforceable by the descendants of the original grantee;

(2) that the fact that the defendant took the estate as a gift from his father did not take away the liability which would have devolved on him if he had succeeded to the property as son and heir;

(3) that the words "Santhathi paramparayai" clearly showed that the annuity was intended to be descendible to the heirs of the grantee generally and not limited to his lineal descendants.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The language of the grant makes the grantor's heirs liable for all time to come.

No special language is necessary to create a charge, it depends upon the intention of the parties, and in the present case the maintenance allowance made payable under the deed of compromise was intended to be a charge upon the zemindari.

The principle that where property is given by Will to a person who would otherwise be entitled to it as heir the character of the property is not changed, is also applicable where the transfer is inter vivos.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The grant is analogous to maintenance allowances payable by the proprietor of an impartible estate to the junior members of his family for maintenance, which are not deemed to be charged on the estate as a whole.

The words used are not sufficient to impose a charge on the zemindari, but merely create an annuity in the nature of a personal estate that may be made descendible in the same manner as real estate.

Where the heir of a deceased person executed a deed in favour of another which, after reciting that there was some question whether he or the other person was the next reversioner, provided that in consideration of a payment of Rs. 1,000, the former should give up in favour of the latter his claim as heir of the deceased and all rights connected therewith and that the latter should enjoy the estate with all rights of ownership and that the executant and his heirs should have no claim to it:

Held, that this was a valid transfer of the heir's rights, which accrued to the transferee and could be lawfully enjoyed by him.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, OFFG. C. J.—I agree, for the reasons given by my learned brother, with the decision of the District Judge that the first plaintiff has failed to prove that he was the adopted son of the deceased Muthudorasami Thevar and that his appeal (No. 193 of 1911) must be dismissed with costs; the memoranda of objections must also be dismissed with costs. The appeal (No. 173 of 1911) of the Rajah of Ramnad (the 2nd defendant) against the decree in favour of the 3rd plaintiff, who is the father of the 1st plaintiff but claims as assignee of one Poolar Thevar, the next reversioner of the deceased Muthudorasami Thevar, has now to be dealt with. The mother of the deceased was the 2nd plaintiff and sued as his heiress, and it was on her death pending the suit the 3rd plaintiff, the assignee of the next reversioner, was brought on and allowed to continue the suit as her legal representative.

The claim is for an annuity of Rs. 700 settled in January 1861 on Sivasami Thevar, the father of Muthudorasami, and his heirs as one of the terms of a compromise of a suit, in which Sivasami claimed the zemindari of Ramnad from the then zemindarni and her adopted son, the grandfather of the present Rajah. The litigation to which this annuity has given rise, subsequently to Sivasami's death, is succinctly stated in paragraph 1 of the District Judge's judgment. His senior widow, Kulandai Nachiar, disputed the legitimacy of Muthudorasami, and after obtaining a decision in her favour in the High Court, which was afterwards reversed by the Privy Council, instituted Original Suit No. 10 of 1867 against the Rajah of Ramnad, in the Madura District Court, who pleaded unsuccessfully that the annuity was only settled on the lineal heirs of the deceased Sivasami. In 1880 Muthudorasami, Sivasami's son, sued the Rajah in Original Suit No. 16 of 1880 in the District Court of Trichinopoly, and obtained a decree under which he drew the allowance till his death in 1905. In the present suit the defence has again raised the contention that the annuity was confined to the lineal heirs of Sivasami, and the District Judge has held that it is not res judicata by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 10 of 1867, on the ground that Kulandai Nachiar, the plaintiff in that suit, cannot be considered to have respresented the estate. He has, however, arrived at the same conclusion as the District Judge in that suit, whose judgment (Exhibit R 3) was approved by the High Court in appeal (Exhibit R), and has rejected the contention that the annuity was only settled on the lineal heirs of Sivasami. I may at once dispose of this contention which was again raised before us, by saying that I see no reason to differ from those decisions. The compromise was arrived at while the decree of the Court of Sudder Adaulat dismissing Sivasami's claim to the zemindari was under appeal to the Privy Council, and was embodied in two documents, Exhibits Q2 and Q3, one in Tamil and one in English, both signed by the Pleaders of the parties and filed in the Sudder Court. The English version, Exhibit Q3, is as follows: "The plaintiff has thus relinquished all right and claim (to the zemindari); the defendant and her heirs holding the zemindari shall, from the 1st November 1860, pay to the plaintiff and his heirs a monthly allowance of rupees seven hundred within the 10th of every succeeding month." The words santhathi parampayai used in the Tamil version are of Sanscrit origin, signifying literally from generation to generation. The same word santhathi is used in an earlier portion of the document, which provides that neither the plaintiff Sivasami nor his heirs shall have any claim to the zemindari, and as pointed out more than once in the judgment, it is absurd to suppose that it was the intention that the settlement should be binding only on the lineal heirs of Sivasami and might be disputed by collaterals. Further, the District Judge stated in his judgment of 1869 that these words were often used loosely among the Tamil people to signify heirs general and the same construction has often been placed on similar words by the Privy Council. It is, I think, clearly shown that under the terms of the compromise the annuity is descendible to the heirs of Sivasami generally and is not limited only to his lineal descendants.

A further contention has, however, been raised before us, that the provision that "the defendant and her heirs holding the zemindari shall from the 1st November 1860 pay to the plaintiff and his heirs a monthly allowance of Rs. 700 within the 10th of every succeeding month" (Exhibit Q3), is bad in law and that the plaintiff takes nothing under it. This contention was not raised in the suits of 1867 and 1880 already mentioned or in the written statements or issues in the present suit. It no doubt appears from paragraph 9 of the District Judge's judgment that an argument based on the nature of the interest conveyed to Sivasami and his heirs was addressed to him, but he appears to have understood it as directed to the contention that the annuity was descendible only to Sivasami's heirs lineal and not to his heirs general. It is not disputed that, if the annuity were charged upon the lands of the zemindari, it would constitute a rent charge and would be good. The District Judge has held that it is so charged, and the first point for consideration is whether he is right as to this. If the annuity had been made payable out of the rents and profits, that of course would have constituted a charge, but it is made payable by the semindarni and her heirs holding the semindari, and I am not satisfied that these words are sufficient to impose a charge. The grant is analogous to maintenance allowances payable by the proprietor of an impartible estate to the junior members of his family for maintenance which, it is well settled, are not deemed to be charged on the estate as a whole. Having regard to the enormous extent of the semindari which covers half a district, it was perhaps hardly thought necessary to create a charge binding the whole estate for so small a sum as this. We have been referred to Lakshmi Narayana Ananga v. Durga Madhava Deo (1), a decision of the Privy Council in which a sum of Rs. 300 for maintenance of a junior member and his family is referred to in the beginning of their Lordships' judgment as a charge created by the semindar, but a reference to the printed book shows that no charge was claimed in the pleadings and that no question as to any charge was raised at the trial or in the appeal to the High Court; and that in the way the case came before their Lordships, nothing turned on the question whether there was a charge or not and no such question apparently was raised.

Assuming that the grant was merely of an annuity payable to Sivasami and his heirs by the semindarni and her heirs holding the semindari, I do not think such a grant offends against either the rules of English or of Hindu Law. According to Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 24, Title "Rent Charge," such an annuity is in the nature of personal estate but may be made descendible in the same manner as real estate, and in India there is no reason why it should not be descendible according to the ordinary rules of Hindu Law. In case of non-payment, but not otherwise, relief may be sought by administration of the estate of the deceased settlor, when provision may be made for it out of the assets of the deceased: In re Hargreaves Dicks v. Hare (2), Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 24, page 520.

It is, however, contended that the compromise creates a covenant running with the land in favour of Sivasami and his heirs obnoxious to the rule in Austerberry v. Corporation of Oldham (3). In my opinion it has not that effect, but merely renders the estate of the covenantor (including in that term not only the semindarni, but also her adopted son whom she represented) liable in the hands of their legal representatives to the extent of the assets: and in this view, the 2nd defendant as their legal representative is liable to the extent of the assets in his hands, which include the semindari. The defence relies on the decision of the Privy Council in Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (4), but in my opinion that case does not affect the question. A Rajah in 1776 had made a grant in favour of certain of his dependants, confirming them in the possession of three villages and providing that, if they were not sufficiently supported by his successors, they were to be entitled to four more villages which were named, and the suit was brought for the recovery of the four villages on the ground that the event specified had happened. Their Lordships thought that such a grant might either be regarded as a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition which might prevent its taking effect at all, or for generations to come, or else as a covenant running with the Raj estate and binding its possessor to give the villages to these persons in the event specified. In either case they held it prevented the owner from alienating his estate discharged of such future interest, and imposed a restraint upon alienation contrary to the principles of Hindu Law. No such results follow from recognising the present gift, which moreover is not in favour of strangers but of members of the family. In the Tagore case [Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (5)] after laying down the illegality under Hindu Law of gifts to unborn persons, their Lordships make an express reservation "as to certain exceptional cases of provisions by way of contract or of conditional gift on marriage or other family provision, for which authority may be found in Hindu Law or usage." In Karim Nansey v. Heinrichs (6) their Lordships observe: "Gifts or contracts expressed to be for maintenance, and indefinite as regards duration, may be shown by the acts of the parties or other circumstances to be intended to operate in perpetuity; but prima facie they are limited to the life either of grantor or grantee;" and in Aziz-un-nissa v. Tassadduq Husain Khan (7), another decision of their Lordships, the question was whether the sum of Rs. 70 payable monthly under an award was intended to create a heritable interest, and it was not suggested that if it did, it would be bad.

Here I may say that the case cited for the plaintiff, Chatti Chalamanna v. Pandrangi Subbamma (8), does not seem to me to afford much assistance, as it was found there that the intention was to create a charge on the produce of the estate.

However, the explanation of a nibandha or corody taken from the Dipacalica in Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, page 443, includes such gifts as "I will give 150 swarnas every month of Karthigai" and "I will give monthly one swarna", in which there are no words of charge. Assuming, however, that there is no charge, I think that following the practice in the case of maintenance allowances, and also the practice in England as to making provision in administration for perpetual annuities payable out of the estate, it will be proper to make the annuity a charge on a part of the zemindari and that the case should be sent back for that purpose. In 1895 the Rajah's father, having involved himself in difficulties, executed a trust-deed under which the trustees were to provide for payment of some of his liabilities and hold the estate in trust for his son, the present 2nd defendant. Paragraph 23 of the deed provided that such part of the income as might be necessary should be applied in payment to Muthudorasami Thevar and his heirs of the monthly sum of Rs. 700, payable under the decree in Original Suit No. 16 of 1880 on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly. At the trial the plaintiff relied upon the provision as a fresh grant in favour of the deceased and his heirs, a contention rejected by the District Judge. On appeal the defence has raised a new case based on this deed, and contend that the 2nd defendant holds the zemindari as transferee under the deed and not as heir of the late Rajah, and that he is not liable to pay the annuity sued for to the heirs of the deceased Muthudorasami, as the reservation is only of the annuity to the deceased and his heirs under the decree in Original Suit No 16 of 1880, and it has since been held, as mentioned in paragraph 12 of the plaint, that that decree was in favour of Muthudorasami personally and that his heirs are not entitled to execute it. Assuming for a moment that it is open to the defence to raise a new case like this at such a late stage of the suit, I think these contentions fail upon the merits. The reservation in paragraph 23 of the trust-deed is expressly in favour of Muthudorasami and his heirs, and to borrow the language of Vaughan Williams, L. J., In re Rowe, Pike v. Hamlyn (9) which was cited for the defence, it seems difficult, if not impossible, to suggest any reason for mentioning the heirs unless it was intended to provide for the payment of the annuity to them. The annuity was in fact payable to them under the compromise of 1861, as every one knew, and appears to have been supposed erroneously, it now turns out, to be also payable to the heirs under the terms of the decree in Original Suit No. 16 of 1880. In these circumstances I think the words referring to the decree were mere misdescription, to which the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet is applicable. This conclusion is supported by the provisions of paragraph 26 of the deed, that the zemindari and other property dealt with by the deed are to be transferred to the present Rajah (2nd defendant), his heirs and assigns, "absolutely so that he may have the same kind and nature of estate, right and interest therein as he would have had if the same had devolved upon him from the settlor by right of inheritance according to the said law and custom of primogeniture and Hindu Law." Then follow certain reservations which are not material. These provisions, in my opinion, clearly disprove the contention that it was the intention to transfer the zemindari to the present Rajah discharged of the liabilities attaching to it in respect of the annuity now in question. Lastly, it is far from clear that it was open to the late Rajah so to discharge his heir by means of a voluntary conveyance in his favour, and in any case, I think, the Court should lean strongly against a construction of the deed which would have that effect. Another ground of appeal is that the District Judge was wrong in allowing the 3rd plaintiff to be brought on as the legal representative of the deceased 2nd plaintiff, the mother of Muthudorasami, who survived him. As already mentioned the next reversioner is one Poolar Thevar, who on the the 8th April 1910 executed a deed, Exhibit Y, in favour of the 3rd plaintiff, in which, after reciting that there was some question whether Poolar Thevar or the 3rd plaintiff was the next reversioner, the deed provides that in consideration of a payment of Rs. 1,000 the former should give up in favour of the third plaintiff his claim as heir of the deceased and all rights connected therewith, and that the 3rd plaintiff should enjoy the estate with all rights of ownership and that the executant and his heirs should have no claim to it. This appears to me to be a valid transfer, until it is set aside by Poolar Thevar, to the 3rd plaintiff of all his rights as reversioner of the deceased, and I think the District Judge was, therefore, right in allowing the 3rd plaintiff to continue the suit as the legal representative of the deceased 2nd plaintiff. The decree will be affirmed, subject to the modification already mentioned as to the new charge, which will be postponed to the claims of the 3rd and 4th defendants, and also by making the annuity payable on the 15th of each month, and the appeal will be dismissed with costs. The memorandum of objection is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. The 1st plaintiff claims to be the adopted son of one Muthudorasami Thevar, who died on the morning of the 17th of November 1905. The 2nd plaintiff is the mother of the deceased. Their claim is that the monthly allowance of Rs. 700 due from the Rajah of Ramand, the 2nd defendant in this case, is payable either to the 1st plaintiff as being the adopted son of the deceased Muthudorasami Thevar, or in the alternative, if the adoption should be found against, to the 2nd plaintiff as being the mother of the deceased. The 2nd plaintiff died in the course of the suit. The 3rd plaintiff was added on his allegation that he has acquired a right to the allowance by virtue of an assignment in his favour by one Poolar Thevar, who admittedly is the heir of Muthudorasami Thevar, failing the adoption. The defendant, the Rajah, resisted the claim of all the three. He denied the adoption of the 1st plaintiff and, as I have held in the connected appeal that the adoption has not been proved to have taken place, that question does not arise in the present appeal. He resisted the claim of the mother, on the ground that the allowance was payable only to the lineal heirs of the deceased and that consequently she was not entitled to it. As the 2nd plaintiff died since the institution of the suit, her claim need not be considered in this appeal.

The defence to the claim of the 3rd plaintiff was very meagrely stated in the written statement. It was amplified in this Court a great deal. In the first place it was stated, as in the case of the mother, that the allowance was not payable to any but the lineal heirs of the deceased and consequently the collateral heirs of Muthudorasami Thevar had no right to claim it. The claim was also resisted on the ground that the agreement to pay a monthly allowance from generation to generation was invalid and unenforceable. It was further pleaded that as the defendant, the Rajah, obtained the property not by inheritance from his father but by virtue of a deed of trust executed in his favour, the obligation to pay the allowance did not attach to him. A further defence was raised to the effect that the deed of assignment to the 3rd plaintiff from Poolar Thevar, the heir of Muthudorasami, was a sham transaction and that it contained no words of transfer which would vest the rights of Poolar Thevar in the 3rd plaintiff.

The District Judge found that the deed of assignment was valid and conferred title to the property of the deceased Muthudorasami Thevar, and that the Rajah as being in possession of the zemindari of Ramand was bound to pay the allowance to the 3rd plaintiff. The Rajah has preferred this appeal.

Before dealing with the various questions raised in the appeal, it is necessary to refer to the events which have led up to the present claim. A suit was filed by Sivasamy Thevar in the Madura Civil Court, Original Suit No.

3 of 1853, against Parvitha Vardhani Ammal for the recovery of the zemindari of Ramnad, on the ground that he was entitled to it in preference to the widow in possession. This suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance, and the appeal against that decision to the Sudder Adaulat Court was also dismissed. Sivasami then filed an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. At this stage the parties entered into a compromise. In consequence of that compromise the application to appeal was withdrawn and Sivasami agreed to receive a sum of Rs. 700 monthly for himself and his heirs from the zemindar of Ramnad in consideration of his having given up his claim to the zemindari. Parvatha Vardhini adopted Muthu Ramalinga Sethupati, who became the zemindar of Ramnad. He was succeeded by his son, Baskara Sethupati. The present defendant is his son.

The allowance continued to be paid during the life-time of Sivasami. On his death his widow, Kolanthai Nachiar, filed a suit for the recovery of the arrears of allowance. Meanwhile one Ramamani Ammal brought a suit to have it declared that she was the lawfully wedded wife of Sivasami and that her son, Muthudurasami, was the legitimate son of her husband. It was ultimately decided that Ramamani was not a concubine but that she was the lawfully wedded wife of the deceased Sivasami. After the termination of this litigation in favour of Ramamani and her son, a suit was instituted by the son. Muthudorasami, for the arrears of maintenance due to him from the date of the death of his father. It was Original Suit No. 16 of 1880 on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly. He obtained a decree in that suit. The 1st and 2nd plaintiffs in this case applied to the District Court of Trichinopoly to execute the decree, contending that the decree gave them a right to receive the allowance without recourse to a regular suit. The District Judge held that the original decree in favour of Muthudorasami was not executable by his heirs and referred them to a regular suit. The present suit is the result of that order.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar's first contention is that the right created under the razinamah was enforceable only against Parvatha Vardhini and is of no avail against her successors in the zemindari. It was admitted by the learned Vakil that the fact that it was a female holder of the zemindari that granted the allowance, would not make any difference in the solution of this question. He contended that Exhibit Q2 was the only razinamah that was filed in Court and that by its terms it does not affect Parvatha Varthini's heirs in the zemindari. The document literally translated reads: "That the defendant who is in the enjoyment of the zemindari and her heirs should continue to pay the plaintiff generation to generation an allowance, etc....." This was accompanied by an English razinamah which is Exhibit Q3 in this case. It is somewhat differently worded. It says that "the plaintiff having thus completely relinquished all right and claim, the defendant and her heirs holding the zemindari shall from the 1st November 1860 pay to the plaintiff and his heirs a monthly allowance," etc. It was argued that Exhibit Q3 was intended to be a translation of Exhibit Q2 and that the razinamah which was put in Court and acted upon was Exhibit Q2. It was suggested that Exhibit Q3 must have been prepared for the purpose of transmitting a translation to the Privy Council. This is clearly wrong. Exhibit Q2 was admittedly filed on the 8th January 1861 and the direction of the Registrar to translate and send copies to the Privy Council was not given until the 18th January 1861 (Vide Exhibit Q4). It seems more probable that Exhibits Q2 and Q3 were duplicates and were both filed in Court. They were both signed in the original by the parties and their Pleaders. I am of opinion that we must read Exhibits Q2 and Q3 together, especially as the language of Exhibit Q2 is ambiguous, to find out what the parties meant to effect by the compromise.

Further, the question as to whether under this razinamah only a personal right, as against the grantor, was secured was not pleaded in the written statement and there was no issue about it. If this contention were well founded, it would have been a complete answer to the suit of Muthudorasami Thevar in the District Court of Trichinopoly. The razinamah was acted upon for over half a century and was construed by Courts and understood by the parties as conferring rights as against persons holding the zemindari. The decision in the previous suit, evidenced by Exhibits S and S 2, proceeded upon this footing. I am of opinion that this contention is not open to the appellant.

Apart from these technical grounds I am satisfied that there is no substance in the argument. The document charges Parvatha Varthini and her heirs holding the zemindari with the liability to pay this allowance. The contention that the grantor had no power to bind her descendants was raised with reference to the observation of Channell, J., in Read v. Price (10). That case was decided on the ground that if two or more persons are jointly liable, the liability of the deceased obligor does not pass to the administrator jointly with the obligors on whom by survivorship such liability has devolved. It is no authority for the position that no person can covenant that his heirs shall be liable. The other decisions relied upon by the learned Vakil, namely Tara Sundari Debi v. Saroda Charan Banerjee (11) Rajah Padmanund Singh v. Rama Prosad (12) Raja Padmanund v. Rama Prasad (13), all relate to the question as to whether under the Civil Procedure Code a future right to maintenance can be attached and sold. They have no bearing on the question we have to decide.

The case most strongly relied upon was that of Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (4). In that case the original grant recited that a perpetual remuneration should be given to certain individuals then living. In lieu of it, an immediate assignment of three villages was made. Then the document proceeded to say: "If ever in the time of my descendants you are not provided with the means of maintenance by them, then let those descendants of yours who may be living at that time produce this deed, and taking possession of the three above-mentioned villages and also of the four villages now held by me, enjoy possession of them rent free from generation to generation." After the deaths of the original grantor and grantee, the event contemplated happened. Thereupon the descendants of the grantee sued to recover possession of the additional villages by reason of the default made by the grantor's heirs. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that as regards these four villages there was no contract made with the grantee at the time of the grant and that a promise to make a future grant in favour of persons yet unborn was not an enforceable contract. In the present case there was a completed contract at the time of the grant, and not merely a promise to convey in future in favour of persons yet unborn.

The case of Lakshmi Narayana Ananga v. Durga Malhawa Deo (1), before the Privy Council, is similar to the present case. In that case the holder of an impartible zamindari in making a grant used the following words: "I have agreed to give you, through the Collector, every month Rs. 300 on account of the maintenance of yourself and your younger brothers, three in all, and the rest of your family." In a suit by the son of the youngest brother against the successor of that zemindar for the allowance secured by this grant, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Committee said: "It is contended on behalf of the defendant, that the payment of Rs. 300 a month was only to endure for the life of ogi Deo, or, at the most, for the lives of the three brothers. It is immaterial which of those constructions is put forward. Either of them seems to their Lordships to be directly at variance with the terms of the agreement." In another place it is taken for granted that the maintenance was a charge upon the zemindari. The language used in the razinamah in the present case is very similar to that employed in the document commented on by the Privy Council. If the grant in that case was regarded as not being personal to the grantee and as being enforceable against the heirs of the grantor, it is equally clear that the grant of the monthly allowance in the present case enures for the benefit of the heirs of Sivaswami and is enforceable against the successors of Parvatha Varthini in the zemindari. To my mind the case in Lakshmi Narayana Anarga v. Durga Madhava Deo (1) is almost conclusive upon this question. In another case, Mahomed Hossein Khan v. Mahomed Nehluddin Khan (14), the Judicial Committee held that a grant of a similar nature is chargeable on the zemindari and enforceable by the descendants of the original grantee.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar referred us to the statement of law contained in Volume 24 of "Halsbury's Laws of England", to the effect that a grant of this nature can be secured by a contract, that it is heritable, and can be enforced against persons who succeeded to the estate of the original grantor. In Section 903 of that Volume it is stated that "the right created by an instrument (whether deed, will, codicil or statute) to receive a definite annual sum of money is an interest which may be, strictly speaking, either a 'rent charge' or an 'annuity.' There can be no question that an annuity need not be charged upon the estate. The case of Turner v. Turner (15) decided that an annuity, though a personal estate, if given to a man and his heirs, would descend to the heir in default of alienation." In Section 933, the mode of creating annuities is referred to: "To create an annuity by instrument inter vivos, a deed, as a general rule, is necessary. An annuity is frequently secured by a personal covenant." That an annuity can be for the life of the annuitant or perpetual has also been laid down in a number of decided cases. Ordinarily under the English Law the remedy open to a person in whose favour an annuity has been created is to seek for the administration of the estate of the grantor and if it is secured by Will, to sue the executor that a fund be set apart from which the annuity may be made payable in perpetuity. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar argued from this that as the present claim is not for administration and as there is no precedent in this country for the setting apart of a particular fund for allocating a specific portion of property from which the annuity may be paid, the suit is not sustainable. The remedy open to a person in whose favour an annuity is created is not to bring an administration action only. If assets are admitted a suit to recover arrears will lie. Of course it will always be open to the defendant to plead that he has no funds in his hands from which the annuity can be paid. It may be that the annuitant runs the risk of getting a useless decree in case he does not obtain a charge upon any specific property for the payment of his annuity. In the present case, the plaint claims that the annuity should be charged on specific property. Even if the allowance in the present case is not to be regarded as a charge on the whole zemindari, I see no objection to granting the plaintiff's prayer that it be secured to him by making it a charge on a portion of the property in the hands of the defendant. My view is that the language of the razinamah amounts to creating a charge on the zemindari. Even in that view it is desirable that the charge should be restricted to specific portions of the zemindari. This is often done in maintenance cases; and it is in the interests of the defendant that he should not be fettered in the enjoyment of his property by fixing on it a general charge, affecting the whole estate. For all these reasons I am of opinion that the allowance secured by Exhibits Q2 and Q3 is enforceable against the heirs of the grantor and payable from out of the assets of that grantor which are in the hands of the defendant, subject to the reservation that a specific portion of his estate be charged with its payment.

The next contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is that this contract to pay a monthly allowance does not run with the land and, therefore, the grantee's heirs cannot sue to recover it from persons holding the zemindari. Two decisions of the Allahabad High Court, viz., Sri Thakurji Maharaj v. Lachmi Narain (16) and Ram Gobind v. Sri Thakurji Maharaj (17), were cited in this connection. In both those cases there was a transfer of property on condition that the transferee should pay the land revenue upon the portion retained by the transferor and should further pay him a monthly allowance. The transferee conveyed his property to third persons. It was held that those third persons were not bound to pay that monthly allowance for all time to come. No case is quoted in the judgment nor is the deed of transfer set out. It is probable that a purely personal right was secured by the contract. In the present case, the language of the grant makes the grantor's heirs liable for all time to come.

I am also inclined to think that a grant of this kind is covered by the second clause of section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, which says: "Where a third person is entitled to the benefit of an obligation arising out of contract and annexed to the ownership of immoveable property, but not amounting to an interest therein or easement thereon, such right or obligation may be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof or a gratuitous transferee of the property affected thereby." In the present case Sivaswami was entitled under the contract to an allowance. The contract is annexed to the ownership of the zemindari of Ramnad, as is clear from the language employed in Exhibits Q2 and Q3. It may be that Sivaswami's right did not amount to an interest in the property. Nonetheless according to the language of section 40 the benefit is enforceable against a gratuitous transferee and against all transferees with notice of the original grant. There are no Indian cases upon this point, but as the language seems very apt to cover the present case, although in terms Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act" is not applicable to Hindus, I see no reason why the principle of that section should not be applied to the facts of the present case.

I may refer to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte, Graham; In re Blackburn Benefit Building Society (18) quoted by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar. It is an authority for the position that, so long as the grantee is in possession of the rents and profits of the land from which the allowance is payable, although no charge was created in his favour nor was there any covenant running with the land, the grantee could enforce his rights as against the grantor. Before dealing with the other contentions of the appellant, it is necessary to dispose of the question whether the allowance made payable under Exhibits Q2 and Q3 was a charge upon the zemindari of Ramnad. I am inclined to hold that it is. We have to remember that the document is of 1861, when the parties were not as fully conversant with legal technicalities as they are to-day. It must also be borne in mind that Sivaswami claimed the whole zemindari, and it is hardly conceivable that he would have been content to take a personal covenant for payment of the allowance when he had laid claim to the zemindari itself. Further, if no charge is intended to be created upon the zemindari, it was hardly necessary in these two documents to use the expression "the defendant and her heirs holding the zemindari." Moreover, the grant was in the nature of one for maintenance and it is well understood that maintenance, ordinarily comes out of an estate in the possession of the promisor. It is conceded that no special language is necessary to create a charge. It depends upon the intentions of the parties; and I am of opinion that the parties intended, from the circumstances, I have set forth, that this maintenance should be a charge on the zemindari. In Lakshmi Narayana Ananga v. Durga Madhava Deo (1), to which I have already referred, Lord Hobhouse assumes that language similar to the present would create a charge upon the zemindari; and it was held in Mahomed Hussein Khan v. Mahomed Nehluddin Khan (14) that it is permissible to refer to the surrounding circumstances to see whether there was an intention to create a charge. Reference may also be made to the case of Hem Chundra v. Atul Chundra (19). My conclusion is that the allowance in favour of Sivaswami and his heirs is a charge on the zemindari.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar contended that such permanent and heritable grants are not unknown to Hindu Law. The ancient Hindu Smriti writers referred to it as a nibhanda. Ordinarily the term imports permanency. The origin of a nibhanda grant seems to lie in the Ruling Chiefs making hereditary grants to their dependants as remuneration for meritorious services rendered to them. They were money allowances from generation to generation or grants of land. In later years, this practice was followed by zemindars. All the authorities relating to the "nibhanda grant" are collected in Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, pages 442 and 443. See also Balavantrah v. Purshotam Sidheshwar (20). I am referring to this contention to point out that there is nothing repugnant to Hindu Law in making such a perpetual grant. It was pointed out in Nafar Chandra Kundu v. Ratnamala Debi (21) and Dinesh Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Biraj Kamini (22) that the principles of Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (5) against grants in perpetuity should be restricted to cases of grants containe in Wills; the Judicial Committee pointed out in that case that there was nothing in Hindu Law to warrant a grant of the kind before them in perpetuity in favour of unborn persons. But where a hereditary grant of this kind is in the contemplation of Hindu text writers, their Lordships have expressly guarded themselves against saying that such, a provision will be obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.

The next question for consideration is whether the defendant is not liable because he has taken the estate, not as heir of the last owner, but under a deed of trust created by his father. No issue was taken upon this point; in the absence of such an issue we are not in a position to say under what circumstances the trust-deed, Exhibit T, was executed. In my view, the fact that the defendant took the estate as a gift from his father will not take away the liability which would have devolved on him if he had succeeded to the property as son and heir. As pointed out in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (23), where property is given by Will to a person who would otherwise be entitled to it as heir, the character of the property is not changed. The same principle should be extended to transfer inter vivos. Moreover, in this case Exhibit T, the trust-deed, shows that the settlor intended that the zemindari should continue to be liable as if the property descended in the ordinary course of succession and not by assignment under the trust deed. The maintenance of the younger brother is provided for, and language is employed in many places indicating that the fact that there was a trust-deed should make no difference regarding the liability of the zemindari for obligations resting upon it. A good deal of argument was addressed to us regarding the provision in Exhibit T to the following effect: "In the seventh place, shall apply such part or parts thereof as may be required for payment to Muthudoraswami Thevar and his heirs of the monthly sum of Rs. 700 payable under the decree in Original Suit No. 16 of 1881 on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly." It was not disputed that the decree in the District Court of Trichinopoly did not make the allowance payable to Muthudoraswami Thevar and his heirs. It was, therefore, argued that these words, "and his heirs", in Exhibit T were "a surplusage and all that the document was intended to secure was the payment to Muthudoraswami Thevar of the amount of the decree. If this question had been raised in the issues, the meaning of this clause could have been rendered clear. For example, it is not a violent suggestion to make that what the parties intended to say was that the payment to Muthudoraswami Thevar and his heirs should be made as provided for in the razinamah on which the decree was obtained in the Trichinopoly District Court. The language of the document is capable of being made certain by extraneous evidence. It was, therefore, incumbent on the defendant to have raised a specific issue whether the trust-deed did oblige him to pay the descendants of Muthudoraswami Thevar the maintenance from out of the estate. The language of the residuary clause 26 seems to imply that all subsisting obligations upon the zemindari are to be met by the defendant from the income of the zemindari. I cannot, therefore, accept the contention that the fact of the execution of the trust-deed makes a difference in regard to the position of the defendant.

It is further argued that under the assignment-deed to the 3rd plaintiff no right to the maintenance passed to him. It is common ground that Poolar Thevar, the assignor, was the heir to the estate and effects of Muthudoraswami. The deed of assignment, Exhibit Y, says:—"I have hereby given up to you the title of heir possessed by me and all rights connected therewith." It sets out by saying that the third plaintiff himself was the nearest heir. It also says that in case he is not the heir and if it is held that Poolar Thevar, the executant of Exhibit Y, is the heir, all the right of the latter should devolve on the third plaintiff. The language of the document is very explicit, and I feel no manner of doubt that under Exhibit Y all the rights of Poolar Thevar accrued to the 3rd plaintiff.

The last question to be considered is whether the fact that Poolar Thevar was not the lineal descendant of Muthoduraswami but was only a collateral, disentitles him from recovering the maintenance or from assigning it to the 3rd plaintiff. Such a contention was not raised when Kolandai Nachiar, the widow of Sivaswami Thevar, brought a suit to recover the maintenance. She was not the lineal heir of Sivaswami. The words used in Exhibits Q2 and Q3 are that Sivaswami was entitled to enjoy the allowances anthathi paramparaiyaka. These words convey a heritable estate from generation to generation. They are even stronger than the words puthra pouthra paramiparaiyaka. No authority has been quoted for the proposition that the word "Santhathi" is to be restricted to the lineal descendants. It means the heirs in general and as Poolar Thevar is undoubtedly in the line of heirs to Sivaswami, he is entitled to recover the allowance; and his assignee has the same rights to it. I am of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs, subject to the modification suggested by the learned Chief Justice.

IN APPEAL No. 193 OF 1911.

The only question for consideration in this appeal is whether the appellant was validly adopted by the deceased Muthudoraswami Thevar who died at 3 A. M. on the morning of the 17th November 1905. The adoption is said to have taken place the previous evening at about 6 P. M. The learned District Judge after a careful examination of the evidence has come to the conclusion that the adoption did not take place as alleged.

I see no reason to differ from him. The deceased was suffering from a serious illness for nearly two months before his death and was confined to his bed for a fortnight before he died. Two days before this event, he had sent for his legal adviser and friend, Mr. Rama Subba Aiyar, a leading Vakil of the Madura Bar. It is in evidence and not disputed that Mr. Rama Subba Aiyar left Ramnad on the forenoon on the 16th. If the deceased had any intention of adopting the appellant it is impossible to believe that he would not have executed a deed of adoption. Evidence was given to the effect that the object of Mr. Rama Subba Aiyar's visit was to induce the deceased to take the appellant in adoption. If that were so, either the adoption would have taken place when Mr. Rama Subba Aiyar was there, or there would have been some writing to evidence it. On the evidence I am inclined to think that there were serious disputes regarding the disposition of Muthudoraswami's property between his mother and a woman named Bapu Ammal, who was living with him in his house and by whom he had a daughter. It was in consequence of the irreconcilable attitude taken by the mother towards this woman that Mr. Rama Subba Aiyar was unable to get the deceased to execute any document disposing of his property. If the adoption was thought of, it is clear from the evidence that it was not the appellant that the deceased contemplated adopting, but a boy who was at that time in Rangoon.

One other circumstance, and a very significant one, which is against the theory of adoption is that the appellant admittedly did not perform the funeral obsequies of the deceased on the 17th; it is said that he gave the grass to his own natural father and that the natural father as proxy performed the obsequies. It is admitted that the boy did not get shaved. An attempt was made to explain this significant omission on the ground that the boy was suffering from a cold. Other witnesses deposed that the boy was laid up with fever, but the father said that he was suffering from a simple cold. That cannot account for not getting the boy shaved if he had really been adopted by the deceased. Among Hindus the performance of the funeral obsequies is the main object of adopting a boy and the shaving of the boy on the date of the death is a condition precedent to the performance of the ceremonies. This fact is almost conclusive against the theory of the plaintiff's adoption.

It is true the adoption was set up on the 1st of December, that is, within fifteen days after the death of Muthudoraswami. In subsequent proceedings in the Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts the appellant was put forward as the adopted son of the deceased. That only shows that the persons interested in the appellant were clever and astute enough to realise the necessity for early action on his behalf. Evidence was given that the plaintiff's first witness, Pandydoraiswami Thevar, had brought up the boy from his childhood and got him educated. Apparently, this gentleman had taken a great deal of interest in the boy. It is also in evidence that he was inimically disposed towards the Raja of Ramnad, the defendant in this case. He had petitioned for his removal from the managership of the Rameswaram Devastanam and had taken up an attitude of hostility towards him.

I am inclined to think that Pandydoraiswami Thevar put forward the appellant as adopted son with a view that the monthly allowance which was being given to the deceased might not lapse to the defendant and in order to enable the plaintiff to set up the claim to it. The second witness is the natural father of the plaintiff, and is deeply interested in the success of this suit. I cannot place any reliance on his deposition. The testimony of the other witnesses does not impress me as being disinterested and reliable. On the other hand, the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon, who attended upon the deceased, is clear that on the date of the alleged adoption the deceased was in a sinking condition and unconscious and could not have made the adoption. He is not shown to be interested in any of the contending parties and I see no reason to disbelieve his evidence. The evidence of the second witness, a very near relative of the deceased and a graduate of the University, impresses me as being true. I, therefore, agree with the District Judge in his conclusion that the alleged adoption never in fact took place. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

I see no reason why the District Judge should not have given costs to the defendant in the lower Court.

I must allow the memorandum of objections with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 1085 OF 1913.

June 1, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

GUNENDRA NATH BASU MALLIK—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 115, O. XXI, r. 22—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—Suit for rent for less than Rs. 100—Decree—Execution—Sale of non-transferable occupancy holding—Proceedings carried on against a dead judgment-debtor—Application to set aside sale by a private purchaser, maintainability of—Order refusing to set aside sale—Second appeal, maintainability of—Revision, petition treated as memorandum of appeal.

A decree-holder initiated execution proceedings and carried them on throughout against a deceased judgment-debtor as if he were still alive. The Court was not only not apprised that the proceedings were taken against a dead man, but untrue returns were repeatedly filed to show that the processes had been duly served:

Held, that a sale held under such circumstances must be set aside on the ground of grave irregularity in the proceedings.

Judicial proceedings cannot be carried on in the name of a dead man.

A purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding from whom rent was received after his purchase but whose name was not formally entered as tenant, is competent under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to make an application to set-aside the sale held in execution proceedings against a dead judgment-debtor.

In such a case the burden lies upon the decree-holder to show that the person applying to have the sale set aside had knowledge of the sale before the delivery of possession to the decree-holder-purchaser.

A second appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree obtained in a suit for rent for less than Rs. 100.

Where no question of limitation or Court-fees arises a petition may be treated as a memorandum of appeal, if necessary.

Rule against an order of the District Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 22nd April JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the District Judge, who, in concurrence with the Court of first instance, has refused an application for reversal of an execution sale. The facts as they appear on the face of the record may be briefly recited. One Gunendranath Basu Mallik brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent against Sitanath Banerjee, the recorded tenant of an occupancy holding, which comprised 17 bigahs of land and is said to have been worth at least Rs. 300. The decree was made ex parte on the 4th July 1909 for a sum of about Rs. 63 together with costs, about Rs. 9. On the 27th May 1911, the petitioner Arjun Das, who had previously purchased the holding from Sitanath Banerjee, made a deposit of Rs. 67 in satisfaction of the judgment-debt; by some oversight, the amount deposited did not cover the whole of the costs decreed. On the 25th October 1911, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree against Sitanath Banerjee, for recovery of the balance still due, which amounted to a sum of about Rs. 5. Sitanath Banerjee had, however, died on the 17th May 1910. Execution was yet taken out against the dead man. On the 2nd November 1911, the Court ordered execution to proceed against the judgment-debtor on record, and notice under rule 22 of Order XXI of the Code was directed to issue upon him, as more than one year had elapsed from the date of the decree. A return was filed that the notice had been duly served on Sitanath Banerjee on the 28th November 1911. Subsequently, writ of attachment and sale proclamation were issued with the name of Sitanath Banerjee thereon. Returns were filed in usual course that the processes had been served in accordance with law. On the 12th January 1912, the holding was put up to auction; there was no bidder present, and the decree-holder purchased the property for Rs. 50. On the 8th April 1912, the Court delivered possession to the decree holder in his capacity as auction-purchaser. On the 7th May 1912, the petitioner applied to the execution Court for reversal of the sale. He alleged that he had purchased the holding several years before the sale, that he was in possession by payment of rent to the landlord, and that the decree-holder had managed to buy the property for a very small price at a sale held in the course of proceedings taken against a dead man. The Court of first instance refused to set aside the sale, and that order has been on appeal confirmed by the District Judge. In our opinion, the proceedings initiated and carried on against the dead judgment-debtor were infructuous and the Courts below have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them, namely, to annul a sale held in the course of such a proceeding.

Order XXI, rule 22, provides that where an application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree or against the legal representative of a party to the decree, the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for, requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him. In the case before us, more than one year had elapsed from the date of the decree and the judgment-debtor had died in the interval. There was, consequently, a two-fold reason for the issue of the notice contemplated by rule 22, but such notice could be issued only upon the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor against whom alone execution could proceed under sub-section 1 of section 50. The decree-holder, however, initiated the proceeding and carried it on throughout against the dead man as if he were still alive. The Court was not only not apprised that the proceedings were taken against a dead man, but untrue returns were repeatedly filed to show that the processes had been duly served. It is difficult to conceive a graver abuse of the process of the Court, and the question inevitably arises, is a sale deliberately brought about under such circumstances to be treated as valid and operative? In the case of Lerenia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1) this Court was called upon to consider the effect of a sale-held without notice to the judgment-debtor under section 248 of the Code of 1882. In that case, the judgment-debtor was alive, but although more than a year had elapsed since the date of the decree, no notice under section 248 was served upon her. This Court held, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Malkarjun v. Narhari (2), that although the sale could not be treated as a nullity and ignored by the party whose property had been sold as if it had never taken place, yet it was voidable, as the omission to issue the prescribed notice was a serious irregularity. It was pointed out that the omission to serve the notice was not a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of section 311 of the Code of 1882, but was a good ground for reversal of the sale upon an application under section 244, which could be made, under Article 178 of the second Schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877, within three years from the date of sale. It was also explained that the object of a notice under section 248 is, not merely to give the judgment-debtor opportunity to show cause why the decree should not be executed because, for instance, it is time-barred or has been adjusted, but also to give him an opportunity to satisfy it before execution is issued. The principles thus enunciated in Levenia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1) have been adopted and applied in the cases of Lakshmi Charan Sein v. Sris Chandra Roy (3), Rasaraj Kunai v. Prosonna Kumar Roy (4) and Sham Sunder Singh v. Jhumat Shah (5). Tested in the light of these principles, the sale in the case before us cannot possibly be sustained. There was no notice under Order XXI, rule 22, upon the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor; the Court could not issue such notice, though it was incumbent upon the Court to do so, because the decree-holder never intimated to the Court that the judgment-debtor was dead. A sale held under these circumstances must be set aside on the ground of grave irregularity in the proceedings. But the present case is really much stronger than the one beforethis Court in Levenia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1). Here the execution proceeding was initiated and carried on throughout against a dead man. The cases of Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (6) and Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (7) are of no assistance to the decree-holder, auction-purchaser. In those cases, the execution proceeding had been commenced against the judgment-debtor and his property had been attached during his lifetime; the sale took place after his death without notice to his legal representative. It was ruled that the property, when sold, was as the result of the attachment validly in the custody of the Court, and that consequently the sale was not a nullity but could be set aside on the ground of material irregularity in the publication of the sale proclamation. The case before us is of an essentially different description; it is not the case of a man who, after due notice of the execution proceeding, defaults to pay the judgment-debt and as a result has his property brought to sale; it is the case of a man who is dead and whose property is sold, because he fails to respond to the notice issued by the Court on him at the instance of the judgment-creditor [see Raja Debi Bakush v. Habib Shah (8)].

The question of the legality of an execution sale held in course of proceedings initiated and carried on against a dead judgment-debtor has been repeatedly considered in cases of the highest authority. In Chick v. Smith (9) it was ruled that in the case of death of the judgment-debtor, even a few hours before execution issued, the execution was invalid; see also the notes to Jeffreson v. Morton (10); substantially to the same effect are the decisions in Ramessurri Dassee v. Doorga Dass Chatterjee (11), Imam-un-nissa Bibi v. Liakat Hussain (12), Gopal Chunder Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi (13). No doubt, there has been some divergence of judicial opinion upon the point whether the sale should be treated as void or voidable; but the Courts are unanimous that if the sale is directly impeached, it cannot be sustained.

(13) 20 C. 370.

The question has been repeatedly examined in the Courts of the United States, and the authorities almost unanimously hold that if execution issues after the death of the judgment-debtor, the sale is void; only a small minority hold that it is voidable (Freeman on Executions, section 35; Freeman on Void Judicial Sales, section 24; Kleber on Void Judicial and Execution Sales, section 280; Rorer on Judicial Sales, section 827). The point has been elaborately investigated by the Supreme Court of the United States on more than one occasion, Erwin v. Dundas (14), Taylor v. Doe (15), Ransom v. Williams (16), Mitchell v. Maxent (17), and it has been uniformly ruled that an execution commenced after the death of the judgment-debtor named therein is void, and that the purchaser at a judicial sale held in such a void proceeding is not protected; but it is otherwise where an execution is regularly issued and is levied on the land of the judgment-debtor during his life-time; in the latter case, the sale is regarded as a completion of the previous execution by which the property had been expropriated in accordance with law. The matter may be put briefly in the words of the judgment in Brown v. Parker (18): "Judicial proceedings cannot be carried on in the name of a dead man; there is as much necessity for a plaintiff as for a defendant; the proceedings in either case are as much arrested by the death of one as of the other." We hold accordingly that the sale held on the 12th January 1912 must be set aside on the basis of the application dated the 7th May 1912, treated as one made under section 47 of the Code. No question of limitation arises, notwithstanding the comprehensive language of Article 166 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1908, which is wider in its terms than the Article it replaces, namely, Article 166 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The case is plainly one for the application of section 18; no notices had ever been issued upon any person interested in the property sought to be sold; false returns were, on the other hand, filed to the effect that the processes had been duly served on the judgment-debtor who had, as a matter of fact, died more than a year before the proceedings were commenced against him; besides this, the decree-holder, auction-purchaser, did not take delivery till after more than a month had expired from the date of the sale and the petitioner came into Court within one month from the date of such delivery. There is nothing to show that the petitioner had any previous knowledge of the sale, and, as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (19), the burden would lie upon the decree-holder to show that the petitioner had on any date earlier than the 8th April 1912 knowledge of the sale held in course of proceedings of which no notice had been given to any living man.

We also observe that the objection was taken in the Court below that the petitioner had no locus standi, as he had failed to prove that the holding was transferable by custom. It was proved, however, that rent was received from the petitioner after his purchase, though his name was apparently not formally registered as tenant. We are of opinion that the petitioner was competent to make the application and that the decision in Prosunno Kumar Midder v. Bama Churn Mondal (20) does not govern this case.

We may finally add that although the application must be deemed to have been made under section 47 of the Code of 1908, a second appeal may at first sight seem barred under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the claim in this suit for rent was under Rs. 100, Shyama Charan Mitter v. Debendra Nath Mukerjee (21); but a second appeal does apparently lie in this case on the authority of the decision of the Full Bench in Kali Mandal v. Ramsarbanoa Chakravarti (22) the effect of which, as explained in Beni Madhab Roy v. Bisseswar Bharati (23), has not been completely nullified by the explanation added to section 153. The view that a second appeal lies to this Court in the present case does not, however, create any difficulty in the way of the petitioner, because the petition on which this Rule was granted may be treated as a memorandum of appeal, as no question of limitation or Court-fees arises.

The result is that the orders of the Courts below are discharged, the application to set aside the sale is granted and the sale is cancelled. The petitioner will be restored to possession in execution of the order of this Courts. The petitioner will also receive his costs in all the Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Order discharged.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 179 OF 1913.

August 24, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

VARADARAJA MUDALIAR AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFFS

versus

NARAYANASAMI MUDALIAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Will—Bequest in favour of unborn persons—Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act (Mad. Act I of 1914), retrospective effect of—Gift to daughter with a gift over, whether valid.

A bequest to persons who are not born at the date of the testator's death is invalid.

The Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act (Madras Act I of 1914), has no application where the testator died long before the Act came into force and has retrospective effect only to the extent that it applies to Wills made before the passing of the Act where the dispositions made are intended to come into operation at a time which is subsequent to the passing of the Act.

Where a Will made no gift in favour of the testator's children, but directed that they should enjoy his properties without having any right to them and that the executors should collect the rents, etc., and after meeting all expenses should add up the surplus for the benefit of the grand-children, who should take the properties on the death of the testator's children, the grand-children not having been born at the testator's death:

Held, that the disposition in favour of the grand-children was invalid and the properties vested in the heirs of the testator as an intestacy, the grand-children taking no interest except as members of an undivided family who by birth acquire a right to the grandfather's properties.

Where a gift made in favour of the daughter also provides that after her the property should be enjoyed by her descendants, the fact that the gift over is invalid does not defeat the estate given to her.

Messrs. Mahomed Ibrahim and C. Pattabhirama Iyengar, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. V. Masilamani Pillai and T. S. Rajagopala Aiyar, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs, who are the sons of one Munisami Mudaliar, sue for a declaration that the bequests to the grand-children of the said Munisami made by his Will, dated the 6th August 1898, are invalid, and for a portion of the properties left by him. The plaint sets out that by his Will dated the 6th August 1898 the testator directed that his sons and daughters should have no interest in the estate and that the income should be accumulated for the benefit of the testator's grandchildren, who were to take all the property, that defendants Nos. 2 and 5 obtained Probate of the Will and have been guilty of various acts of mismanagement, that the bequests to the testator's grandchildren are void as they were not in existence when the testator died and that there has been an intestacy which entitles the plaintiffs, as the sons of the testator to claim the estate and a partition thereof between the various heirs of the testator.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 filed a written statement praying for the construction of the Will of their father and the ascertainment and delivery of their share. Defendants Nos. 2 and 5, the executors with Probate, deny that they undervalued the estate or were guilty of any of the acts set out in the plaint and pray that the Will may be construed and the rights of the parties ascertained. The 4th defendant filed a written statement, pleading that under the terms of the Will there is a valid bequest of house and ground No. 2/60 (item 3 of the plaint schedule) in her favour, that she and her husband acting in accordance with the terms of the Will contributed over Rs. 3,000 to the estate and that if the bequest in her favour be held to be invalid, then the sum of Rs. 3,000 be returned to her. Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 filed no written statements. Defendants Nos. 9 to 21 were directed to be made parties, as they were the grandchildren of the testator and had an interest in the suit which was to construe the Will. The guardian ad litem of defendants Nos. 9 to 15 filed a written statement setting up that the bequests were valid and that they had a share in the Will. Defendants Nos. 16 to 19 by their guardian ad litem filed a written statement stating that their rights should be established if the Court considers the bequests valid. Defendants Nos. 20 and 21 filed a written statement in similar terms.

The following issues were settled:—

I. Is there an intestacy to any and what extent?

II. To what relief are the parties entitled?

First issue.—Probate of the Will of Munusami Mudali has been filed as Exhibit A.

Munisami Mudaliar left no grandchildren at the time of his death and the question is whether the terms of the Will are valid. The Will directs that his properties, moveable and immoveable, should be enjoyed by the children of his first and second wife in common, but that they should have no right to the properties. It directs that the executors should collect the rents due, receive outstandings and pay liabilities, look after the maintenance of the family and perform the marriages of such of those children as are unmarried. The Will proceeds as follows :—" Besides thus remaining as one family and conducting everything in common all those, namely, the income derivable from the aforesaid houses, the income derivable from the cart stand and the income derivable from the bazaars and the incomes which my sons may get by employment or trade, should all be put together and both the aforesaid executors should look after those and on deducting the maintenance expenses of the family and Government tax and repairs and other expenses should give meals to 100 persons as a matter of charity annually in the month of Purattasi. On meeting all these expenses the remaining sum should be added as assets to the other properties and augmented. Those that do not abide to do so and refuse to give their earnings shall have no right whatever in this. They must go out with such earnings. Those that do not consent to remain in the family and do quarrel, if by their remaining anything bad should arise to the family, such of them should be removed from the family and if they have not any means of earning for their maintenance four or three should be given every month and those should remain and live in a room in the aforesaid house." It also provides that his second wife should continue to live in this family and conduct family affairs and that if she does not do so she should live in one room and receive a maintenance of three or four a month." The Will proceeds as follows:—" Nobody has any right in the aforesaid properties. Even if sold, the sale should be void. Of the aforesaid properties the house bearing door No. 6/20 should be given as stridhanam to my first wife's daughter, Audi Lakshmi Ammal, and Chiranjeevi Munusami Mudaliar, Chiranjeevi Ponnusami Mudaliar, sons of my sister, and the members of that family should remain jointly with this family and from the total of all the incomes should be met (the expenses in connection with) the good and bad occurring to this family." It states that after the death of the above persons house No. 6/20 should be enjoyed by their descendants. As regards the other properties the Will provides as follows :- "All other properties should be enjoyed by my sons as long as they are alive and after that one-half should be enjoyed by the descendants of my first wife's sons and the other half share by the descendants of the second wife's sons." The scheme of the Will seems to be that his children by his first and second wives should remain together and hand over their earnings to the executors who are directed to support them, that the earnings so handed over and the rents of the properties collected with any surplus should be accumulated for the benefit of the grandchildren and that the property should be taken by the grandchildren on the death of his sons and daughters. It is not disputed that none of the grandchildren were born at the death of the testator and it is proved by the 1st plaintiff that the first grandchild was born three or four years after the testator's death. It is well-settled law that a bequest to persons who are not born at the date of the testator's death is invalid, and consequently the dispositions in the Will in favour of the grandchildren of the testator are invalid. Madras Act I of 1914, which declares the rights of Hindus to make transfers and bequests in favour of unborn persons, has no application, as the testator died long before the Act came into force and the Act has retrospective effect only to the extent that it applies to Wills made before the passing of the Act where the dispositions made are intended to come into operation at a time which is subsequent to the passing of this Act. Where the testator dies before the Act came into force, the properties would vest in his heirs in the event of an intestacy according to the law then in force and section 2 of the Act, as I read it, does not operate to divest such vesting. Moreover as no life-estate is given to the sons, it cannot be said that the gift to the grandchildren was intended to come into operation after the 14th February 1914, the date on which the Act was passed. Except the right to receive maintenance subject to certain conditions there has been no gift in favour of the sons. As the gift to children is invalid (except in the case of house No. 6/20, item 3 in the plaint to which I shall refer later on), there has been no gift in favour of the sons and daughters even for their lives, it follows that there has been intestacy so far as such properties are concerned. The directions in the Will that the daughters are to be maintained out of the estate is valid, and due provision will have to be made for their maintenance. Provision will have to be made for the marriage of the testator's daughters who have not yet been married. The result is that the sons and daughters take the properties as heirs under the Hindu Law, the grandchildren taking no interest except as members of an undivided family who by birth acquire a right to the grandfather's properties. As regards house No. 6/20 there is, in my opinion, a gift to the testator's daughter, Audi Lakshmi Ammal, as the Will says that house No. 6/20 should be given as stridhanam to her. It no doubt goes to state that after her, the property should be enjoyed by her descendants, but the fact that the gift over is invalid would not defeat the estate given to her. It is unnecessary to consider in this suit whether as between her and her children she has a power of alienation or not over the properties.

Second issue:—The result of my finding is that there is a valid direction in the Will whereby 100 persons should be fed annually in the month of Purattasi out of the income of the properties, except item 3 which is given to the daughter, that there is intestacy as regards the said properties and the rights of the parties are, therefore, to be determined under Hindu Law. The suit will be referred to the Chambers for an account being taken of the estate and effects of the deceased Munusami, and the executors will file accounts of the income and expenditure and the balance in their hands within a month from this date. Objections will be filed within two weeks after filing the accounts. After making provision for the feeding of one hundred persons in Purattasi every year, the properties will be divided between the sons of the testator in equal shares, subject to due provision being made for the maintenance of the daughters and the marriage expenses of such daughters as are unmarried. Costs will be reserved till after the accounts are filed and will be dealt with at the time of the passing of the final decree.

Order accordingly.

Mesne profits—Decree declaring liability of defendants, inoperative until extent and quality of liability determined—Amendment of decree once refused bars subsequent applications—Change of circumstances after decree—Remedy of decree-holder.

A decree declaring in general terms the liability of the defendants to pay mesne profits does not become operative till after the amount has been ascertained by the Court and the Court-fee prescribed by section 11 of the Court Fees Act has been paid by the decree-holder.

Kewal Kishan Singh v. Sookhari, 24 C 173; 1 C. W. N. 248, referred to.

A decree to be operative must define the extent and quality of the liability of the defendants for mesne profits.

When an application for the amendment of a decree has once been refused on the merits, the decision is conclusive between the parties.

Langat Singh v. Janki Koer, 12 Ind. Cas. 151; 39 C 265; 14 C. L. J. 481, referred to.

Where the amendment of a decree is required on the ground of subsequent change of circumstances, the decree-holders are not entitled to have it amended by an application to the Court which passed it, but may have their remedy in a suit appropriately framed to set aside the decree.

Musammat Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur, 2 Ind. Cas. 129, 13 C. W. N. 197; 10 C. L. J. 420, referred to.

Rule against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated 20th November 1911, and appeal against an order of the District Judge, Jessore, dated 29th June 1912, rejecting an appeal against the above-mentioned order.

JUDGMENT.—The substantial question in controversy in this Rule is, whether it was competent to the Subordinate Judge to entertain an application for amendment of a decree for mesne profits made on the 15th September 1906. The circumstances under which this question requires consideration may be briefly stated.

The predecessor-in-interest of the opposite parties to the Rule instituted a suit on the 15th December 1896 for declaration of title to immoveable property, for recovery of possession thereof and for mesne profits. The petitioners are the representatives of the first defendant in that litigation. On the 28th June 1897, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit for possession. Under that decree the plaintiff became entitled to recover possession of the disputed property from the defendants and also to realise costs of the suit from them. As regards the claim for mesne profits, the decree of the Subordinate Judge stated, "the plaintiff do get mesne profits from the 6th January 1896 up to the date of recovery of possession". But the decree did not specify the amount of mesne profits, nor did it state explicitly any particular defendants from whom mesne profits were recoverable. Two of the defendants other than the predecessor of the petitioners preferred an appeal to the District Judge, to which the plaintiff alone was joined as a party respondent. This appeal was dismissed on the 6th September 1898, and an appeal against the decree of the District Judge was dismissed by this Court on the 12th December 1900. On the 6th April 1903 the decree-holder applied for assessment of mesne profits. Two Commissioners were appointed to ascertain the amount of mesne profits, but before this report could be considered by the Court, the decree-holder and the present petitioners had come to terms on the 19th November 1904. The decree-holder applied to the Court, and in the application he stated that the two defendants, now petitioners before this Court were ready to pay Rs. 1,500, that the payment was to be made by an assignment to him of a mortgage-decree held by them, and that they had accordingly agreed that Rs. 1,500 be deducted from such amount of mesne profits as might be settled by the Court, and that a decree for the balance might be passed only as against the other defendants to the suit. On the same date, the Court held that the amount of mesne profits was Rs. 4,295 and after deduction of Rs. 1,500 according to the terms of the compromise mentioned, made a decree for the balance, namely, Rs. 2,798. The Subordinate Judge in his order recited that the two defendants, now petitioners before this Court, had come to terms with the decree-holder and that they had agreed to set off the sum of Rs. 1,500 from the ascertained amount of mesne profits, and then he added that whether they should still be proceeded against or not was a matter that rested with the decree-holder and that the Court could make no order on that point. Under what circumstances this order was made, cannot now be definitely ascertained. The Subordinate Judge apparently overlooked that the decree-holder in his petition has explicitly stated that in view of the promised payment of Rs. 1,500, he would have no further claim against the two judgment-debtors, and it was on this condition that the Pleader for the two judgment-debtors had signified his assent to the compromise, as is clear from an examination of the petition which has been placed before us. It is worthy of note, however, that the order did not explicitly state from which of the judgment-debtors the sum of Rs. 2,795 was recoverable; but it has been argued that the order, taken as a whole and not interpreted in the light of the statement in the petition of compromise, implied that the sum was recoverable from all the judgment-debtors inclusive of the two who had promised to pay Rs. 1,500. But although this order was recorded on the 19th November 1904, no formal decree for mesne profits was drawn up. It transpires from an examination of the order sheet in the proceeding that the decree-holder was called upon to pay the deficit Court-fee under section 11 of the Court Fees Act. The fee was not paid for a considerable time, and was not till the 15th September 1906 upon an application of the decree-holder, dated the 30th August preceding, the Court proceeded to draw up a formal decree. The decree drawn up on the 15th September 1906 was in these terms: "It is ordered and decreed that the decree-holder do get Rs. 4,295-12-4½ gandas as wasilat from the judgment-debtors. Out of this, in accordance with the amicable settlement between the said decree-holder and the defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and in pursuance to the decree-holder's petition deducting Rs. 1,500, Rs. 2,795-12-4½ gandas is assessed as the amount of wasilat due to the decree-holder from the judgment-debtors other than Nos. 7 and 8, and judgment-debtors other than Nos. 7 and 8 do pay to the decree-holders Rs. 985-0-6 as costs of the suit." It will be observed that under the decree as finally drawn up, the seventh and eighth defendants were absolved from all liability to pay mesne profits. Subsequently, on the 10th December 1906, the decree-holder applied for amendment of the decree on the ground that it was at variance with the order of the 19th November 1904. This application was dismissed on the 16th February 1907. The Subordinate Judge held that the order of the 19th November 1904 must be read along with the petition of that date and that the decree as finally drawn up had given effect to the order so interpreted. No steps were taken by the decree-holder to have this order of the Subordinate Judge set aside. In the interval, the decree-holder had instituted a suit on the 17th January 1906 for specific performance of an agreement to lease certain property which, he alleged, had been made with him by the judgment-debtors as part of the consideration for the settlement of the 19th November 1904. The decree-holder was successful in the Court of first instance and the suit was decreed on the 13th September 1906. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit on the 20th May 1907; he held in substance that the alleged agreement had not been established. An appeal against the decree of the District Judge was dismissed by this Court on the 16th August 1910. On the 13th July 1911, the representatives of the original decree-holder initiated the present proceedings for modification of the consent decree of the 15th September 1906. The substantial ground upon which relief was claimed was that there had been a partial failure of the consideration on which the consent decree was based, and that in the interests of justice the decree should be varied under the altered circumstances. The relief which he sought was an alteration of the decree, so that the present petitioners might be made liable for mesne profits along with the other defendants in the original suit. The Subordinate Judge entertained this application, and although he felt doubtful under what provision of the law, if any, the applicant might be entitled to relief, he came to the conclusion that the amendment should be allowed. This order was sought to be challenged by way of an appeal to the District Judge, who, however, gave effect to the objection of the decree-holder that the appeal presented to him was incompetent. We are now invited by the petitioners to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction, on the assumption that the view of the District Judge was correct. The order of the Subordinate Judge has been supported in this Court on behalf of the decree-holder on two distinct grounds.

It has been argued, in the first place, that the decree drawn up on the 15th September 1906 is at variance with the order of the 19th November 1904 and should be amended on this ground alone. Before we deal with this contention, it is necessary to advert for a moment to the argument addressed to us at one stage that the decree drawn up on the 15th September 1906 was superfluous and that the only operative decree in the case is the decree made by the Subordinate Judge on the 15th December 1896, by which he held that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits. In support of this view it was further contended that the application of the 30th August 1906 by which the Court was invited by the decree-holder to draw up a formal decree was also superfluous. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention. The only operative decree for mesne profits in this case is the decree drawn up on the 15th September 1906 on the basis of the order of the 19th November 1904. There is no foundation for the contention that an operative decree for mesne profits was made by the Subordinate Judge on the 15th December 1896. That decree, as we have already stated, merely declared in general terms the liability of the defendants to pay mesne profits to the successful plaintiffs. The nature of such a preliminary adjudication may be described in the words of Lord Watson in the case of Radha Prasad Singh v. Lal Saheb Rai (1): "None of the defendants were by that decree made judgment-debtors for mesne profits, in the sense that their property could be attached by virtue of it. The decree, no doubt, found that defendants in the suit were accountable for mesne profits, and by that finding they were bound; but it did not ascertain the amount of such profits, or determine the important question whether the defendants were liable jointly or severally in respect of their wrongful possession. There was no adjudication upon any of these matters until . . . . for the first time the appellant obtained a money-decree which was capable of being put into execution;" a decree to be operative must define the extent and quality of the liability of the defendants for mesne profits, which were ascertained for the first time by the final decree." This description is accurately applicable to the preliminary decree in the case before us, where there was as a matter of fact no decree for mesne profits in existence till the 15th September 1906. As was pointed out in Kewal Kishan Singh v. Sookhari (2), there could not be a decree for mesne profits capable of execution, till after the amount had been ascertained by the Court and the Court-fees prescribed by section 11 of the Court Fees Act had been paid by the decree-holder. The true position is, therefore, that the decree-holders, if they feel aggrieved by the decision of the Court, must seek to amend the decree of the 15th September 1906. The question consequently requires consideration whether it is open to them, in this proceeding, to seek that relief. As already stated, on the 10th December 1906 the decree-holders did apply to the Court below to amend the decree on the ground that it was, as drawn up, not in conformity with the order of the 19th November 1904. That application was refused on the 16th February 1907. It is plain, therefore, upon the authority of the decision of this Court in Langat Singh v. Janki Koer (3), that it is no longer open to the decree-holders to seek amendment of the decree of the 15th September 1906 on the very ground which was held untenable and was overruled on the 16th February 1907. The order of that date, whether it was rightly or wrongly made, is conclusive between the parties. The first ground upon which amendment is claimed must consequently be overruled.

The second ground, and this is really the substantial ground, is that circumstances have so altered that in the interests of justice the decree of the 15th September 1906 should be varied. In our opinion, even if the contention of the decree-holders be assumed, for the purposes of the argument and for that purpose alone, to be well founded on the merits, they are not entitled to have the decree varied by way of an amendment in these proceedings. If the circumstances have altered, the decree-holders, as was explained in the case of Musammat Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (4), where the previous decisions on the subject will be found analysed and reviewed, may have their remedy in a suit appropriately framed to set aside the decree. They cannot ask the Court to amend the decree, because it is conceded for this purpose that the decree as then made was correctly drawn up and it requires to be altered only by reason of events which have subsequently happened. But it is not necessary to rest our decision on this narrow basis, because we are clearly of opinion that no ground has been made out to set aside the decree of the 15th September 1906.

On behalf of the decree-holders it has been urged that on the 19th November 1904, the consent order was made on the assumption that the decree-holders would obtain a lease of certain property from the judgment debtors, and that as they have subsequently failed to get such a lease they are entitled to have the matter re-opened. But the obvious answer to this contention is that there never was such an agreement; the suit for specific performance of the alleged agreement to lease was

(1) 17 I. A. 150; 18 A. 53; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 900.
(2) 24 C. 178; 1 C. W. N. 213.
(3) 12 Ind. Cas. 151; 39 C. 265; 14 C. L. J. 481.
(4) 2 Ind. Cas. 129; 13 C. W. N. 1197; 10 C. L. J. 420.

dismissed on the ground that the agreement had not been established; this decision is conclusive between the parties and operates as res judicata. There is further the significant circumstance that no mention of the alleged agreement to lease is found in the petition of the decree-holders, dated the 19th November 1904, to which the judgment-debtors assented. If there had been in fact an agreement to lease as part of the consideration for the settlement, one would have expected to find it mentioned in the petition itself. The position consequently is that the Subordinate Judge has given effect to the compromise at which the parties arrived on the 19th November 1904, and the decree-holders have entirely failed to establish that there has been a partial failure of the consideration for that compromise. Consequently, there is no reason why the decree based on that compromise should be varied. The second ground upon which the decree-holders seek to have the decree amended or varied cannot be sustained on the merits.

We may add that we are satisfied that the justice of this case rests entirely on the side of the petitioners and that in view of the express terms of the petition of compromise, dated the 19th November 1904, we should not in any circumstances be disposed to give effect to a technical objection, even if any such could be taken.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute, the order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 20th November 1911 discharged and the application for amendment dismissed with costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

In view of the entirely untenable nature of the grounds upon which the application to the Court below was based, we assess the hearing fee in this Court at thirty gold mohurs.

The appeal is not pressed and is dismissed.

Rule made absolute;
Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), s. 20, construction of—Whether suit barred, where zerait in occupation of tenant entered in the cess return simply as zerait—False entry in the return, effect of.

Section 20 of the Bengal Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880) does not enact that if a proprietor, whether by mistake or otherwise, enters a piece of land in the wrong part of his return, he thereby loses his right to claim rent. The Cess Act is a fiscal Act, and its object is that no land within the estate should escape assessment. It is immaterial for this purpose whether zerait land is entered as in the possession of a tenant or the khas possession of the zemindar; and this is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 20. The zemindar will be liable to punishment only if he enters land of one class in another class.

Appeals against the decree of the District Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 5th August 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, Sitamarhi, dated 18th April 1911.

Babu Jogendra Charan Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Babu Lachmi Narain Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is admitted by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the value of the suit concerned being less than Rs. 100, Second Appeals Nos. 3343, 3344, 3345 and 3346 must fail under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act. These appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

There remain Second Appeals Nos. 2889 and 3347. The only question argued is whether the suits out of which these appeals arise have been rightly dismissed on account of the provisions of section 20 of the Bengal Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880). Both Courts have dismissed the suits, holding that it was the plaintiff's duty, when filing in 1898 the cess return concerning that portion of his estate which related to the land in suit, to mention in the return that the lands in suit were in the possession of the tenant defendants.

Now it is admitted by the learned Vakil for the respondents before me that the lands have been mentioned as the serait lands of the proprietor, but it is urged that this was not sufficient and that the omission to enter the lands as in the possession of a tenant brings under the operation of section 20 and debars the plaintiffs from claiming rent. Section 20 does not seem to me to enact that if a proprietor, whether by mistake or otherwise, enters a piece of land in the wrong part of his return he thereby loses his right to claim rent. The Cess Act is a fiscal enactment and its object is that no land within the estate should escape assessment.

It is immaterial for the purpose of the Collector whether the land is entered as in the possession of the tenant or the khas possession of the zemindar. The learned Vakil for the respondent argues that the Act intends to protect the tenant from the fraud of the zemindar and that, therefore, wrong entry detrimental to the tenant ought to bring the zemindar within the purview of section 20. I do not accept this interpretation of the law. The zemindar is liable to punishment for making a false return if he enters land of one class in another class, but for the purpose of section 20 it is sufficient, as in the present case, that serait land in the possession of the defendant was entered in the return merely as serait land. Reliance is placed on an unreported decision of Gupta, J., in Appeal No. 241 of 1904, but the facts of the case are not fully before me and I hesitate to accept it as authority in favour of the respondents. The result is that the suits should not, in my opinion, be dismissed on the preliminary ground that section 20, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a bar. The appeals are decreed and the suits are remanded to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law. Costs will abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

APPASAMI AIYAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58 (c)—Sale or mortgage—Sale-deed by mortgagor—Agreement to re-convey by mortgagee within a limited period.

Where a mortgagor executed a deed of absolute sale in favour of his mortgagee who was about to sue on his mortgage, and ten days later the mortgagee executed an agreement to re-convey the property within 18 months if the mortgagor paid the mortgage money:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the transaction amounted only to an absolute sale with an agreement to re-convey, and not to a mortgage by conditional sale.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 17 of 1910.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, R. Kuppuswami Aiyar, E. Doraisami Aiyar and G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been argued yesterday and to-day with great ability by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, but he has not persuaded us that the Subordinate Judge was wrong. The question is whether two documents, one of which (Exhibit B) is in terms a deed of absolute sale and the other (Exhibit A) an agreement to re-convey executed ten days later by the vendee under the previous document, constitute a mortgage by conditional sale. Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, clause (c), says that where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property on condition that on payment of the mortgage money the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale. And to see whether the ostensible sale referred to in the section when taken with the agreement for re-conveyance was intended to operate as a mortgage by conditional sale, it is well settled that the surrounding circumstances have to be looked to, as ruled by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Situl Pershad v. Inch.

mi Purshad (1). That does not mean that evidence is to be admitted to contradict the terms of the documents in which the parties have embodied their intentions, namely, the deed of sale and the agreement to re-convey. That, we think, was all that was intended by the decision of the Judicial Commitee in Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2). Applying these principles to the present case, we have to deal with certain property including a mortgage interest, which was acquired by the mortgagor between the years 1891 and 1898 for nearly Rs. 48,000. The mortgagor, who was carrying on business on a large scale, had executed mortgages on this property to the extent of Rs. 45,000 and he had paid no interest on the mortgages and a little over Rs. 48,000 was due on the date of the transaction, that is to say, a little more than what had been paid for the suit properties by the mortgagor. It is quite clear that the mortgagee, the defendant, was dissatisfied with this state of things and thought the time had come for him to realize his security. Accordingly he expended a sum of over Rs. 1,300 in the purchase of Court-fee stamp paper with the view of suing on his mortgage. Thereupon both parties sought the advice of their Pleaders. This was on the 20th January and on that day the plaintiff, the mortgagor, undoubtedly entered into an agreement to sell the suit property to the mortgagee, the defendant; and it is alleged for the plaintiff, though denied for the defendant, that on the same day the mortgagee undertook to execute an agreement to reconvey. We have come to the conclusion in the plaintiff's favour that on that date the mortgagee did sign an undertaking to execute a proper agreement for re-conveyance in the mortgagor's favour. The next thing that happened was that the mortgagor executed an absolute sale-deed, Exhibit B, in favour of the defendant on the 25th. Some difficulty appears to have arisen at this stage, and the plaintiff was not willing to register the sale-deed executed by him until he got the agreement to re-convey executed by the mortgagee; and the mortgagee apparently was not very ready to execute this agreement, and the matter would appear to have been referred to a Vakil, Panchapakesa Sastri, with certain instructions contained in Exhibit C. This document speaks of a draft (by which appears to be meant the draft of an agreement prepared in pursuance of the mortgagee's undertaking to execute an agreement to re-convey) as having been handed to this Vakil. There was also given him on the same day, i. e., the 27th, a letter by the brother-in-law of the mortgagee undertaking that the mortgagee would execute an agreement for re-conveyance. The sale-deed was then registered on the 28th and on the 5th of February the mortgagee executed an agreement to re-convey, but subsequently refused to register it and registration had to be effected compulsorily. We do not think that these difficulties, which arose in carrying out the original bargain of the 20th January, really make much difference. We think they show a certain reluctance to carry out the terms at first agreed upon; but we think the case must properly be dealt with, as contended for by the plaintiff, as if in fact these two documents had been agreed to be executed on the 20th.

Then what we have got to do is to look to the surrounding circumstances to see whether what was intended was a mortgage or a sale. That is a question to be decided in each case on the particular facts of the case. Here we have a strong indication that what was intended was an out and out conveyance, in the fact that the defendant had taken steps to file a suit for the purpose of realizing his security and put an end to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee; and we have the further fact that in Exhibit A a very short term of 18 months is given within which the plaintiff was to have the right to re-conveyance on payment of the mortgage money. It has been held in several cases that the fact that only a short period such as this is given, is a very strong indication that it was not the intention to create or perpetuate the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee. The facts here rather suggested that this agreement to re-convey was merely meant as a concession made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor to induce him to save the trouble and expense of litigation. There is a further small indication pointing the same way, and it is this: though in fact the agreement to make a re-conveyance was arrived at on the 20th January, yet in the agreement, Exhibit A, which was executed several days afterwards, a request to execute this re-conveyance is said to have been made by the mortgagor "this day", which day was then ten days after the deed of absolute sale; and the deed was executed in this form without objection by the plaintiff. Another point which has also to be considered is whether the price paid was inadequate or not, because when it is shown that the price was clearly inadequate, that raises a strong presumption that what was intended was a mortgage. In this case the price was Rs. 2,000 more than the property had cost in the course of its acquisition between 1891 and 1898. The evidence that it is now worth very much more was treated by the Subordinate Judge as unreliable, and we think that it has not been shown that this was an inadequate price, at any rate, to such an extent as to afford an indication that what was intended was a mortgage rather than a sale. On the whole we think that on the facts of this case the inference is that the mortgagee was never prepared to consent to more than a mere agreement to re-convey and that the transaction only amounted to an absolute sale with an agreement to re-convey and not to a mortgage by conditional sale.

The conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Under Order XXXIII, rule 11, the appellant must pay the Court-fee to the Government.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 98, cls. (3) and (7), 108—Common Manager, powers of—Application under s. 108, whether excluded.

The powers of a common Manager under section 98 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act are the same as the co-owners jointly might, but for his appointment, have exercised.

Clause 7 of section 98 giving the Manager power to make any application under section 108 does not operate as an exclusion.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Pabna, dated the 18th of November 1911, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge of Pabna, dated the 25th of January 1911.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babus Dwarkanath Chakravarty and Prokas Chandra Mozumdar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, Counsel, Babus Brojo Lal Chakravarty and Purna Chandra Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the common Manager of the maliks of Kooli Salikha or Koir Salikha Debi, Fatehpore, forthe ascertainment of the situation, incidents and boundaries of a certain saradari jote under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both the lower Courts have determined that the defendants held a jote of 47 khadas and 13 pakhis with present rental of Rs. 191-4, that they are not permanent tenure-holders and that their rent is liable to enhancement during the continuance of their tenancy. They have determined the situation on finding that the plot C is the only plot found in the actual possession of the defendants, and that as this is 202 bighas and odd cottahs short of the area originally demised to the defendants, an adjoining 202 bighas and odd from plot E to the North East of plot C is added to it to make up the balance.

The defendants have appealed and they contend, first, that it is not competent for the common Manager to file an application under section 158; second, that this is not a bona fide application under section 158, but to all intents and purposes a suit in ejectment, and should not have been admitted under the jurisdiction conferred by section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; third, that as far back as 1891 the defendants openly claimed a permanent interest in the land in suit to the knowledge of the landlords and they have, therefore, acquired a permanent right by prescription; fourth, that the defendants have all along claimed to be in possession of the whole mouzah and as the onus is on the landlord to show what the correct boundaries are of the parcels rightfully in possession of the tenants and he has failed to do so, the landlord cannot eject the tenants as trespassers from the adjoining land of the mousah, which they have occupied by encroachment, though he may be able to claim additional rent. He certainly must show that the encroachment took place within 12 years of the suit; and fifthly, there is the further contention that the factum of possession and title has been decided only in reference to the Survey maps, and any entry in such maps as to title to individual lands is inadmissible in evidence.

As regards the first point, it was never taken in either of the lower Courts. Had it been necessary we should have felt it our duty to allow the Manager to amend his plaint by inserting that he was suing on behalf of all the proprietors. It is contended that the objection is not merely of form but of substance, because the proprietors, when they recover the management of their own properties, will be able to re-open the question if the Manager fails in this suit. The objection is based on an ingenious distinction drawn between the powers of a Receiver under the Civil Procedure Code and a common Manager under the Bengal Tenancy Act; and Order XL, rule 1, is referred to. Section 98 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is, it is contended, exhaustive of the powers of a common Manager and clause 7 of that section having especially empowered him to bring a suit under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, all other suits under the Bengal Tenancy Act are excluded from his initiative. In reply, it is pointed out that the proprietors cannot bring a suit, because ex hypothesi they can not agree and it has been held in the case of Srimutty Sibo Sundari Ghose v. Raj Mohan Guho (1) that the common Manager is competent to sue on behalf of the co-owners for recovery of possession of land. At page 216 the Judges say: "We are not prepared to limit the powers of a common Manager, as set out in section 98 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which he is declared to have the same powers as the co-owners jointly might, but for his appointment, have exercised. The sub-section further declares 'and the co-owners shall not exercise any such power.'" We agree with this view as regards suits in general, and we are unable to say that the provision of clause 7 giving the Manager power to make any application under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act operates as an exclusion. It is true that it has been held that applications under section 103 are suits, but the framers of the Bengal Tenancy Act regarded them as in terms applications to Revenue Officers and may have thought it necessary ex majori cautela to reserve the power to the Manager to sue before the Revenue Courts as well as the general powers given by clause 3. We, therefore, think that there is nothing in this point.

As regards the second point, this also does not appear to have been taken in the Courts below. But it does appear that the Courts have addressed themselves to the question at issue under section 158, though there is one incidental question about the boundaries which will require further consideration later on in our judgment, and it is not the plaintiff's fault if the defendants raised a defence covering ground which took the case out of the purview of section 158.

Had they established that by encroachment they had acquired more land than that demised to them, or that they had possessed the whole village by virtue of their lease and asserted their title thereto for more than 12 years to the knowledge of the landlord, the plaintiff's case would have been dismissed as not competent under section 158. But the case as laid does not appear to be outside the scope of that section.

This brings us to the third point as to what the actual facts are which govern the alleged assertion by the defendants in 1891 of their right to permanent tenure to the knowledge of the plaintiff. The finding is that two of the putnidars of fractional shares of the village brought two rent suits in 1891 and stated in their plaint that the entire mousah was included in the jote. This, the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court finds rightly, would not be binding on the plaintiff who did not grant the putni, and the finding on evidence, which establishes that the big plot B which is within the survey boundary of the mousah never did and never could have belonged to the defendants, inasmuch as it has always been held by tenants of another mousah altogether, is fatal to the contention. The statements in the plaint are erroneous in fact and there is nothing to show that the defendants asserted such a right to the knowledge of the landlord till 1893, and this would be within the period of limitation, the suit having been brought early in 1904. In no previous rent suit is it shown that the defendants ever asserted a right to the whole mousah and they were clearly induced to do so by the erroneous report of the Revenue Officer in the suit of 1891. On the proved and admitted facts, therefore, it does not appear that the defendants ever claimed a permanent right either in the whole village, or in the tenure which the plaintiff admits they had, more than 12 years before suit; and the numerous cases which have been cited before us, of which we need only mention Tekaetnee Goura Coomaree v. Musammat Saroo Coomaree (2), have no application.

As regards the fourth point, we need only point out that this is not a case of encroachment, and the rulings cited to us in this connection also have no application. The question is what was the tenancy demised, its area, incidents and boundaries. The defendants say it was from the first the whole village, and they put forward no case of encroachment. It is found as a fact that not only had they no possession in plot B at any time, but that plots D and E were in the khas possession of the maliks. It is true that the onus is on the landlord to show the correct boundary, and for this reason apparently the lower Courts have carved out an additional estate out of plot E, which in strict law the defendants were not entitled to. It was found as a fact that the defendants only had possession in plot C, but as this does not make up the full area of the holding admittedly demised to them, the lower Courts held that they must have the balance of their holding from contiguous lands in the possession of the plaintiff as landlord. This might have formed the basis of a cross-appeal by the landlords. But they have not appealed, and we see no reason to interfere with the decision of the Court below which has done substantial justice, though perhaps going beyond the scope of section 158, to give the defendants their full tenancy.

As to the fifth point, we do not find that the lower Courts have decided the question of possession and title on reference to the Survey maps only. There is the evidence of the rent suits, of the dealings of the defendants with their tenants, the pleadings of the parties, and the trying Court says: "On the oral and documentary evidence in the record I am unable to hold that the jote includes the entire village." The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is one of affirmance; and although there is one passage in his judgment which at first sight appears to base his finding on the Survey maps alone, he also refers to evidence showing the variation of rent, and he also says: "the oral and numerous documentary evidence in the case abundantly goes to prove that the jote in question comprises 47 khadas and 13 pakhis of land only and not the entire Mousah Kair Salikha and that the rest of the village is in the khas possession of the maliks." This is a finding of fact which we cannot go behind in second appeal.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE MERCANTILE BANK—PLAINTIFFS

versus

TAHILRAM PESSUMAL—DEFENDANT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 128 to 145—Surety, liability of—Contract of guarantee—Loss arising after breach—Unreasonable delay in re-sale—Discharge of broker—Failure to object to statement of accounts—Evidence of correctness.

A contract of guarantee, being a contract stricti-simi juris, the surety is entitled to insist on a rigid adherence to the terms of his obligation by the creditor, and is liable only for such loss as arises directly from a breach of the terms of the contract actually guaranteed.

A guarantee broker is discharged from liability if the seller suffers loss on account of his own unreasonable delay in re-selling the goods after the breach of the contract.

Where a statement substantially affecting a person's material interests is made to him in writing, and the circumstances are such that he would certainly or probably have objected had the statement been incorrect, then his silence can be treated as an admission, that is, as evidence, but not necessarily as proof, of the correctness of the statement.

Messrs. T. G. Elphinston and R. B: Teckchand Udavdas, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on an account. Defendant acted as guarantee broker of the plaintiffs' Bank for several years, and as such guranteed contracts made with the Bank for the purchase of gold and silver and for telegraphic transfers or demand drafts on Bombay. As collateral security defendant deposited the title-deeds of certain properties described in the plaint. Plaintiffs claim Rs. 3,217-13-2 with costs and interest, and ask for sale of the immoveable properties over which they claim an equitable charge. Defendant, in his written statement and in his written objections to the account sued on, raises certain defences which are embodied in the following issues; he makes a counter-claim of Rs. 2,924-12-1:—

1. Did defendant act as a broker of the plaintiffs from 1900 ?

2. Did the account between the parties commence in 1900, if so, is the suit bad as being on a part of the account ?

3. Is the defendant disentitled from going into the account beyond the year 1909 by reason of his acquiescence ?

4. Did the plaintiffs vary the terms of the contract with Assanmal Rijhumal and Hasomal Moolchand ?

5. Is the suit time-barred ?

6. Is the defendant entitled to any brokerage on all or any of the items shown in schedule A filed by him; if so, to what ?

7. Were contracts referred to in rejoinder E made during the absence of the defendant ? If so, is defeadant entitled to brokerage thereon ?

8. To what brokerage is the defendant entitled on items shown in schedule B filed by the defendant ?

9. Is the defendant's claim time-barred ?

10. On account being taken what is due to either parties ?

Some of these issues have been found during trial to be of little or no importance. On Mr. Elphinston's stating on behalf of plaintiff that the account sued on was a mutual, open and current one and that he no longer contended that defendant's counter-claim was time-barred, Mr. Kalumal withdrew also his plea of limitation. Issues 5 and 9 were consequently struck out.

Nor is the first issue one that requires any lengthy discussion. The first brokerage paid was on the 29th May 1901, and defendant must have commenced working sometime about the end of 1900 or the beginning of 1901. At first he was treated as an ordinary broker, and his earnings were credited in a general brokerage account. Gradually he began to monopolise the business of the Bank, and on the 12th January 1903, when the brokerage account up to date was settled by the payment of the total due, there was opened a current account wherein all brokerage thereafter earned was credited and all loans and sums withdrawn debited. There can be no doubt that the brokerage account as upto 12th January 1903 was settled, and the account with which this suit is concerned ran as from that date. The whole account is filed and forms exhibited.

This disposes of the first two issues.

It has been proved to my entire satisfaction that brokerage was credited to Tahilram as it was earned. In case of telegraphic transfers and demand drafts, the brokerage was considered to have been earned as soon as the transaction was completed; in the case of sale of gold and silver, the brokerage was credited as soon as the last bar was delivered and paid for. Tahilram was in the habit of satisfying himself that all brokerage earned was promptly and correctly credited to his account; he spent several hours every day in the Bank premises and was freely permitted to ascertain from the clerks from day to day how his account stood. He had his own small staff of clerks always on the Bank premises. He was supplied with a pass book which was regularly written up, and each half year he was presented with a statement showing the balance due to him and intimating that if no objection was received it would be taken as correct. Of these facts there can be, I consider, no reasonable doubt.

So far as the record goes, there was no objection made to the correctness of the account until October 1909, after Tahilram had received notice of dismissal. Mr. Elphinston contends that these facts operate as an estoppel and that defendant is now debarred from contesting the correctness of the account. It is admitted by the Bank that on many occasions the brokerage credited was less than the usual rate and that for many transactions no brokerage at all was credited. This is explained by the assertion that Tahilram would, on occasion, offer to take half brokerage or none in consideration of the Bank making a corresponding reduction in the rate quoted by them; he would thus, at any rate, earn his brokerage from the purchaser and would perhaps introduce a new constituent. I fully believe that such was the practice. But defendant contends that he is entitled to brokerage at the ordinary rate on all admitted transactions, unless the Bank can now prove that he consented to work for half brokerage, or free; he contends also that he was entitled to brokerage on all telegraphic transfer and demand draft business transacted by other brokers, provided that he was engaged at the time on work for the Bank. This is in accordance with the note added by the Manager to Exhibit 1. There were, admittedly, several transactions for which no brokerage has been credited to him because a claim for brokerage was put forward and admitted by some other broker, and Mr. Kalumal states that he is in a position to show that on the same day that certain of these transactions were effected, Tahilram put through some operation for the Bank, and he asks the Court to presume that in all such cases his client was actually engaged in Bank business at the very time when the telegraphic transfer or demand draft transaction was effected.

Hitherto, no evidence has ever been adduced, in any English or Indian Court, to establish that the apparent acquiescence of the customer in the correctness of his account as shown in his pass book amounts to an implied settlement of account. Nor can estoppel be pleaded unless there are facts in evidence which bring the case within section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act. But where a statement substantially affecting a person's material interests is made to him in writing and the circumstances are such that he would certainly or probably have objected had the statement been incorrect, then his silence can be treated as an admission, that is, as evidence, but not necessarily as proof, of the correctness of the statement. The weight that should be given to this evidence depends on the circumstances of each case. And where, as in this case, the person affected was in the habit of scrutinising his account frequently and of promptly objecting to omissions or errors, his acquiescence extending over a long period of years is, in my opinion, at least sufficient to shift the onus of proof. If defendant desires to press his contention that he did not agree to accept half brokerage or to work free in those transactions where he has been credited with only half brokerage or none, he must prove affirmatively that there was no agreement and must explain satisfactorily his acquiescence in the account. Nor in those cases where defendant contends that he is entitled to brokerage, on the ground that he was engaged in the Bank's affairs when the transaction was put through by some other broker, will it be sufficient to merely prove that he transacted some business on the same day, for that is a fact which must have been within his knowledge when he made the admission which has shifted the burden of proof. He must show that he was actually in the bazar working silver, etc., for the Bank at the very time when the direct business was done. This disposes of the third issue, and will constitute sufficient instructions to the Commissioner when taking accounts and dealing with issues 6, 7, 8 and 10.

The only issue remaining to be dealt with at this stage is the fourth, and this embodies the main dispute between the parties. It will be necessary, first of all, to ascertain the precise nature of the contract of guarantee between the Bank and the defendant.

An initial difficulty is presented by the fact that there is no written contract of guarantee offered in evidence by plaintiffs. Tahilram asserts that there was a written contract and that Exhibit 49 is a copy of it. But this document contains no date, and Tahilram is unable to supply it. The clerk who made the copy cannot remember what the original was, and can only suggest that it was a pencil draft prepared at Tahilram's instance. There is no clear reference to this agreement in any document or letter, nor is it mentioned in the pleadings. None of the many members of the Bank staff who have gone into the witness-box have any knowledge of it. Seth Isardas states that a document was shown to him by Tahilram, but he cannot remember if it was a draft or a completed agreement or whether it was in the form of a letter or a regular contract. It is impossible to hold it proved that Exhibit 49 is a copy of the original contract.

Plaintiffs put in two documents, Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 50. Exhibit 1 is a letter dated 7th May 1903, addressed by Tahilram Pessumal to the Manager, and is as follows:—

EXHIBIT No 1.

Karachi, 7th May 1903.

The Manager,
The Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd.,
Karachi.

Dear Sir,

I beg to hand you title-deeds and sanad of property, marked No. 123 in map A-7 in Old Town, duly transfered to the Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd.

This property is to be held by you as security against any loans or advances you may from time to time make to me; as security against all contracts now outstanding that have been made by me and not yet fulfilld for the purchase or sale of Bar silver or Bar gold;

as security against any further contracts which may be made after this date for the purchase or sale of Bar silver or Bar gold.

And for the due fulfilment of contracts for sales of wire or demand on Bombay.

All such contracts I hereby undertake to guarantee and to refund any loss and all charges incurred by the Bank owing to the failure of any or all such contracts not being duly fulfilld.

It is understood that in the event of any loss the Bank will take the usual legal steps to endeavour to recover, any charges incurred, as mentioned above, will be borne by me.

Signed—Tahilram Pessumal.
Witness - R. Nicoll.

Ag. Manager, Mercantile Bank of India.
Karachi, 7th May 1903.

We agree to allow Tahilram brokerage on all Native T. T. business done direct when he is in the Bazar working silver, etc., for the Bank.

24-4-06. Signed—R. Nicoll, Manager.

The document bears a stamp of annas 8 only. Having regard to the form of the document and to the stamp, I cannot treat it as anything more than a letter accompanying the deposit of title-deeds, which incidentally contains an admission of some of the terms of the contract already entered into. Exhibit 50 is a similar letter, bearing no stamp, given with reference to old contracts with which we are not now concerned.

As it is admitted that defendant was guarantee broker of the Bank, it has been unnecessary for plaintiffs to prove the bare contract. From Exhibit 1 I can gather that defendant had agreed to guarantee all contracts for the sale of Bar silver and to refund any loss incurred by the Bank owing to any such contracts not being duly fulfilled, and that it was further agreed that, in the event of any loss, the Bank would take legal proceedings for the recovery of such loss, all charges being borne by defendant. No writing other than Exhibit 1 has been put in evidence to prove the terms of the contract of guarantee.

Mr. Kalumal contends that it was a condition precedent to defendant's liability that a decree should be obtained. Exhibit No. 1 does not certainly so state; there is an unconditional guarantee coupled with a declaration that it was understood that the Bank would take the usual legal steps to retrieve the loss. Excluding Exhibit 49 there is no writing in evidence from which we could fairly infer such an agreement. I attach no importance to Rustomjee's statement made in cross-examination and retracted that the Bank was bound to get a decree before debiting the broker.

Exhibit 3 is a form of sold-note issued by the Bank to all purchasers of bar silver, and has been put in as evidence of the terms of the contract effected between the Bank on the one hand, and Hassomal Moolchand and Assanmal Rijhumal on the other. It runs thus:—

To Karachi,

Sir,

We have sold to you through Broker about £. say Bars, bar silver of 17 or 17½ Betterness at Rs. per 100 tolas, to be shipped from London on or about and delivery to be taken and payment made within fifteen days from the date of arrival here. All duty to be paid by you.

Broker Manager.

On arrival of the silver, notice of arrival was sent in the form Exhibit 4, calling on the purchaser to take delivery within 15 days. A day or so before the expiry of this 15 days, a further notice was sent informing the purchaser that if delivery was not taken on due date, interest would be charged at 1 per cent. over the Presidency rate with a minimum of 7 per cent.

The law applicable is admirably summed up in Volume 15 of Halsbury's Laws of England, pages 439-551, and in sections 128 to 145 of the Indian Contract Act. Now, a surety is ordinarily said to be what is called a favoured creditor and a contract of a guarantee is said to be a contract strictissimi juris, that is to say, the surety is entitled to insist on a rigid adherence to the terms of his obligation by the creditor.

But the liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor: hence Tahilram was, under his suretyship contract, liable only to refund any loss which arose in the ordinary and natural course of things from the dealer's failure to take delivery of silver within 15 days after arrival.

He did not, by his guarantee, undertake to refund any loss which might arise from causes other than the bare failure to fulfil the strict terms of the contract guaranteed. Hence, if plaintiff waited an unreasonable time before re-selling and the loss realized arose, wholly or partly, from such unreasonable delay, then defendant is not, under his general contract, liable for such loss, for the simple reason that he did not agree to be.

If the re-sale was postponed with his consent and concurrence, then it would not discharge him. But he was not bound to warn the Bank against doing some action in contemplation, of which he had knowledge and which, if done, would discharge him; nor would mere knowledge of irregularity committed by the Bank necessarily amount to consent. Mr. Teckchand has argued that delay in re-selling would come within the terms of section 137, but a careful distinction must be maintained between variation of the contract, a breach of which forms the condition precedent to the surety's liability, and mere forbearance from extorting payment from the principal debtor after such liability has come into existence. There must be strict fulfilment of the condition precedent, the loss must arise directly from a breach of the terms of the contract actually guaranteed.

If a contract is varied with the surety's consent, the new contract with such variation must be strictly fulfilled or the surety is discharged (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 15, page 490). Again if the creditor omits to do anything which his duty to the surety requires him to do, and the eventual remedy of the surety himself against the principal debtor is thereby impaired, the surety is discharged. (section 139).

SATYABHUSHAN GHOSAL v. MONMOTHO NATH.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 18th of March 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, first Court, Alipore, dated the 16th March 1911.

Mr. B. C. Chatterjee and Babu Sarat Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra, Babus Narendra Chandra Bose and Mohini Mohun Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third defendant in a suit for arrears of rent. The case for the plaintiff is that Raja Kristo Chandra Ghosal of Bhukoilas held two tenancies under the predecessor of the plaintiff in the village Dekhin Sherpore in the southern suburbs of Calcutta, namely, an area of 9 bighas and 19 cottas at an annual rent of Rs. 10-11-12 gundas and another area of 28 bighas at an annual rent of Rs. 41-10-19 koras 1 krant. According to the plaintiff, the five defendants are the representatives-in-interest of Raja Kristo Chandra Ghosal and are in possession of the lands of the two tenancies. He consequently seeks to recover rent from them for the period from the beginning of the second half of the year 1310 to the end of the first three-quarters of the year 1313. The first defendant denied all connection with the lands of the tenancies. The third defendant, now appellant before us, stated that as the boundaries of the properties in arrears were not set out in the plaint, he was unable to identify the lands; he added that on inquiry he had ascertained that the village Dekhin Sherpore had ceased to exist from a long time and that he was consequently not liable for rent of lands not in his occupation. The fifth defendant stated that on partition amongst the co-sharers, the lands of the tenancies in suit had not fallen into his share, and that he could not, accordingly, be held responsible for rent. At the trial in the original Court it transpired that some of the defendants were not properly on the record, as the Manager of their estate, which was under the management of the Court of Wards, had not been served. The Court held that it was competent to the plaintiff to proceed as against the third and fifth defendants who were properly on the record. On the merits, however, the Court came to the conclusion that the lands of the tenancy had been acquired for public purposes under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act and that the defendants were not responsible for the rent. In this view the suit was dismissed. Upon appeal the District Judge has made a decree against the third and fifth defendants. He has held that the defendants had failed to prove that either the tenancy had terminated or that the lands had been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, because the evidence in this respect was not sufficiently accurate. On the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the third defendant that the suit should be dismissed, inasmuch as the plaintiff is not entitled to obtain a decree for the whole rent against two alone out of the several representatives of the original tenant. It has further been contended that on the merits the case has not been properly tried and that the plaintiff should be called upon to furnish the boundaries or such other materials as would enable the defendant to identify the lands in respect of which rent is claimed. In our opinion, both these contentions are well-founded and the suit must be re-tried.

As regards the first question, it is well settled, as was explained in the case of Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadra (1), that it is not competent to a landlord to choose arbitrarily some out of several representatives of the original tenant and to institute a suit for rent against such selected persons. Reference has, however, been made on behalf of the respondents to the cases of Khetter Mohan Pal v. Pran Oristo Kabiraj; (2) and Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (3) as authorities for the contrary view. The cases mentioned were discussed and explained in the judgment in Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadra (1). It was pointed out that in the first of these cases, the only principle affirmed was that it was not obligatory upon the landlord to join as parties in a suit for rent such of the representatives of the original tenant as had not notified to him the existence of their interest in the land.

(2) 3 C. W. N. 371.
(3) 11 C. W. N. 1026.

In the second case it was laid down that where A and B have made themselves jointly responsible for the fulfilment of an obligation in favour of X, X is entitled to call upon either of them to discharge the entire obligation. The case before us, however, is of an entirely different description. According to the plaintiff there was an engagement between his predecessor on the one hand and Raja Kristo Chandra Ghosal on the other; it is difficult to appreciate on what principle the representatives of the latter can be held jointly and severally liable for the entire rent. There is no suggestion that after the devolution of the interest of the original tenant on the present defendants, they attorned individually to the plaintiff and each of them undertook to pay the entire rent to him. The only inference which can legitimately be drawn is that there is a joint obligation and that such an obligation must be enforced in a suit in which all the representatives of the original tenant are parties. On behalf of the respondent stress has been laid, however, on the fact that as soon as a decree is obtained by the plaintiff in a suit so framed, he is at liberty to execute the decree against any one of the defendants for realisation of the entire judgment-debt. This, in our opinion, does not affect the decision of the question raised. Grave complications might obviously arise, if a landlord were allowed to institute a suit for recovery of arrears of rent against one or more out of the several representatives of the original tenant selected arbitrarily by him. In the first place, if such a suit were allowed to be maintained, in a subsequent suit by the person made responsible for the discharge of the entire obligation against his co-tenants for contribution, the latter would not be bound by the result of the principal litigation, and it would be open to them to defeat the claim for contribution by proof that there was no joint liability for which they could be justly held responsible. In the second place, if separate suits were held maintainable against different representatives of the original tenant, the question as to the nature or the terms of the tenancies might be decided differently on different occasions. In our opinion it is plain that in a case of the description now before us, the principle laid down in Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhodra (1) is exactly applicable. But we must add that we are not prepared to go further and to give effect to the contention that the suit was also defective because there were other representatives of the original tenant who had not been joined as parties to the suit. The objection in substance was that necessary parties had not been joined; but the defendant did not in his written statement specify the names of the parties who should have been so joined. The plaintiff has now been apprised by the defendant of the names of the persons who, according to him, should be joined as parties, and he is at liberty to apply for joinder of such parties. But as they are joined on the insistence of the appellant, the latter must be held responsible for costs which may be incurred, if it ultimately turns out that the persons so brought on the record were not interested in the tenancies. The first objection must, therefore, prevail and the plaintiff will be given an opportunity, after the case has been remitted to the Court of first instance, to have the suit properly constituted.

As regards the second question, we are of opinion that the plaintiff should be made to comply with the requirements of clause (b) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That clause is in these terms: "The plaint shall contain, in addition to the particulars specified in section 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a statement of the situation, designation, extent and boundaries of the land held by the tenant; or where the plaintiff is unable to give the extent or boundaries in lieu thereof a description sufficient for identification." This provision is specially applicable to the case before us. The defendant asserts that he is not in possession of the land for which rent is claimed. His allegation is that the whole village in which the lands of the tenancies were comprised has been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, and that as no boundaries have been given by the plaintiff he is unable to identify the land. In these circumstances, the plaintiff may properly be called upon either to give the boundaries of the lands for which rent is claimed, or, if the boundaries are not available, to give such description as will be sufficient for the identification of the lands. But reliance was placed in the Court below upon the written statement filed by the appellant on the 20th May 1904 in a previous suit for rent, and the allegations in the written statement were construed to mean that the defendant then admitted that he was in possession of the lands. On a careful perusal of that written statement, we have come to the conclusion that this is not a fair interpretation of that document taken as a whole. There was an allegation in the written statement to the effect that the plaintiff had not furnished boundaries of the properties in arrears, and the result was that the defendant was not able to identify the lands. But he conceded that in the suit for partition instituted on the origial side of this Court an area of 10 bighas had fallen to his share; this is clearly no admission that he was in possession of the entire land for which rent was claimed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the case sent back to him in order that he may re-hear the case after the parties have been placed on the record and the boundaries or other materials sufficient for identification of the lands have been furnished.

Costs incurred up to the present stage will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Partnership—Suit for accounts—Counter-claim—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1.

In a suit for accounts and to recover money due on a dissolved partnership, the defendant's claim for decree on accounts, is not a counter-claim, and no Court-fee is leviable thereon until the amount has been ascertained.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—Heard both sides on the preliminary issue No. 5. I find that no stamp is due at present.

Suit for accounts and to recover money said to be due on a partnership, which has already been dissolved. Defendants say nothing is due from them to plaintiff and that, on accounts being taken, it will be found that some money (amount not stated) is due from plaintiff to them. And they ask the Court to give them the amount, expressing their willingness to pay Court-fee on any sum awarded to them.

The question is whether defendants' claim is a set-off or counter-claim and so liable to Court-fee under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court Fees Act as amended by Schedule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Let it be granted, for the sake of brevity, that their claim is a counter-claim. Still it obviously cannot be taxed unless the amount of it is ascertained. And the Court has no means of ascertaining it now. So it cannot be taxed now. Lex non cogit ad impossibilia.

The learned Pleader for the plaintiff urges that the Court can now order defendants to value their claim and draws attention to section 7, clause 4 (f), of the Court Fees Act. I do not agree. Under that section the Court can compel a plaintiff to value his claim; but the section is silent on the subject of a counter-claim made by a defendant.

This section was not amended by Schedule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. And Order VII, rule 2, of that Code does not apply to a defendant.

The alteration in the law, effected by the said Schedule 4, simply amounted to this—that the amount of a counter-claim is taxable. Assuming that a counter-claim of an amount not ascertained can be made in the pleadings, the Court has not been empowered to ascertain the amount at that time. It follows that no tax can be imposed till the amount has been ascertained, viz., at the end of the trial when account has been taken. Next, it is urged that no vague counter-claim can be made in the written statement, as Order VIII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, contains the only law under which a counter-claim can be made, and that rule allows only a claim for an ascertained amount. Now it is true that a vague counter-claim in a partnership suit cannot be made under the Civil Procedure Code. But it has long been the practice in India in such suits to permit equitable counter-claims of amounts not ascertained. The Court permits such claims as a Court of Equity and not under the Common Law. It is needless to cite decisions in support of this well-known state of things. I, therefore, find that defendants' claim is in order and must be investigated and that no Court-fee can be imposed on them at this stage.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1919 OF 1913.

KAMINI DEBI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

PROMOTHO NATH MUKERJEE AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2, cl. (2), 97, O. XX, rr. 12 to 18—"Matters in controversy in the suit," meaning of—Preliminary decree—Decision on issues in bar, whether preliminary decree—Appeal—Omission to frame decree, effect of, on right to appeal—Final decree, effect of—Preliminary decree, preparation of, where provided.

The expression "matter in controversy in the suit" in clause (2) of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, refers to the subject-matter of the litigation, and should not be understood in its widest possible sense.

Therefore, a decision in plaintiff's favour on the issue of his locus standi to sue is not a decision of a matter in controversy in the suit and, consequently, is not a preliminary decree within the meaning of clause (2) of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and is not appealable.

If a decision is in reality a preliminary decree, the mere omission on the part of the Court to embody its effect in a formal expression does not negative the right of the party affected to prefer an appeal.

There should be only one preliminary decree in a suit to be followed by one final decree. A preliminary decree ascertains what is to be done, while the final decree states the result achieved by means of the preliminary decree.

The cases where the Legislature contemplated the preparation of a preliminary decree, are specified in rules 12 to 18 of Order XX of the Code.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal relates to the competency of an appeal presented to the District Judge. The defendant is a shebait of an endowment created by one Ramkamal Mukerjee on the 4th February 1845, the history of which is set out in our judgment in Aghore Nath Mukerjee v. Kamini Debi (1). The plaintiffs seek a declaration that the defendant is utterly unfit for the post of shebait, and they ask accordingly for a decree for her removal and for the appointment of a fit and proper person to the post of shebait according to the provisions of the Will of the founder. The plaintiffs also claim an account of the income and expenditure of the endowed properties from the defendant. For the preservation of the property during the pendency of the suit, they also pray for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from wasting the estate, or, in the alternative, for the appointment of a Receiver. Finally the plaintiffs seek a decree for damages against the defendant and invite the Court to draw up a scheme for the future management of the endowed properties and the performance of the worship as contemplated by the founder. The defendant resists the claim on the ground, amongst others, that the plaintiffs have no right to maintain the suit. Twenty issues were framed; of these the first was in these terms: "Have the plaintiffs any cause of action? Have the plaintiffs any right to sue?" This was amplified in the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth issues, in which the grounds for the contention that the plaintiffs have no right to sue were specifically set out. The seventeenth issue raised the question whether the plaintiffs had a right to sue inasmuch as one Aghore Nath Mukerjee was alive. The eighteenth issue raised the question whether the plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit inasmuch as they were not born during the life-time of the founder. The nineteenth issue raised the question whether, upon a proper construction of the Will of the founder, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit? The twentieth issue then raised the question whether the defendant was estopped by reason of the doctrine of estoppel from raising the questions mentioned in the three preceding issues.

The Court of first instance first took up these issues in bar and decided them against the defendant. Before the suit could be heard on the merits, the defendant lodged an appeal before the District Judge against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, in which he had held that the plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit and that the question of its competency could not be raised by the defendant by reason of the decisions in previous suits. Before the District Judge, the objection was taken that the appeal was incompetent inasmuch as there was no decree which could be questioned by way of appeal. The District Judge gave effect to this contention and dismissed the appeal. On the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the defendant that the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of the right of the plaintiffs to maintain the suit was a preliminary decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 and that the propriety of such a preliminary decree could be questioned by way of appeal to the District Judge. In fact, it has been contended that in view of the provisions of section 97 of the Code, it is obligatory upon the defendant to question the propriety of the decision of the Subordinate Judge at this stage. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Krishnaji v. Maruti Appa (2) and Sidhanath Dhonddev v. Ganesh Govind (3).

Clause (2) of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines the term "decree" to mean the formal expression of adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, and may be either preliminary or final. It has not been disputed that in the case before us, there is no formal expression of adjudication by the Court of first instance. But the defendant is in no way to be blamed for this circumstance. An application was made to the Subordinate Judge in this behalf and he was invited to draw up a decree. He refused to accede to this application, on the ground that his decision was not equivalent to a preliminary decree. Consequently, if his decision was in reality a preliminary decree, the mere omission on the part of the Court to embody its effect in a formal expression would not negative the right of the party affected to prefer an appeal. The substantial question for examination is, whether the adjudication has in fact determined the rights of the parties with regard to one of the matters in controversy in the suit. It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that one of the matters in controversy in the suit was, whether the plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit, and that the Subordinate Judge has adjudicated upon this matter. If the expression "matter in controversy" is understood in its widest possible sense, the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant may be supported. But the question remains, whether the expression "matter in controversy in the suit" should be understood in this comprehensive sense. On behalf of the respondents, it has been argued that the expression "matter in controversy in the suit" refers to the subject-matter of the litigation, and that if this view were not adopted, every question in dispute between the parties in the course of litigation may be deemed to fall within the expression "matter in controversy in the suit." In our opinion, the view put forward on behalf of the appellant is unsound and should not be accepted, though it is supported by the decision in Sidhanath Dhonddev v. Ganesh Govind (3). In that case, the Subordinate Judge gave his decisions on issues relating to misjoinder, limitation and jurisdiction in favour of the defendants and directed the parties to adduce evidence on the merits. He refused to draw up a preliminary decree embodying his decision upon the questions of limitation, misjoinder and jurisdiction. The High Court of Bombay held that he committed a material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. With all respect for the learned Judges who decided that case, we are unable to accept the interpretation they put upon the expression "matter in controversy in the suit." The result of this interpretation is that the parties would be bound, in view of section 97 of the Code, to challenge by way of immediate appeal the decision of the Court upon every one of the points in dispute between them in the course of the litigation, so that the trial of the suit might be interrupted from time to time and might ultimately be extended over many years. We are not prepared to hold that this could ever have been intended by the Legislature. Besides this, if the decision of the Court upon each of the points in dispute is deemed a preliminary decree, there must be a number of preliminary decrees in the suit. But, as was pointed out in the case of Bharatendu v. Yakub Hasain (4), the intention of the Legislature appears to have been that there should be only one preliminary decree in the suit to be followed by one final decree: In the matter of Rajah Pertab Chunder Singh (5). The cases where the Legislature contemplated the preparation of a preliminary decree are specified in rules 12 to 18 of Order XX of the Code; it is not disputed that the case before us is not comprised within any of those rules. It is further clear that the preliminary decree ascertains what is to be done, while the final decree states the result achieved by means of the preliminary decree. If this distinction is borne in mind and is applied to the case before us, what is the position? The decision of the Subordinate Judge, so far as it goes, merely holds in favour of the plaintiffs that they are entitled to maintain the suit. Their right to obtain the reliefs claimed against the defendant has not yet been affirmed. On behalf of the appellants, however, much reliance was placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (6), where their Lordships held that the decision of the Court determining the extent of the period for which the judgment-debtor was liable to pay mesne profits to the decree-holder was a decree within the meaning of the Code. There is plainly no real analogy between the case before the Judicial Committee and the case now before us. The order made by the Subordinate Judge does not decide the extent or character of the liability of the defendant; it does not affirm that she is or is not liable to be removed from the position of shebait or to be called upon to render accounts in respect of the trust. Her position now is radically different from what it would have been, if the plaintiffs had obtained a real preliminary decree directing her removal from office or declaring their right to take accounts from her. Should that stage be ever reached, the defendant would undoubtedly be entitled to prefer an appeal against such a decision.

On these grounds, we must hold, upon a construction of section 2 of the Code, that the contention of the appellant is not well-founded and that the appeal preferred by her to the District Judge has been rightly adjudged incompetent. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in the cases of Shib Sharan Sha v. Janaki Nath Dey (7), Parsotam Rao v. Radha Bai (8) and Kashi Nath v. Nathu Ram (9). The case of Krishnaji v. Maruti Appa (2), on which the appellant relied, is distinguishable on the ground that, in the opinion of the Court, the decision challenged by way of appeal involved a determination of the rights of the parties in regard to the manner in which the account between them should be taken; that is, it embodied a decision upon the question of the rights of the parties in respect of one of the matters in controversy in the suit itself. This clearly cannot be affirmed of the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the present case.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Partnership—Suit for accounts—Counter-claim—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch I, Art. 1.

In a suit for accounts and to recover money due on a dissolved partnership, the defendants' claim for decree on accounts is not a counter-claim, and no Court-fee is leviable thereon until the amount has been ascertained.

A suit for partnership accounts is in the nature of a suit in Chancery, and a Court of Equity will not drive the defendant to a fresh suit if the balance turns out to be in his favour.

A set-off is a cross-debt on which a separate action may be sustained.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Kimatram Bhajraj, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing both sides, I find that no Court-fee is due from defendants at present.

On this point the arguments were heard with those in Suit No. 374 of 1913. [Fateh Mahommed v. K. S. Ramsan Khan (1).]

The facts in the two suits are similar, except that in this suit defendants did mention the amount of their claim. As they have ascertained that amount, it seems at first sight that they ought to pay Court-fee on it under Article 1 of Schedule I of the Court-Fees Act.

That is, they must pay if they have made a counter-claim. What claim have they made? They say: "take account of the partnership as plaintiff asks; but at the end you will find a balance of so much in our favour, which please give us." The question is whether this is a counter-claim within the meaning of the Court-Fees Act. It was unnecessary to decide this point in the other suit. But here it must be decided.

The word "counter-claim" is not defined in the Court-Fees Act and is nowhere used in the Code of Civil Procedure, except in Schedule 4.

It is argued for defendants that they were not bound to make any request to the Court, which must anyhow take account and must award the balance due to the party, plaintiff or defendant, who is entitled to it. There is much force in this argument. A suit for partnership accounts is in the nature of a suit in Chancery; and a Court of Equity will not drive the defendant to a fresh suit if the balance turns out to be in his favour: Commentary of Ameer Ali and Woodroffe under Order VIII, rules 6-8, Civil Procedure Code. Once seized of the matter, the Court will settle it once for all. This view is borne out by the wording of the form of a final decree in a partnership suit—No. 22 of Appendix D of the first Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. The form provides for a decree in favour of either party. It might be argued that not even a plaintiff can get relief which he has not asked for, and why should a defendant?

The answer is that he can ask for it at the end of the suit, when the balance has been struck. I do not see why he should not. Suppose that through ignorance (perhaps due to youth or absence or some cause beyond his control) he did not know, at the time of the pleadings, that anything was due to him. In such a case it would hardly be equitable to refuse him his due. And in India all Civil Courts are Courts of Equity. Of course, these remarks would not apply to a suit governed by the Common Law.

In fact a defendant resisting a claim in a partnership suit nearly always does plead that there is a balance in his own favour. But, so far as I see, he is not bound to do so.

It is enough if he says "I deny plaintiff's claim Let account be taken." Here defendants have gone further; for they have said that a definite sum is due to them. Here it is argued that, though they may not have been bound to state a definite or "ascertained" sum of money, still they have done so, and so they must pay Court-fees on their demand. This brings me back to the question whether that is a "counter-claim" or not.

In Webster's Dictionary and in Wharton's Law Lexicon a counter-claim is defined as exactly the same thing as a set-off. I am of opinion that defendants' claim is not a set-off. A set-off is a cross-debt on which a separate action may be sustained. Now any suit brought by defendants would not be separate, but would be the same thing as this suit with the parties transposed. The typical set-off is when A sues B for a debt due for something and B replies that A owes him money for something else and asks the Court to subtract one debt from the other. That is not the case here Defendants simply agree to plaintiff's proposal that account should be taken: and they prophesy that the balance will be in their favour. I think this is not a counter-claim, but merely a statement that something is likely to happen. It follows that no Court-fee is payable at this stage. This result is not unjust and may well have been intended by the framers of the Court Fees Act; for defendants' present statement gives no extra trouble to the Court which (as I hold) is bound, after admitting the plaint, to take account fully, strike a balance and make the debtor pay his debt.

I notice that the above view of the meaning of the word "counter-claim" is not the same as that taken by Ameer Ali and Woodroffe. The learned commentators give the word a meaning which seems more properly to belong to the English word "cross-claim," which of course is a very wide term.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order of the District Judge, by which he has dismissed an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge in the matter of execution of a decree for money. The decree had been obtained by the respondent against one Kripal Narayan Tewari. Before the decree could be executed in full, the judgment-debtor died. The decree-holder thereupon took out execution against his widow, Ajo Koer, as his legal representative. The widow took objection to the attachment of four of the properties against which the decree-holder sought execution as the assets of the original judgment-debtor in her hands. She contended that the properties in question were her own properties and did not form part of the estate of her husband. The Subordinate Judge investigated the matter and overruled the objection, on the ground that the disputed properties belonged not to the lady but to her husband. The widow then appealed to the District Judge. A preliminary objection was taken that the appeal was incompetent, because the order was not under section 47 of the Code but under rule 61 of Order XXI. The District Judge gave effect to this contention and dismissed the appeal without determination of the merits of the question in controversy between the parties. On the present appeal, the order of the District Judge has been assailed as based upon an erroneous view of the scope of section 47. It is plain that the order under appeal cannot be supported.

In the case of Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (1) it was unanimously held by a Full Bench of this Court that an objection, taken by a person who has become the representative of the judgement-debtor in the course of the execution of a decree, to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own property and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. This decision is binding upon this Court, and is in no way affected by the decision of the subsequent Full Bench in Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (2). That case affirms the proposition that when X, in execution of a decree for money against Y personally, attaches properties of which Y alleges that he is in possession, not in his own right but as shebait of a deity to whom the property has been dedicated and who is not a party to the suit, the question raised falls, not within section 244, but within section 278 read with section 280 of the Code of 1882. This principle does not contravene the rule laid down in Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (1) and has no application to the case before us. When, as here, X, in execution of a decree for money against Y, proceeds against Z as the legal representative of Y in respect of property in the possession of Z, and Z contends that the property belongs to him and never formed part of the estate of Y, the question arises whether such property is assets in the hands of Z and is liable to be seized in execution of the decree against Y. Such question is plainly a question relating to execution of the decree obtained by X against Y and arises between the plaintiff-decree-holder X on the one hand and the representative Z of the defendant-judgment-debtor Y on the other hand. The question consequently must, under section 47, be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. The position is entirely different when X, in execution of a decree for money against Y personally, attaches property in the possession of Y, which Y alleges he holds not in his own right but as shebait of a deity who is not a party to the suit. The question raised is, no doubt, a question relating to the execution of the decree obtained by X against Y, but does it arise between the parties to the suit? Clearly not. The decree has been made in a suit between X on the one hand and Y in his personal capacity on the other hand. The question in execution arises between X on the one hand and Y in his capacity as trustee of an endowment on the other hand. Y has a twofold capacity: in one character he is party to the suit; in the other, he is a stranger to the suit. The position is precisely what it would have been if Z had been the shebait and had claimed the property as such when attached by X in execution of his decree against Y. It is further plain from an examination of the terms of Order XXI, rule 60, that while it applies to the class of cases of which Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (2) may be taken as the type, it cannot, by any stretch of language, be made to cover the class of cases of which Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (1) is the leading example. In the former class of cases, the judgment-debtor objects that he is in possession as trustee, and not on his own account, within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 60; in the latter class of cases, the representative of the judgment-debtor objects that the property in his hands is not assets available to the decree-holder. The objections in the two classes of cases are obviously of fundamentally different kinds. Reference may in this connection be made to the elaborate judgment of Wilson, J., in Rajrup Singh v. Ramgolam Roy (3), which was approved by the Full Bench in Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (1). The view taken by the Full Bench has now been adopted by all the Indian High Courts: Seth Chand Mal v. Durga Dei (4); Kali Charan v. Jewat Dube (5); Murigeya v. Hayat Saheb (6); Gokulsing v. Kisansing (7); Vengapayyan v. Karim Panakal (8). In this view, the objection raised by the widow of the original judgment-debtor, who has been brought on the record as his legal representative and who contends that four of the properties sought to be made liable in execution of the decree against her husband do not constitute assets available to the decree-holder, must be determined under section 47 of the Code.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the District Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that the appeal may be heard on the merits. The appellants are entitled to their costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.
FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 40 OF 1909.
January 20, 1913.
Present:—Sir Charles Arnold White, KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.
MUNISAMI MUDALY—DEFENDANT No. 2 —APPELLANT
versus
ABBU REDDY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 3 TO 7 RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 22 —Cross-objections, whether can be taken against a co-respondent.

A respondent can claim relief against a co-respondent by way of memorandum of objections.

Appeal from the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 17 of 1907.

The case came on for hearing before Sir Charles Arnold White, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bakewell on the 18th November 1912, and they made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE.

WHITE, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff sued on a mortgage. The 2nd defendant pleaded failure of consideration to the extent of Rs. 700. The 7th defendant impeached the mortgage altogether on the ground of fraud. The District Judge held the mortgage was good, that there had been no partial failure of consideration, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount of his claim. The 2nd defendant appealed. The 7th defendant did not appeal, but put in a memorandum of objections in which he asked for a declaration that the mortgage was fraudulent and not binding on him.

As regards the appeal of the 2nd defendant, I think the District Judge was right for the reasons stated in the judgment of my learned brother, which I have had the advantage of reading. I think his appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Objection was taken to the memorandum of objections on the ground that the 7th defendant, not having appealed, could not in the appeal by his co-defendant, the 2nd defendant, against the decree on the ground that there had been a partial failure of consideration, obtain relief by way of memorandum of objections on the ground that the mortgage was bad in toto. The further point was taken that if it was open to the 7th defendant to put in a memorandum of objections, he could only do so on payment of the proper Court-fee.

The objection which has been taken raises the question, can a respondent proceed by way of memorandum of objections against a party to the appeal other than the appellant?

In Calcutta the decisions under section 561 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 are to the effect that the procedure by way of cross-objections can, as a general rule, only be adopted where the cross-objections are raised as against the appellant. See Bishun Churn Roy Chowdhry v. Jogendra Nath Roy (1). A different view has been taken by this Court. In Kulaikada Pillai v. Viswanatha Pillai (2) Subramania Aiyar, J., observed (page 235): "According to the decisions of this Court such a memorandum may legally be filed even when the question arises between co-respondents only."

The wording of Order XLI, rule 22, differs from that of the section which it reproduces in certain respects. The word "cross-objection" is used instead of "objection." The words "the party who may be affected by such objections" are used instead of the word (1) "appellant." The word "cross-objection" seems appropriate as regards a question between the appellant and a respondent; inappropriate, as regards a question between two co-respondents.

On the other hand, the substitution of the words "the party who may be affected by such objection" for the word "appellant" would seem to indicate that the Legislature intended to bring questions between co-respondents within the scope of the Rule.

MUNISAMI MUDALY v. ABBU REDDY.

The point raises an important question of practice, and it seems desirable to have an authoritative decision in the matter.

I would refer to a Full Bench the question, whether under the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and the rules, a party to an appeal can claim relief against a co-respondent by way of memorandum of cross-objections.

BAKEWELL, J.—This is a suit by the assignee of a mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property, in which the 2nd defendant (appellant), one of the mortgagors, has pleaded that Rs. 700, part of the mortgage moneys, were not paid by the original mortgagee; and the 7th defendant (7th respondent), who attached the land in execution of a decree against one of the defendants, has pleaded that the whole mortgage is void as against him. The District Judge decided both these points in favour of the plaintiff, and the 2nd defendant has presented this appeal against his decree, and the 7th defendant has presented a memorandum of cross-objections by which he seeks to reverse the finding against his plea. The decree is the usual mortgage decree for sale.

Upon the question of fact raised by the appellant, I am of opinion that the evidence supports the finding of the lower Court. The mortgage, Exhibit C, shows that part of the consideration was the settlement of certain debts of the mortgagor, and Exhibits Q, Q1 and E, produced by the mortgagee, show that moneys were due by the 2nd defendant to one Ratna Mudali; and Exhibit E bears an endorsement by the latter acknowledging the receipt of money from the mortgagee. There is no evidence that this endorsement is not genuine, and it is supported by the accounts, Exhibits H and J (1), and the contemporaneous statement on behalf of the mortgagee in Exhibit G (1). Exhibit N contains a distinct admission of the mortgage for the full amount by the 2nd defendant, which is confirmed by his statement in Exhibit O and by the fact that for a period of 10 years no claim appears to have been made by him for the balance of the loan. The whole case of the 2nd defendant rests upon his day-book, Exhibit I (a), since the ledger, Exhibit II (a), is quite unreliable, and Exhibit III merely shows an intention to discharge a mortgage of Ratna Mudali. These documents only go to show that three years prior to the mortgage, Exhibit C, certain moneys had been paid by the sale of land of the 2nd defendant in respect of a mortgage to Ratna Mudali, and do not contradict the plaintiff's evidence above referred to.

With respect to the memorandum of objections, a preliminary point has been raised that the 7th defendant should have come to this Court by way of appeal, and that it is not open to him under cover of an appeal by another party upon different grounds to attack a decree in favour of his co-respondent.

It is well settled that a Court will not ordinarily give relief to a defendant in a suit and will not travel beyond the limits of the plaint, and it seems to me that the same general principle should ordinarily be applied to appeals, to which the same rules apply as in suits (see Civil Procedure Code, section 107, clause 2). An appellate Court has now full power to do justice between the parties, although they may not have filed any appeal or objections (Order XLI, rule 33), and, therefore, if it thinks fit to reverse or vary a decree, it may make any order necessary to protect the interests of all parties.

The question, therefore, appears to me to be one, not of the jurisdiction of the Court, but of practice, that is, as to the manner in which a party aggrieved by a decree should ordinarily place his case before the Appellate Court, and whether the Legislature intended by Order XLI, rule 22, to provide that in addition to his remedy by memorandum of appeal, which is the method prescribed by Order XLI, rule 1, a respondent should have a further remedy by memorandum of cross-objections.

I think the wording of Order XLI, rule 22, shows that the Legislature intended to define the position of a respondent as against the appellant and to make it clear that he can avail himself of any defence or attack in order to meet the appellant's case; thus, he can not only change front and refute his arguments in the lower Court, this is the 1st part of the rule, but can also deliver a counter-attack by bringing into debate a matter which the appellant has not included in his appeal. I think that the Legislature had in view the case where a party has for reasons of expediency not thought fit to appeal, but has been forced into Court and wishes to avail himself of all his means of offence and defence. Hence a memorandum of objections is in effect a cross-appeal, and notice must be given not only to the appellant but to all parties affected, sub-rule (3), and the former cannot defeat the attack by withdrawing from his appeal, sub-rule (4). I am unable to conjecture what object the Legislature may have had, upon the 7th respondent's construction of this rule, in giving a respondent two separate remedies, one by a regular appeal and one contingent upon another party appealing on a totally different matter.

Turning now to the authorities, it has been held in a long series of decisions of the Calcutta High Court, under section 561 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellant [see Bishun Churn Chowdhry v. Jogendra Nath Roy (1)] and by this Court that the section did not contemplate such a limitation [Timmaya v. Lakshmana (3). and see Kulaikada Pillai v. Viswanatha Pillai (2), per Subramania Aiyar, J.]. Since the date of those decisions and presumably in view thereof, the Legislature has amended the rule by the introduction of the word "cross" before objection; and I am of opinion that the intention was to adopt the construction of the Calcutta High Court. A respondent cannot now take objection generally to a decree; but only "cross-objections," that is objection to the appellant's case. In In re Cavander's Trusts (4) Jessel, M. R. points out that an appeal on a point which does not affect the original appellant cannot be a cross-appeal, and a respondent who desires to bring forward a case with which the appellant has nothing to do must give a notice of appeal. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the question stated by him should be referred to a Full Bench.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

It seems to us that the answer to the question which has been referred to us should be in the affirmative.

This is in accordance with the practice which appears to have prevailed in this Court under section 561 of the Code of 1882, and we do not read Order XLI, rule 22, as indicating that the framers of the rules intended to make it clear that the practice should be otherwise.

With all respect to the learned Judges who dealt with the question in Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh(5), a case which was decided under Order XLI, rule 22, it seems to us more convenient to follow a fixed rule than to decide the question with reference to the particular facts of the case in which the question is raised.

We answer the question in the affirmative.

After receipt of the opinion of the Full Bench the memorandum of objections came on for final hearing before Mr. Justice Bakewell and Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, who on the 5th November 1914 delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We are both of opinion that the question of consideration has been already decided in proceedings to which the 7th respondent was a party and in which he had the opportunity of arguing the point, and that this question is res judicata and cannot be re-opened upon the hearing of the memorandum of cross-objections. There is no evidence of fraud on the part of the mortgagee, or that the transferees of the mortgagee from him had notice of any fraud.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs. The time for redemption will be three months from this day.

KARACHI MUNICIPALITY v. KHATANMAL HIRANAND.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 26 OF 1913.

March 16, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Crouch, A. J. C.

THE KARACHI MUNICIPALITY—APPLICANTS

versus

KHATANMAL HIRANAND—OPPONENT.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 160 (3)—Compensation, award of—Boom in prices, whether to be considered in estimating market-value—Value of portion of land enhanced owing to acquisition of part of it—Compensation for that portion, whether allowed on severance.

In awarding compensation for acquisition of land under section 160 (3) of the Bombay District Municipal Act if a boom in prices of lands exist owing to certain extraordinary circumstances, it must be considered in estimating the market-value of the land to be acquired.

Where a portion of a land acquires a fancy value owing to the acquisition of a part of it for widening a street, no compensation is allowed for the severance of the same.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Applicants.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodharam, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 160 (3) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, III of 1901. The Municipality have acquired 22 square yards from plot No. 65 A-5, Old Town Quarter, belonging to opponent Khatanmal Hiranand; the matter was referred to a Panchayat, the members of which failed to give a decision within one month from the date of their appointment. The Court is asked to ascertain and determine the compensation due to opponent.

In his letter of 4th February 1913 Khatanmal claimed Rs. 125 a square yard, stating that he had purchased the plot about 12 months before at Rs. 100 a yard.

The plot in question at date of acquisition, 3rd December 1912, consisted of 30 square yards and had standing on it an old building worth about Rs. 150. It is situate at the corner of Gowsuttiani Street and Atmaram Lane, the width of Gowsuttiani Street being about 10 feet and that of Atmaram Lane about 8 feet. The result of the acquisition is to widen both the streets and the lane by 5 or 6 feet. The old building had a shop on the ground-floor, which is said to have been let at Rs. 5 a month, and a couple of rooms on the first floor occupied by a relation of the owner, who was nominally a tenant at Rs. 3 per mensem, but paid nothing actually. The building was assessed at Rs. 5 a month. Only 8 square yards now remain; a building worth about Rs. 300 has been erected consisting of a shop with a room overhead. The shop lets for Rs. 6 a month, but the room being less than 80 square feet is not, under the Municipal rules, considered fit for residential purposes (Exhibit E and Exhibit XX).

Khatanmal asks, in addition to Rs. 125 a square yard for the land acquired, 15 per cent. compensation and also half the value of the 8 square yards, say Rs. 500 for severance. The Chief Engineer values it at Rs. 55 a square yard inclusive of 15 per cent. compensation, or at about Rs. 48.

* * * *

In December 1911, it was announced that the Capital was to be transferred to Delhi, and it is alleged that, as a consequence of this, the market value of land in Karachi leapt up. Mr. Lea states that this rise was purely speculative, having no reference to the letting value, and it is probable that those who bought at high price did so with the intention of re-selling before the boom ended. Since the Bank failures there has been a re-action and prices are again normal, though somewhat higher than in 1911. But, if the boom still continued in December 1912, it must be considered in estimating the then market value.

Now, in January 1912 a contract was entered into for the sale of A-5 No. 96 consisting of 64 square yards with three shops, bringing in Rs. 12 to Rs. 13 a month, at Rs. 4,500 or Rs. 70-4-0 a square yard. It would seen that the immediate result of the boom was to temporarily raise the market value of property in Daryalal Street by about 25 per cent.

What, then, was the value of No. 65 at the end of January? The owner would in view of the contract just referred to almost certainly ask Rs. 70, for though the position is not, in some respects, so good as that of A-5—96, the plot is a corner one and suitable for retail business purposes: and the boom in land values would stimulate speculation, and attract purchasers even at extreme prices. But 22 yards had already been marked out for acquisition by the Municipality, and when land is so acquired it has been the custom to take the last sale, if a recent one, as the basis of calculation and add 15 per cent. Twenty-two yards would, therefore, have a potential value of Rs. 1,765. But the street would, by such asquisition, become greatly improved; a new shop could be erected out of the old materials for Rs. 150 to Rs. 200 and let for Rs. 6 a month, and for such shop there was, during the boom, a chance of getting a price that represented 20 years' purchase, or Rs. 1,440, or even more, so that the owner might have fairly calculated its potential value at Rs. 2,955; and a speculative purchaser might not unreasonably have expected to clear Rs. 100 or so, if he gave only Rs. 2,800 for there was at least a chance of getting from the Municipality a fancy rate.

In February 1912, the plot in question is said to have actually changed hands at Rs. 2,800, and two months later was sold at 2,900 to the present claimant. An endeavour has been made to show that these sales did not, as a matter of fact, take place, and that there was a collusive fraud practised with a view to obtain a fancy rate on acquisition. But after very carefully considering all the evidence, the utmost I feel justified in saying is that the sale and re-sale are suspicious; they have not been proved to be fictitious, and it is quite possible that they were genuine, though highly speculative transactions. It is to be noted, in support of the theory which I have put forward as to the method adopted for settling the value, that the owner now values the 8 and 9 yards and shop at Rs. 1,500 and has refused an offer of Rs. 1,000.

Early in 1912, Tikamdas (Exhibit S S) gave Rs. 1,100 for 11 square yards' in Naumal Lane with a shop yielding Rs. 5 a month and re-sold it at Rs. 1,200. This transaction shows that a price up to 20 years purchase may be realised by a very small plot with a shop on it, even though the rate works out at over Rs. 100 a square yard. In such cases the purchaser buys, not only a plot of land, but the potentiality of making business profits.

Plot A-5—100 was, in June 1911, worth no more than about Rs. 57 a square yard; but after a portion of it had been acquired and the street widened, the price naturally rose. Early in 1912, 28 yards were sold for Rs. 1,974 or Rs. 70-8 a square yard. A few weeks later it was purchased by a syndicate of speculators for Rs. 2,200 and then sold to one of their number (Exhibit SS) for Rs. 2,700, and by him, after the erection of two shops with upper storeys, sold in March 1913 at Rs. 4,500. Now, these transactions indicate that the widening of a street enhances values, and again illustrate the rule that very small sites with shops on them will fetch a price equivalent to their gross rent capitalised at 5 per cent. A shop with 14 square yards and an upper room in Daryalal Street would probably fetch Rs. 8 or Rs. 9, and this at 20 years purchase would indicate Rs. 2,250 as the selling price, or Rs. 4,500 for the two. I consider that these transactions also indicate that the booms in land and speculative purchases which commenced early in 1912 continued up to the end of that year. The extent to which the value of a plot per square yard is limited by the rent that can be realised is shown by the sale in July 1912 of a portion of the same plot A-5—100, when 53 square yards were sold for Rs. 2,000.

There is not, I consider, sufficient evidence to show that, after the transfer of the Capital had had its effects on prices, the rates rose materially during 1912, but there has undoubtedly been a steady and almost continuous rise in what may be termed the normal price of land throughout Karachi, independently of the speculative rise.

I am of opinion, then, that in December 1912 the boom still prevailed and speculative purchasers were willing to give big prices, and, had there been a question of selling plot 65 to a private purchaser as it then stood, the owner would willingly have taken Rs. 70 per yard but would not have taken less, and that a speculative purchaser would have considered it worth while to give Rs. 70 but would not have given more. The price which Khatanmal paid represented, not only the value of the plot as it stood, but the then realisable value of the land, plus the chance of getting fancy compensation from the Municipality for 22 yards and plus the potential increased value of the 8 square yards after the streets had been widened. Had the date of acquisition been delayed until the boom caused by the transfer of the Capital had been practically neutralised by the Bank failures, the proper rate would, I think, have been about Rs. 60.

I cannot allow anything for severance, for the 8 square yards remaining have acquired a fancy value per square yard by the mere process of reducing the area. Though the upper room cannot be used for sleeping purposes, it must provide useful accommodation to the tenant of the shop, and so add materially to its letting value.

I award Rs. 1,540 for the 22 yards and 15 per cent. compensation, and interest on the whole amount awarded at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of taking possession, namely, 2nd December 1912.

The question of costs presents some difficulty. Neither party can be specially blamed for the case coming into Court. Though Khatanmal's claim was excessive, the offer of the Municipality was not sufficiently generous. The necessity for coming to Court has arisen from the desire of the Municipality to acquire the land, and I see no reason why the owner should be forced into heavy law expenses merely because he is compelled to sell his land and endeavours to get the best price possible. The Municipality must, therefore, bear all costs.

Suit allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 184 OF 1910.

June 5, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

UPENDRA NATH KALAMURI AND ANOTHER—OBJECTORS—APPELLANTS

KUSUM KUMARI DASI—APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 60—Execution of decree—Legal representative of judgment-debtor, objection by—Attached property not of judgment-debtor—Determination of such question—Appeal.

Where a decree-holder in execution of a decree for money against a judgment-debtor personally attaches and proceeds to sell properties, of which the judgment-debtor alleges that he is in possession not in his own right but as shebait of a deity to whom the properties have been dedicated, the case does not fall within section 47, but under Order XXI, rule 60, of the Civil Procedure Code.

When a decree has been passed in a suit against a shebait as representing an idol, it is binding on the succeeding shebait, provided it has been passed without any fraud or collusion. But where a decree has been passed against a person in his capacity as shebait, execution can be taken out only against the properties of the endowment in his hands.

Per Beachcroft, J.—If the claim of an objector, who has been brought on the record as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, is really in his own interests as representative of the judgment-debtor, the case will come under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, but if the claim is adverse to his interests as representative, it will not.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 11th February 1910, confirming that of the Munsif of Midnapur, dated the 13th September 1909.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Kshetra Mohan Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the Subordinate Judge has confirmed an order of the Court of first instance for execution of a money decree. On the 7th April 1904, the respondent obtained a decree for money against one Gobardhan Kalamuri, described as the shebait of the goddesses Lakshmi and Bhagabati. Before the decree could be executed in full, the judgment-debtor died. On the 28th July 1909, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree by the sale of an one-fourth share of 260 bighas of land within certain boundaries. She stated in her petition that the judgment-debtor was dead, that he had left five nephews (sons of different sisters) as also three paternal uncles, that one or more of these persons had succeeded as shebait of the endowment, but that as plaintiff had not been able to ascertain who was the shebait, she prayed that execution might proceed after service of notice on all these persons under rule 22 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. Notices were issued accordingly. The nephews of the original judgmentdebtor took no notice of the proceedings, but on the 19th August 1909, two of the uncles filed a petition of objection, in which they urged, amongst other things, that the properties sought to be attached had not been dedicated to the goddesses named but were private secular properties of the objectors, though under a deed dated the 29th June 1877 a part of the income of these properties had been directed by the then proprietor to be applied for religious purposes. It transpired at the same time that the other uncle of the judgment-debtor, who had not entered appearance, had died on the 10th August; the decree-holder thereupon applied that the two objectors who had appeared might be treated as the representatives of the deceased; this was granted. The Court then proceeded to investigate the objection, and on the 13th September 1909 came to the conclusion that the properties sought to be attached had been dedicated to the goddesses named; in this view, the Court overruled the objection and directed execution to proceed. The objectors then appealed to the Subordinate Judge. When the appeal came on for hearing, a preliminary objection was taken by the decree-holder-respondent that the appeal was incompetent, as the order could not be deemed to have been made under section 47 of the Code. The Subordinate Judge expressed himself in favour of this view, but as he felt doubtful whether the appeal was really incompetent, he considered the case on the merits and ultimately confirmed the order of the original Court. The objectors have appealed to this Court and have contended, first, that the appeal to the Subordinate Judge was competent, and, secondly, that he has misunderstood the legal effect of the deed of the 29th June 1877.

To determine whether the appeal to the Subordinate Judge was competent, it is necessary to ascertain whether the order of the primary Court falls within the scope of section 47. The answer to the question whether an order in execution proceedings is within the scope of this section, depends upon its nature and contents. If it decides a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree, and if the decision has been given between the parties to the suit or their representatives-in-interest, the order of the Court falls within the scope of this section, is a decree within the meaning of section 2, and as such is appealable under section 96: Raghubar Dayal Sukul v. Jadu Nandan Misser (1), Joytara v. Ram Krishna Seal (2). It cannot be disputed that the order of the original Court decided a question relating to the execution of the decree held by the respondent, namely, whether the decree could be executed by attachment and sale of the property specified in the application of the decree-holder. But the point remains whether this question arose between the plaintiff-decree-holder on the one hand, and the defendant-judgment-debtor or his representative on the other hand. It is plain that if and in so far as there was an endowment, the objectors were the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor, within the meaning of that expression as defined in section 2, clause (2), of the Code; the original defendant had been sued in a representative character as the shebait of the two goddesses named; the objectors had succeeded to the office of shebait, and the estate held by the deceased as shebait had devolved on his successors in office. This view is in accord with the elementary rule that when a decree has been passed in a suit against a shebait as representing an idol, it is binding on the succeeding shebait, provided it has been passed without any fraud or collusion: Prosunno Kumari v. Golab Chand (3); Tulsidas v. Bejoy Kishore (4); Manikka v. Balagopalakrishna Chetty (5). But when a decree has been passed against a person in his capacity as shebait, execution can be taken out only against the properties of the endowment in his hands; for as Subrahmania Ayyar, J., observed in Venkatasami Pillai v. Kuppayee Ammal (6), the private property of an individual cannot be taken in execution of a decree made against him in his capacity as manager or trustee of an endowment, just as the property of the endowment cannot be taken in execution where the decree against him is in respect of his personal debt. The two capacities are fundamentally distinct, and the individual constitutes two distinct juristic persons from the two different points of view. In the present case, the decree-holder seeks to proceed against the property on the assumption that the appellants hold it as part of the endowment of the two idols named. The objectors, on the other hand, assert in their personal capacity that this is their private property and is not available to the decree-holder for satisfaction of her decree. That decree is essentially against the debutter estate, though, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jagadindranath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (7), the suit was bound to be brought against the shebait as such, because it is only in an ideal sense that an idol, though regarded as a juristic person, can hold property. The true position, consequently, is that the question raised by the objectors calls for decision between the decree-holder, who is a party to the suit, and two persons who are not, for this purpose, representatives of the original defendant, as they raise the objection, not in their capacity as shebaits, but in their private individual capacity. This view is supported by the decision of the Full Bench in Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (8). There it was ruled that when X, in execution of a decree for money against Y, personally attaches and proceeds to sell properties of which Y alleges that he is in possession, not in his own right but as shebait of a deity to whom the properties have been dedicated, the case does not fall within section 244 of the Code of 1882 or section 47 of the Code of 1908. The principle recognised by the Full Bench is that there is a fundamental distinction between a right acquired or liability incurred by Y in a personal capacity, and a claim advanced or defence interposed by the same individual in his capacity as shebait of a deity. If this distinction is borne in mind, the inference follows that when X in execution of a decree for money against Y as shebait of a deity attaches and proceeds to sell properties of which Y or his successor-in-office alleges that he is in possession, not as shebait of the deity, but in his own right, the case does not fall within the scope of section 47. Y in his character as shebait—the only character in which he is a party to the suit—cannot rightly be deemed the same person in his character as a private individual. We may add that the decision of the Full Bench in Panchanan v. Rabia Bibi (9), on which reliance was placed by the appellants, is not directly in point and does not assist their contention. That case is an authority only for the proposition that when X, in execution of a decree for money against Y, seeks to proceed against Z as the legal repesentative of Y, who is liable only to the extent of the assets of Y in his hands; and a question arises, whether a particular property does or does not constitute such assets, it must be determined by the execution Court under section 47 of the Code. Nor is the contention of the appellant supported by the cases of Maharaj Kumar Bindeswari Charan Singh v. Thakur Lakpat Nath Singh (10) and Umeshananda Dut v. Mohendra Prosad (11). The former case shows that where a party has obtained an order in his favour on the footing that the Court was competent to deal with the matter and make the order under section 47, he cannot, when the validity of the order is challenged by way of appeal, impugn the appeal as incompetent on the ground that the order could not have been made under section 47. The latter case is an authority for the proposition that where a decree has been obtained against a person who had been really removed from the office of shebait on the erroneous assumption that he is still the shebait, and upon application made to execute such decree against his successor-in-office, an objection is raised that there is no valid decree capable of execution against the properties of the endowment, the question falls within section 47, because a question was raised, who was the representative of the judgement-debtor which could be determined only under clause (3) of that section. Reference was finally made to the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Chowdhry Wahed

Ali v. Jumajee (12) and Abidunnissa v. Amirunnissa (13) neither of which lays down any principle contrary to the view I propose to take. The first case affirms what must now be regarded as incontestable, namely, where a decree against a person in a representative capacity has been properly passed and proceedings have been taken thereunder to obtain execution against him in his representative character, he is a party to the suit with respect to any question which may arise between him and the other parties relating to the execution of the decree. The second case shows that section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 (which with important modifications now stands as section 47 of the Code of 1908) was not intended to apply to cases where a serious contest arose with respect to the rights of persons to an equitable interest in a decree.

It follows that the order of the original Court was not made under section 47 and was not a decree liable to be challenged by way of appeal. It must be taken to have been made under rule 60 of Order XXI, although it may be difficult to make the language of that rule fit in precisely with a case in which the defendant has been sued in a representative capacity and prefers a claim in his personal capacity. The rule, however, recognises a broad distinction between the representative character and the personal character of the same individual. In this view, the appeal to the Subordinate Judge was incompetent, and no opinion need be expressed on the question whether the objection is well-founded on the merits. The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—In this case a very real difficulty is raised by the decisions in the cases of Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (9) and Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (8). Both are decisions of a Full Bench. In the first of these two cases it was decided that an objection by the representative of the judgment-debtor in execution, to the effect that the property attached was his own and not held by him as such representative was cognisable only under section 244 of Act XIV of 1882 (section 47 of the present Code). Prima facie that decision would seem to cover the present case. The appellant has been brought on the record as the representative of the original judgment-debtor, and his claim is that the property is his own and that he does not hold it as shebait. In the second of the above cases it was decided that when the objector alleges that he is in possession not in his own right but as shebait of a deity to whom the property has been dedicated, the order passed is one under section 278 of the old Code (now Order XXI, rule 58). The ground on which the decision proceeded was that while the objector was a party to the suit in one capacity the claim was advanced by him in another, and consequently the question did not arise between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and, therefore, was not one to be determined under section 244.

Now if this be taken to be the underlying principle to be applied in cases of this nature, it might also have been applied in the case of Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (9), for while the objector claimed the property as her own in her personal right, she was a party to the suit only because she was the widow of the original judgment-debtor and, therefore, liable to the extent of the assets which had come into her hands.

So far then as the principle was recognised in one case and ignored in the other, the two cases would seem to be in conflict. But the learned Judges who decided the later case distinguished it from the earlier one on the ground that it dealt with the converse question. If that be a real ground of distinction, it might be said that the present case being also the converse to the case of Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (8) is not concluded by that decision, but should follow that in Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (9). The distinction, however, fails when it is attempted to apply it to the facts of the case before us, for here we again have one person in a dual capacity, a state of things which was the foundation of the decision in Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (8).

Can then the two cases be reconciled? One possible view occurs to me. It is this: if the claim of the objector is really in his own interests as representative of the judgment-debtor, the case will come under section 244; if the claim is adverse to his interests as representative, it will not. If this be a correct test it will satisfy the conditions in the case of Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (9), for the widow's claim in her personal right was in her interests as representative of the judgment-debtor. It will satisfy the conditions in Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (6), for the objector's claim as shebait was adverse to his interests as representative of the judgment-debtor. Applied to the present case it provides a feature distinguishing it from the case of Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi(9), and a solution in accord with the principle underlying the case of Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (8).

I, therefore, agree in dismissing the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (2)—Sch. II, r. 20—Appellate Court allowing award to be filed—Appeal—Revision.

An order passed by an Appellate Court under rule 20 of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, allowing an award to be filed and directing the first Court to pass a decree in accordance therewith is not open to appeal.

It is exceedingly doubtful whether a revision of such an order is permissible.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated 17th May 1911, reversing that of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 24th February 1911, rejecting the respondent's application.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Mr. Broadway, and Malik Muhammad Hussain, for the Appellant.

Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff applied, under rule 20 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, to have an award filed in Court. The Additional District Judge rejected the application on the ground that the award determined matters not referred to arbitration. Plaintiff appealed to the Divisional Judge, who accepted the appeal and directed that the award should be filed and a decree in accordance therewith be passed by the first Court.

From this order defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court, but it is quite clear from section 104 (2), Civil Procedure Code, that no appeal lies from that order passed on appeal. We were then asked to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision, but we saw no reason for acceding to this request.

It is exceedingly doubtful whether revision of an order of the kind under consideration is permissible, but whether it be so or not, there are no grounds in the present case for interference. The Divisional Judge has given his best consideration to the question involved and has construed the agreement to refer in a manner which, whether right or wrong, can certainly not be described as unreasonable.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

ASSAMAL TARUMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, applicability of—Composition deed—Absolute transfer of property by debtor to trustees—Resulting trust—Suit for surplus moneys.

Section 10 of the Limitation Act has a very limited application and has no reference to trusts which are merely founded on an unexpressed but implied intention of the party creating them, or to trusts which are raised by construction of Equity without any reference to the intention of the parties.

Where, therefore, certain debtors entered into a composition deed with their creditors whereby they transferred absolutely to trustees all their property for the benefit of the creditors in order to obtain a discharge from all liabilities:

LEKHRAJ VISUMAL v. ASSAMAL TARUMAL.

Held, that no resulting trust was created in favour of the debtors and that they had no cause of action to sue for surplus moneys.

Obiter dictum:—Where property is vested in a trustee under a Will, he holds it as express trustee, not only for the devisees and legatees named therein, but as regards any undisposed of residue, for the heir-at-law and next-of-kin; the trust is said to arise on the face of the instrument itself.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewcaram, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for Defendants Nos. 1 and 4.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—By deed bearing date the 28th June 1895 and made between Bhawandas Jethanand and his sons, Vishindas and Pitumal, (therein referred to as the debtors) of the one part, twenty-one firms and persons therein specified being creditors of the said debtors of the 2nd part, and four persons therein named (being referred to as the trustees) of the 3rd part, after reciting that the debtors were unable to pay their debts in full and that the creditors had agreed to enter into a composition deed with them, the debtors thereby transferred absolutely to the trustees all their property whatsoever, moveable or immoveable, and also all property thereafter found to belong to the debtors, and all properties which the debtors might become entitled to in any manner thereafter, on trust to sell the same in any manner they might think fit, and after defraying costs of realisation and management, to divide the assets between the creditors in the proportion therein set forth; and it was declared that on payment of the last dividend the debtors should be discharged from all their liabilities to the creditors.

Plaintiffs are the four sons of Visumal or Vishindas, sole surviving members of the debtors.

Defendants No. 1 (a) to (d) are sons of Tarumal, one of the four trustees. Defendant No. 2 is also the son of the trustee Assanmal.

Defendants No. 3, the firm of Khemchand Issardas, is sued because Chetomal Parmanand, one of the original trustees, was manager of that firm.

Defendant No. 4 is alleged to have acted as trustee in place of his deceased brother.

It is alleged that Assanmal Chandiram bought certain trust properties in the name of his son defendant No. 2, and that Basrio, Fadoo also purchased certain properties in the name of his nephew Mooso or of his firm.

Plaintiffs claim an account of the trust properties, pray that the surplus moneys be handed over to them and that it be declared that the trust properties purchased by Assanmal and Basrio are the property of plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs are suing in forma pauperis. If the suit is barred by the Law of Limitation, they have no cause of action and the suit cannot be entertained. Prima facie the suit is time-barred; but plaintiffs rely on section 10 of the Limitation Act; if this section has no application, the suit is admittedly time-barred.

Now, section 10 has a very limited application; it is available only as against persons in whom property has become vested in trust for a specific purpose, that is, for a purpose which is specified or expressed by the author; it has no reference to trusts which are merely founded on an unexpressed but implied intention of the party creating them, or to trusts which are raised by construction of Equity without any reference to the intention of the parties.

An immediate reply to plaintiffs' contention is furnished by the terms of the deed itself. The property of the debtors was, in clear terms, transferred absolutely for the benefit of creditors; no resulting interest whatever was reserved. The deed embodied an agreement under which, in return for an absolute discharge for their debts, the debtors handed over everything they possessed.

Mr. Hirdaram contends that if the whole circumstances of the case be gone into, it will be discovered, or rather may possibly be discovered—for no definite particulars are known—that, contrary to expectation, the debtors' estate realised a considerable surplus, that if the debtors had anticipated this, they would have made due provision for it in the deed and that Equity should, therefore, not only read into the deed such a provision, but should institute an inquiry in order to ascertain whether or not property ever did become vested in the defendants in trust for plaintiffs.

A bare statement of plaintiffs' case seems to render it obvious that it does not come under the provisions of section 10, for his case depends on proof of facts and events which happened many years ago. As stated by

Bowen, L. J., in Soar v. Ashwell (1): "In such cases conflicts of evidence are possible or probable, and to deny to the person to be charged the shelter or benefit of a period of limitation would be obviously dangerous and unjust." Mr. Hirdaram places reliance on this case. Ashwell was a solicitor to certain trustees; as such solicitor he had received and retained a certain sum of money forming part of the trust funds, on which he had regularly paid interest to the beneficiaries. It was held that Ashwell held the money on an express trust for the trustees, and that a suit by surviving trustee was not barred. The case comes clearly within the terms of section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The only other case cited by Mr. Hirdaram, which requires notice, is Salter v. Cavanagh (2). This case establishes that, where property is vested in a trustee under a Will, he holds it as express trustee, not only for the devisees and legatees named therein, but as regards any undisposed of residue, for the heir-at-law and next of kin; the trust is said to arise on the face of the instrument itself.

The principle thus enunciated seems to form an exception to the general rule, but it was accepted as good law by Lord St. Leonards and by Mr. Lewin, and in 1889 was followed in Patrick v. Simpson (3); but no inclination has been shown to extend the principle to trusts created by deeds of composition.

The case of Smith v. Cooke (4) appears to be on all fours with the present one. It was held on the language of the particular deed that the assignees divested themselves of all interest in the property for the benefit of their creditors, not that they put the property in trust for a special and limited purpose, but that they abandoned it and gave it up altogether, and that, therefore, there could be no room for any resulting trust.

The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs as no cause of action is disclosed.

Application dismissed.

JAKARIA MUNDA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contribution, suit for—Joint tenancy—Payment of rent by one—Liability of other joint tenants to contribute—Decree, form of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 43, 70.

When several persons hold a tenancy jointly, the liability for rent is joint and several under section 43 of the Contract Act, and where one of these persons pays the whole rent, he can sue the others for contribution under section 70 of the Contract Act and is entitled to a decree to recover jointly from the others.

Appeal against the decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 13th April 1912, reversing that of the Munsif and Sub-Divisional Officer at Khunti, dated the 22nd March 1911.

Babus Biraj Mohan Mojumdar and Dhirendra Krishna Ray, for the Appellants.

Babu Nogendra Nath Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and defendants are members of a village, Khunt, in Chota Nagpur. The plaintiff alleges that he has paid the whole rent due upon the holding and he sues the defendants for contribution. The Munsif finds that contribution was never paid before and has dismissed the suit. The Judge, on appeal, finds that contribution is due on the footing that the liability of the tenants in respect of the holding was joint and several, and he has given the plaintiff a decree for three-eighths of the total rental for the area in suit. He has apportioned the share of each set of defendants at one-eighth. In second appeal by the defendants the first point urged is that the payment made by the plaintiff was gratuitous and that, therefore, no suit for contribution lies. This contention, in my opinion, is not well founded. There is a distinct finding of fact by the District Judge that the defendants hold the tenancy jointly with the plaintiff; so under section 43, Contract Act, the liability for rent is joint and several. The plea of the defendants to the effect that by private partition the plaintiff took the three pahans of land in excess of his share and as a consideration agreed to pay the whole of the rent has not been established. The District Judge is clearly of the opinion that the payment by the plaintiff was not voluntary. I think that the plaintiff's payment was not voluntary and I also think the case is clearly covered by section 70 of the Contract Act. The next point taken is that the District Judge was wrong in his apportionment of the rent. Although the District Judge does not explain how he arrived at the fraction one-eighth in respect of each set of defendants, it seems upon the admission of the defendants that the plaintiff holds five pahans out of the total eight pahans in the holding. He has, therefore, been rightly held liable by the District Judge to pay five-eighths of the rent, but I cannot see on what evidence the apportionment as between the three sets of defendants has been made equally. In this Court they expressly deny that they hold the same number of pahans each. The proper decree, therefore, will be to allow the plaintiff to recover jointly from the defendants and to set aside that part of the District Judge's order which relates to apportionment. The appeal is allowed without costs and the District Judge's decree modified accordingly.

Appeal allowed; Decree modified.

THE CREDIT BANK OF INDIA, LTD.—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s 45—Share-holder—Minor, whether can be share-holder—Receipt of dividends—Estoppel by conduct—Estoppel—Registered holder of share, rights and liabilities of.

A share-holder of a limited Company, who was a minor at the date of allotment of shares to him, but after attaining majority received dividends and raised no objection to his name being included in the register of members, is estopped by his conduct while a person sui juris from denying as between himself and the Company's representative that he is a share-holder.

A minor may be a member of a Company under the Companies Act of 1882.

A registered holder of shares in a Statutory Company is a person with a vested interest in property, which may be burdened with an obligation to pay calls in the future. The registered member cannot keep the interest and prevent the Company from having it and dealing with it as their own without being bound to bear the burthen attached to it.

FACTS of the case appear from the following order of Mecleod, J., appealed against:—

This is an application by a share-holder to be struck off the list of contributories on the ground that he was an infant at the time he applied for the shares, and that, therefore, his contract with the Company was void. The applicant may be considered to be in the same position as a share-holder whose name has been put upon the register, either without his consent or without any application on his part. As soon as he becomes aware of the fact he may refuse to accept the ownership of the shares within a reasonable time, but if he allows his name to remain on the register without doing anything he must be taken to have acquiesced. In Constantinople and Alexandria Hotels Co., In re; Ebbetts, Ex parte (1) a minor made a similar application, and Giffard, L. J., remarked: "I do not rely on the transfer which he executed, but on the ground that he acquiesced for a lengthened period in being on the register."

Again in Yeoland Consols, In re (2) the applicant was put upon the register when a minor without any application on his part. On an application to remove his name from the list of contributories on the winding-up Stirling, J., said: "Being on the register of the Company for the shares he is prima facie entitled to them. Shares are property which may turn out to be valuable, and may on the other hand turn out to carry with them only a very serious liability. The law assumes that where property is assigned to a person the assignee accepts it, but he may refuse to accept it if he does so within a reasonable time." The present applicant knew he was on the register for the shares. From his coming of age in July or August 1912 till the winding-up order was made in November 1913, he must be taken to have known that his name was on the register and since he chose to allow his name to remain there without doing anything, it cannot now be removed."

Mr. Kanga, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant appeals from an order of the Chamber Judge including him in the list of contributories of the Credit Bank of India, a limited Company now being wound-up by the Court. The appellant applied for fifty shares in this Company, which were allotted to him on the 8th of January 1910 on payment of Rs. 10 per share, the nominal value being Rs. 50. If he has been rightly included among the contributories, he will be liable for Rs. 40 per share. He contests his liability on the ground that he was a minor at the date of the allotment. It is not disputed that he attained majority in August 1912. He has received dividends at the rate of six per cent. per annum on the sums paid upon his shares twice in each of the years 1911, 1912 and 1913, and he has raised no objection to his name being included in the register of members until January 1914. Under these circumstances it cannot be doubted that he has intentionally permitted the Company to believe him to be a share-holder and in that belief to pay him dividends on his shares since he attained majority. He is, therefore, estopped now by his conduct while a person sui juris from denying as between himself and the Company's representative that he is a share-holder.

This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal; but we will express our opinion upon the point made in the excellent argument of Mr. Kanga. His contention was that the matter must be decided according to the law contained in the Contract Act under which a minor is not competent to contract and, therefore, it cannot be said that he has agreed with the Company to become a member, which is one of the conditions of membership under the Companies Act of 1882, section 45. This argument would be more convincing if the words used in section 45 were "has contracted with the Company," for under the Cantract Act it is not every agreement that is a contract. Moreover, it appears from the Satutory Article - 45 in Table A of the Companies Act that a minor may be a member of a Company under that Act.

It has been settled law in England for many years that a registered holder of shares in a Statutory Company is a person with a vested interest in property, which may be burdened with an obligation to pay calls in the future. The registered member "cannot keep the interest and prevent the Company from having it and dealing with it as their own without being bound to bear the burthen attached to it": London & North Western Railway Company v. M'Michael (3).

This view of the position of a share-holder pleading minority when registered was taken by Stirling, J., in Yeoland Consols, In re (2) and the learned Chamber Judge has, we think, rightly adopted it in the present case. The same principle underlies section 248 of the Contract Act. Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus.

Sale—Consideration—Full consideration not paid—Vendee not entitled to possession without payment of whole consideration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Power of High Court.

ABRAHAM SERVAI v. RAPHIAL MUTHIRIAN.

In a suit for possession of the property purchased, the vendee who has not paid the full consideration cannot be allowed in a Court of Equity to recover possession except on the condition of his paying the balance of the purchase-money.

Under Order XLI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure the High Court is entitled to pass any decree which is in accordance with justice, whatever the decision of the first Court or the lower Appellate Court may have been.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 335 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 381 of 1910.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (for Mr. V. Narasimha Aiyangar), for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar and C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit connected with the suit out of which the Second Appeal No. 694 of 1913, in which judgment was just now pronounced, [S. Ramasawmy Aiyar v. Vanamamalai Aiyar (1)] arose. The plaintiff in this case is the 1st defendant in the other suit, while the 2nd defendant in this suit is the plaintiff in the other suit. For reasons set out in my judgment in the former suit, I hold that the sale-deed to the plaintiff by the 2nd defendant's father in 1896 cannot be set aside in whole or in part, as that question is res judicata by the decision in the former suit of 1906 between the same parties which refused to set aside that said sale-deed of 1896. As, however, it is the vendee (the plaintiff) who has brought the suit for possession and as it was found in the former suit that a part of the purchase money had not been paid by the vendee (plaintiff), he cannot be allowed in a Court of Equity to recover possession of the alienated property till he pays the balance of the purchase money.

In the former suit, it was found that out of the purchase money Rs. 3,000 mentioned as consolidated price for the houses in dispute in this suit and for the lands in dispute in the former suit, Rs. 1,995-8-0 alone had been paid by the vendee and the remaining Rs. 1,004-8-0 had not been paid. This finding is res judicata between the parties.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 873.

The lower Appellate Court's finding in this case that only Rs. 1,000 and odd of Rs. 3,000 was paid and formed part of the antecedent debts, cannot be accepted as the point is, as I said above, res judicata. The value of the houses alone was on the date of the sale Rs. 700 according to the findings of the lower Courts. Out of this Rs. 700 the plaintiff must be deemed to have paid Rs. 700 into 1995¼ by Rs. 3,000, that is about Rs. 465. He has not paid the balance of purchase money, Rs. 235. As neither the 2nd defendant nor his father was paid this Rs. 235 and as the father is dead leaving the son as his sole heir and survivor, the 2nd defendant is entitled to obtain the whole of this Rs. 235 in equity before he could be called upon to give up possession of the houses in dispute to the plaintiff. In the result, and as under Order XLI, rule 33, of the Civil Procedure Code, this Court is entitled to pass the decree which is in accordance with justice, whatever the decision of the 1st Court or the lower Appellate Court in the suit has been, I would award to the plaintiff (in supersession of the decrees of the lower Courts) possession of the properties sued for, on condition that the plaintiff deposits into Court for payment over to the 2nd defendant Rs. 235 within three months of this date. The parties will bear their respective costs throughout.

NAPIER, J.—I concur.

Appeal allowed in part.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiff and the defendant in this case were joint executants of a promissory note. It is common ground that each received part of the sum borrowed, and the correctness of the lower Court's finding as to its division between them and the amount re-paid by each cannot be disputed. They were, however, sued by their creditor for the balance due; and a decree was passed against the plaintiff for the whole, the defendant being exonerated on his plea of limitation. The plaintiff satisfied the decree and sues the defendant for contribution. The lower Court held that, notwithstanding the defendant's exoneration, it was equitable that he should contribute towards the discharge of the common debt. This civil revision petition has been urged against that decision. It has been referred to a Bench by a learned Judge sitting in the Admission Court.

As pointed out by the learned Judge, the facts in Marrivada Chinna Ramayya v. Veerapurani Venkatappiah (1), on which the lower Court relied, differed materially from those now in question, because in it there was no decision on limitation or any other ground, such as there is here, against any of the defendants, and some had not been sued by the creditor. The principle there recognised is merely that liability for contribution between co-contractors is enforceable, although the suit to enforce it is brought after a suit on the original liability would be barred. Here the point is that the original liability was held unenforceable against the defendant, not only before the present suit was brought, but also before the plaintiff was held liable or made any payment.

The argument, apart from any authority, has been presented as follows. The defendant has been exonerated; and the debt must have been kept alive against the plaintiff by some act on his part, for which it is not suggested that the defendant is responsible. Whether the plaintiff is regarded as the defendant's joint contractor or, as he contends that he should be, as his surety in respect of the amount which he has had to pay on the defendant's behalf, is immaterial, because he could not affect the defendant's position in either capacity. The debt having been held unrecoverable from the defendant directly, it is unjust that it should be recovered from him indirectly in consequence of the plaintiff's conduct, which he did not authorise. This treats the defendant's liability as originating in, or at least as depending on, the fact that a decree preceded the plaintiff's payment. But on the other side, it is contended that it should be placed on a broader basis with reference to an earlier stage in the transaction, the separate contract between the parties, when the debt was incurred, to indemnify each other for any excess payment made by one for the other, which was independent of the creditor's suit and its result. We have to decide which of these views is correct.

There is, so far as we have been shown, no direct Indian authority. But Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (2) is relied on by the plaintiff, though one portion of the judgment certainly supports the defendant. It is, therefore, necessary to ascertain what was really decided in it. The plaintiff, a trustee, sued the sons of his predecessor in the trusteeship for damages on account of their father's misfeasance. The limitation applicable was that which would have been applicable to a suit against him; Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (3). The suit against them was, therefore, barred. The plaintiff also, however, sued certain sureties, against whom (so far as the report shows) the suit was still in time, solely because they had given land as security. It was held that they had not been discharged by the fact that the remedy against their principal had been lost, since his liability, and therefore theirs, to plaintiff were still subsisting. That is intelligible. But the question there was between the creditor and his debtors, principal and surety, directly, whereas here it is only between the latter: and the case, therefore, gives no support to this part of the plaintiff's argument. He relies here in fact on an identification of the defendant's liability to the creditor, which no doubt is unaffected by the latter's loss of his remedy, with his distinct liability to the plaintiff, which has not been shown to be legitimate and is irreconcilable with the other cases he has cited. The relation between the sureties and their principal debtor is in fact dealt with in Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (2) only obiter in the words at page 311: "It has been argued that the surety will be prejudiced if he is liable to be sued when he cannot have any remedies against the debtor after a suit against him has become barred. The answer is he is himself to blame. He can easily avoid the risk and clothe himself with all the creditor's rights by payment or performance as soon as the debtor becomes liable. Section 140 of the Indian Contract Act." This, no doubt, supports the view for which the defendant contends. The question, however, was not before the learned Judges directly, and the authorities relevant to it were not referred to; and if the hardship involved and the means of avoiding it are to be considered, it may respectfully be suggested that there is no more reason for penalising the surety for not paying and for failure to acquire the right to sue the principal debtor, than the debtor for not paying what he primarily was bound to pay.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 1102; (1910) M. W. N. 839; 9 M. L. T. 212.

(2) 7 Ind. Cas. 898; 33 M. 308; 20 M. L. J. 633; 8 M. L. T. 321.

(3) 27 M. 243; 14 M. L. J. 84.

The other cases are Wolmershausen v. Gullick (4) and Gardner v. Brooke (5). They are directly relevant and are in the plaintiff's favour. In the first the question arose between co-sureties and is dealt with very shortly. The Court inclined to the belief that the Statute did not begin to run until the plaintiff made his payment, but was not obliged for the purpose of the case to decide between that date and the date on which the amount of his liability was ascertained. That point, however, was placed beyond doubt as regards this presidency by Putti Narayanamurthi v. Marimuthu Pillai (6) and is not left open in the second case above mentioned, in which the discussion is full and the parties, like those before us, were joint makers of a promissory note. The reasons for the decision in the plaintiff's favour were that the defendant's liability rested on grounds of equity, independent of the original contract with the creditor, and was based on the payment made in discharge of the common obligation and had no existence till that payment was made. These decisions are directly in point, and in the circumstances must be followed in preference to the obiter dictum above referred to though it occurs in a judgment of this Court. In accordance with them the conclusion must be in the plaintiff's favour. The civil revision petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

TYABJI, J.—The question before us is, whether a joint promisor, whose liability to the promisee was kept alive beyond three years from the date of the promissory note and who was consequently compelled to pay by a decree of the Court more than his proportion of the debt to the promisee, can sue another joint promisor for contribution though the decree exonerated that other joint promisor from payment, on the ground that the debt as against him was barred by limitation.

The facts are as follows:—

The plaintiff and the defendant executed a joint promissory note on 25th June 1903. In or before January 1905 the defendant sent Rs. 20 to the plaintiff for part payment to the promisee and the plaintiff paid this sum together with Rs. 58 on his own account. Subsequently the promisee sued both the plaintiff and the defendant for the balance still due. A decree was passed on the 5th August 1911, in which the whole balance was ordered to be paid by the present plaintiff and the present defendant was exonerated from all payment, the suit on the promissory note having become barred at the time as against the present defendant. On the 9th March 1912, the plaintiff paid the whole of the amount decreed and in the same year sued for contribution from the defendant. His suit was allowed by the District Munsif. This petition raised the question whether the District Munsif was right.

Being a suit for contribution between joint promisors (there being no express contract for indemnity between the joint promisors), the case must be governed by sections 42-44 of the Indian Contract Act, the effect of which for the present purpose may be stated as follows: Where two or more persons have made a joint promise, in the absence of a contract to the contrary,

(1) as between the joint promisors and the promisee,

(a) all the joint promisors must fulfil the promise (section 42):

(b) the promisee may compel any one to perform the whole promise (section 43):

(c) a release by the promisee of one joint promisor does not discharge the other or others (section 44, first part).

(2) As amongst the joint promisors themselves, each joint promisor may compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise (section 43, paragraph 2).

Three incidents connected with the right of contribution are expressly laid down:

(a) if any one joint promisor makes default in contributing, the other must bear the loss (section 43, paragraph 3);

(b) section 43 does not derogate from the rights of a surety to recover from his principal payments made on behalf of the principal, and

(c) the release of a joint promisor by the promisee does not free the joint promisor so released from responsibility to the other joint promisor or joint promisors (section 44, second part).

The right to contribution (as between joint promisors) is referred to in the part of the Act directly applicable as a right "to compel contribution to the performance of the promise."

This may, at first sight, appear to make the liability to contribute coincident with the performance of the promise. But the duty to contribute is clearly distinct from the duty to pay to the promisee: the first is to the promisor, the second to the promisee: the right of each joint promisor to claim indemnity does not consist merely of being subrogated to the right of the original promisee: for though the promisee's rights may have been released, the responsibility to the joint promisor is not annulled (section 44). Following, therefore, the wording of the Act it may be stated that the right of each joint promisor to compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise, is unaffected by the mode in which the promisee exercises or fails to exercise his rights (a) to compel all the joint promisors to fulfil the promise (section 42) or (b) to compel anyone of them to do so (section 43) or (c) to release one, without discharging the other (section 44). An express release by the promisee cannot (on principle, even apart from section 44) affect the right of a third person (the joint promisor). The direct liability on the joint promise may thus be expressly annulled, without affecting the collateral liability. It is difficult then to conceive how the promisee's mere omission to sue during the statutory period—an omission which does not destroy even his own right, but merely bars his remedy by suit Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (2)—can affect the joint promisor's collateral right.

It seems to me, therefore, that the District Munsif was right.

The result at which I have arrived agrees with the view of a strong Court of Appeal in Ireland, in Gardner v. Brooke (5), upholding the concurrent decisions of O'Brien, C.J., and the Division Court. In that case the right of contribution from a joint promisor was thus referred to: "The right comes, in equity, originally and absolutely, by the payment in discharge of a common burthen, and has no existence whatever, inchoate or complete, till the payment is made. It is not, therefore, affected by what affects the contract... .. .. ..The principle came into English from the Civil Law, where it pursues exactly the same consequences and distinctions that are found in equity, all based on community of burthen and benefit from payment, and none from agreement." In the same case Gibson, J., said: "Contribution is not limited to cases of guarantee, but extends to all cases where one is compelled to pay more than his proportion of a joint liability: Ramskill v. Edwards (7). The question here is, what is the extent of the obligation of the joint makers to one another? Is it an unqualified liability, according to the proportionate shares of each to indemnify any joint maker who may, at any time, be legally compelled to pay more than his share? or does the duty depend on the co-debtor, who has paid in excess of his share, being merely subrogated into the creditor's rights? or does the obligation only bind a party so long as he himself remains liable to the creditor, and, therefore, may himself require the benefit of indemnity against the others? The first view is, I think, plainly the true one. When they signed the note, the parties must have contemplated that it would be paid, and that the burden should be shared equally. The fact that one happens to escape from legal liability to the creditor, without the consent of his associates, and perhaps even without their knowledge, cannot be allowed to disturb the original obligation between the co-debtors, or to alter the proportions of liability or contribution, which must be ascertained from the note at the time that it was made. The duty to conbtribute here binds all, so long as any one remains legally liable by virtue of the joint contract."

The facts of the case last cited are exactly similar to those now before us, except in two particulars: (1) there the payment in respect of which contribution was brought was not made in execution of a decree; (2) there was no decree exonerating the defendant from liability on the contract.

The first of these particulars does not distinguish the case in favour of the defendant.

With reference to the second, the defendant before us contends that by being exonerated from payment in the previous suit he is exonerated from the duty to contribute. But the decree gave effect to the direct liability arising from the contract as between the promisee and the joint promisors, in so far as that liability could be enforced by suit. It did not affect the collateral liability as between the joint promisors themselves, arising not from the contract which was the cause of action in the first suit, but from the payment consequent on the decree.

Another argument addressed to us was that the acts of the plaintiff, keeping the debt alive against himself after the promissory note became barred as against the defendant, made in effect a new contract between the plaintiff and the promisee, that the defendant was not privy as a joint promisor to this new contract. Such may conceivably be the case where a joint promisor against whom the debt is barred pays the debt; a payment so made may conceivably be taken as a payment not on account of any legal liability, but made out of honour: and a person making such a payment cannot in honour ask another to contribute to the maintenance of his honour, where under such circumstances an attempt is made to compel contribution. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer's fears (expressed in his referring judgment) that the first payment might in fact have been made in collusion with the promisee might be well founded. But in the present case there is no suspicion of collusion and no basis for saying that a new contract for payment was made between the plaintiff and the promisee. The final payment was made because there was a decree against the plaintiff, and it would appear that at least one of the earlier payment, which kept the debt alive was made on behalf of the defendant.

It seems to me, therefore, that alike on the construction of the section, on principle and on authority, the plaintiff ought to succeed in the suit.

Before concluding I must refer to two decisions of this Court. In Putti Narayanamurthi Aiyar v. Marimuthu Pillai (6), section 145 of the Indian Contract Act was referred to as though it directly governed a joint promisor's right of contribution. It seems to me that though the joint promisor's right is analogous to the surety's right of indemnity under section 145, there are distinctions between the two. The right of indemnity referred to in section 145 and the connected sections 126, 131, 133—147 inheres in a person who contracts with the promisee himself expressly and solely as surety; in such a case the right to indemnity is implied, section 145. Next there is the case of a person who is a principal joint promisor as between himself and the promisee, but as between himself and another, the joint promisor is (expressly or impliedly) only a surety, the promisee not being privy to the contract of the suretyship between the promisors inter se: section 132. Thirdly, there is the case of an express contract of indemnity (section 124) as distinct from a promise to indemnify implied by section 145 in a contract of guarantee. All these rights and liabilities are analogous to the one with which we have to deal. But if and in so far as the direct rules contained in sections 42—44 are not a sufficient guide, resort should be had, it seems to me, in the first instance, to section 124, which refers to the rights under an express contract to indemnify similar to that which section 43 implies amongst joint promisors: rather than to section 145 which refers to a contract for indemnity implied between a person who contracts expressly and solely as a surety on the one hand and the principal debtor on the other hand. In order to make section 145 applicable to joint promisors, the contractual liability of each joint promisor as principal debtor must be assumed to have reference only to a proportionate part of the debt, an assumption that is opposed to section 42.

The next case is Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (2), which has been already referred to. The question there before the Court was whether a surety's liability to the creditor (as defined in section 126) was discharged by the fact that the creditor's suit against the principal debtor was barred by limitation. That question was answered in the negative. The ground for decision was that though the surety's liability continues only so long as "there is no act or omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor," yet it could not be said that the legal consequence of the creditor's forbearance to sue the principal debtor during the period of limitation and the consequent loss of his remedy was a "discharge" of the principal debtor. In dealing with an objection to the result of this reasoning, it seems to have been assumed by the Court that the surety's right against the principal debtor had become barred at the time of the decision, i. e., before the surety had made any payments. It is unnecessary to consider whether this assumption was consistent with the terms of section 145 of the Indian Contract Act and with the ruling in Putti Narayanamurthi Aiyar v. Marimuthu Pillai (6), where it was held that the cause of action under section 145 does not arise until actual payment by the surety. See also Marrivada Chinna Ramayya v. Veerapurani Venkatappiah (1), Wolmershausen v. Gullick (4). For the remark in Subramania Aiar's case (2), based on the assumption just referred to, was purely obiter, dealing not with the rights of the creditor against the surety which were being adjudicated upon, but dealing with the remedy of the surety which might or might not have been barred as against the principal debtor. The circumstances alluded to on page 304 of the report and the fact that some property was given as security, seem to have brought about the result that the creditor's remedy was barred against the principal debtor, but enforceable against the property given as security. It seems to me that it would be going beyond all the limits of the doctrine of stare decisis to consider ourselves bound by an assumption as to a question which is not before the Court, an assumption made merely for the purpose of dealing with an argument that was not accepted.

I agree that the petition should be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SIDE APPEAL No. 20 OF 1914.

August 28, 1914.

Present:—Sir Basil Scott, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Davar.

G. K. MALVANKAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE CREDIT BANK OF INDIA, LTD.—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VI of 1882)—Security deposit mixed with funds of Bank by agreement of parties—Payment of interest—Deposit to be treated as ordinary debt in liquidation.

In the case of a going Bank, the Bank is entitled to treat a security deposit as ear-marked for a particular purpose and refuse to deal with it for any other purpose, but in a liquidation of an insolvent Bank if the occasion for realising the security has not arisen and if the money has, with the consent of the giver of the security, been received by the Bank and mixed with its funds in consideration of an agreement to pay interest on it, the Bank is only a debtor and not a trustee.

Where an agent of a Bank deposited a certain sum as security for the faithful discharge of his duties and agreed that the Bank should receive and hold the money paying interest at 6 per cent. for its use the money being repayable, if not forfeited for losses occasioned through the agent's default upon his ceasing to be the Bank's agent.

Held, that in liquidation proceedings the agent could only rank as an ordinary creditor and could not take preference over other creditors of the Bank.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order of Macleod, J., appealed against:

This is a summons taken out by one G. K. Malvankar, the agent of the Ahmedabad branch of the above Bank against the Liquidator calling upon him to show cause why he should not be directed to hand over the amount of the security deposit placed by the said G. K. Malvankar and lying with the Credit Bank of India in liquidation.

On the 2nd July 1910, Jaffer Jusab, the Manager of the Bank, wrote to Malvankar informing him that he had been appointed Branch Manager at Ahmedabad on a salary of Rs. 75 a month subject to the approval of the Head Office, and that he would have to give as security Rs. 5,000 to be deposited with the Bank and also a further security from the Bank of Bombay for Rs. 10,000 and if the Head Office Manager thought it necessary a fidelity guarantee policy for Rs. 15,000.

Malvankar thereupon deposited Rs. 4,500 with the Bank and acted as Branch Manager until the winding-up order was made.

According to his affidavit after he had sent Rs. 4,500 to Bombay, the Manager wanted to place the amount in fixed deposit. Whereupon Malvankar came to Bombay to protest. He was eventually given a receipt as follows on 10th July 1912 :—

"Received from G. K. Malvankar Rs. 4,500 only as a security deposit subject to the service regulations of this Bank, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum."

He now contends that he is entitled to be paid the said sum in full in preference to the creditors of the Bank, as he paid the said sum to the Bank as his employee and did not pay it to the Bank as a customer.

His story is not quite accurate in detail. From the affidavit of the Liquidator it appears that as a matter of fact Malvankar paid to the Bank Rs. 2,000 on the 8th July 1910, Rs. 2,000 on the 9th July 1910 and Rs. 500 on the 17th December 1910. The said sums were entered in the Fixed Deposit Ledger to the credit of Malvankar as fixed deposits for twelve months at 6 per cent. interest. Subsequently the whole amount of Rs. 4,500 was transferred to the Security Deposit Account and a receipt given as above on the 10th July 1912. Interest was paid from time to time to Malvankar up to the 30th June 1913. In the half yearly balance-sheet the said sum was included in the item of Current Savings Bank and other deposits The said sum was not kept separate or invested in any particular securities, but was mixed with the other moneys of the Bank. Mr. Jinnah argued that the Rs. 4,500 was paid to the Bank to be held by them upon trust, that his client was entitled to follow the trust fund in the hands of the Bank, and that, if the Bank had mixed the trust money with its own moneys, whatever moneys were found with the Bank at the date of liquidation up to Rs. 4,500 must be considered as trust money.

That argument, I think, is perfectly sound. If Malvankar had given Rs. 4,500 to the Bank to be held by the Bank during the period of his employment as security for his honesty and fidelity, the Bank would have been bound to keep that sum separate, and if they mixed it with their own moneys, he would be entitled to recover it out of the cash balance of the Bank at the termination of his employment. But unfortunately for him this was not the arrangement he made with the Bank. He agreed in effect that the Bank should treat his Rs. 4,500 in the same way as money deposited by a customer. He was to receive interest on it at six per cent. as long as he remained in the employment of the Bank. If that ceased he would be entitled to recover the principal with interest to date, provided that the Bank had no claim against him in respect of defalcation or otherwise. The Bank was entitled to invest the money in any way they pleased, as no stipulation was made regarding the method of investment. Supposing, for instance, it had been agreed that the money should be invested in Port Trust Bonds and at the date of liquidation the Bank had Port Trust Bonds for that amount, Malvankar would be able to claim those as belonging to him, but as the case stands I can see no difference between him and an ordinary depositor, except that the deposit was not for a fixed period but for the time he remained in the employment of the Bank. I discharge the summons, but under the circumstances without costs. The Liquidator can have his costs out of the estate.

Mr. Kanga, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant's claim is that he should be paid in full by the Liquidator of the Bombay Credit Bank the amount deposited by him in 1910 as security for the faithful discharge of his duties as the agent of the Bank's branch at Ahmedabad.

The money was originally placed by the Bank Manager to an ordinary Fixed Deposit Account bearing interest at six per cent., but upon objection being made by the appellant it was transferred in 1911 to the Security Deposit Account bearing interest at the same rate as before. There was a separate ledger kept by the Bank for such accounts, and after 1911 a counterfoil receipt book, specially made out for Security Deposit Accounts, was prepared and from it a receipt was given to the appellant for his money held at interest.

The Liquidator contends, and the learned Chamber Judge has held, that the appellant can only rank as an ordinary creditor in the liquidation. The appellant contends that the money is earmarked and must be treated as trust property in the Liquidator's hands. That in the case of a going Bank, the Bank is entitled to treat a security deposit as earmarked for a particular purpose and refuse to deal with it for any other purpose cannot be disputed, but in a liquidation of an insolvent Bank the question is whether the Security Fund can be identified and followed by the giver, if the occasion for realizing the security has not arisen. If the money has, with the consent of the giver of the security, been received by the Bank and mixed with its funds in consideration of an agreement to pay interest on it, the Bank is only a debtor and not a trustee.

We have no doubt that this is the position in the present case. The appellant agreed that the Bank should receive and hold the money, paying interest at 6 per cent. for its use, the money being re-payable, if not forfeited for losses occasioned through the appellant's default, upon his ceasing to be the Bank's agent. So thoroughly did the parties realise that the Bank and the appellant were debtor and creditor, that the appellant at the desire of the Bank's Manager used in rendering his accounts of his management to debit the Bank with the interest on his deposit. This has been admitted by the appellant himself.

The appellant, therefore, can only rank as an ordinary creditor. We affirm the order of the learned Judge, which was without costs, and dismiss this appeal also without costs, as it is a test case governing several others in this liquidation.

No amendment should be allowed which includes a claim which could not, under the law of limitation, be made the subject of a first suit, nor one that introduces a completely new cause of action.

Although no appeal lies against an order allowing an amendment, objection as to amendment can properly be raised in appeal against the decree in the suit.

Anything on which the plaintiff relies for extending the period of limitation must be specifically alleged in the plaint.

When some of the partners sell the partnership business without the knowledge or consent of the other partners, the partnership is thereby dissolved.

A suit for declaration that the sale of a partnership business is fraudulent, null and void as regards plaintiffs and for recovery of the assets from the purchasers and also for an account of the partnership business from the other partners is bad for misjoinder.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—Plaintiffs are alleged to constitute a firm known by the name of Udhomal Gaganmal doing business, or at any rate residing, at Radhan.

Plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 formerly carried on business in partnership at Tharri Mehar also in the name of Udhomal Gaganmal. The latter firm had a branch shop also at Tharri in which defendants Nos. 3 and 6 and one Bhawandas, now deceased, had shares. On the 5th January 1904, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold the branch Karkhana to defendants Nos. 3 to 6, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiffs, by means of a private award, and this transaction was confirmed by a decree dated 27th January 1904 in Suit No. 56 of 1904 in the District Court, Sukkur-Larkana; to this suit plaintiffs were not parties.

On the 22nd March 1906 plaintiffs filed Suit No. 17 of 1906 for winding up both Karkhanas, viz., the one at Tharri and the branch shop, but on it being held by this Court, on the 1st April 1909, that there should be separate suits in respect of each cause of action, Suit No. 17 of 1906 was continued in respect of the main Tharri Karkhana, and this suit was filed in respect of the branch business

In the original plaint, filed on the 20th December 1909 but amended and re-filed on the 15th January 1910, the plaintiffs were described as "The Karkhana known by the name of the Udhomal tealad Gaganmal, the persons being interested in it being: (8 persons named)—by the manager, plaintiff No. 3, Kirpaldas Udhomal. The plaintiffs prayed for declaration that the petty Karkhana was still a part or branch of the main Karkhana and that decree in Suit No. 56 of 1904 was fraudulent, and null and void as regards plaintiffs.

To this plaint defendants raised three preliminary objections.—

(1) That the form of the suit was bad, all plaintiffs should join in the plaint.

(2) That there was misjoinder of parties and causes of action.

(3) That the suit could not be maintained until the sale of the Karkhana and the decree thereon had been set aside. On the 27th January 1910, an amended plaint was filed in which plaintiffs prayed that the branch shop business might be wound up, and, if there was loss, it might be recovered from the parties according to their shares.

From the order dated the 18th April 1910, it appears that plaintiffs contended that the firm had been dissolved when the branch Karkhana was fraudulently sold to defendants Nos. 3 to 6, that no relief was asked for or desired as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5; all that they desired was that they should be bound by the findings. The Court ordered that the plaint should be amended so as to show distinctly what relief was required as against each set of defendants and also that each plaintiff should sign the plaint.

On the 28th April 1910, a further amended plaint was put in, signed by all the plaintiffs. The heading still describes the plaintiffs as the Karkhana known by the name of Udhomal tealad Gaganmal, the persons interested in it being so and so. In this amended plaint, plaintiffs pray that the petty Karkhana be dissolved, debts paid and the assets after paying defendants Nos. 3 to 6, according to their shares, be paid to the main Karkhana of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that any loss should, after recovering from defendants Nos. 3 to 6, according to their shares, be recovered from the main Karkhana, and that as defendants Nos. 4 and 5 had no interest in the Karkhana, they be directed to hand over all the partnership property and outstandings that may have come to their possession.

The preliminary objection that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action was again taken. The Court held that the cause of action was the taking of accounts and the division of assets after expulsion of trespassers: that no relief was asked as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5, they being merely joined as trespassers who must hand over the property: and held that there was no misjoinder.

By the final judgment, it was held that the suit could be maintained without first suing to set aside the decree on the award, that the suit was within time, that the plaint had been properly presented in December 1909, that the assignment by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had been fraudulently made with intent to injure the plaintiffs, that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were trespassers and in collusion with the other defendants, and that they were bound to hand over the Karkhana, property, books, etc., with them. It directed that the Karkhana be dissolved and wound up and that a Commissioner be appointed to take accounts as prayed in the plaint.

Against this preliminary decree defendants Nos. 3 to 6 have appealed, and Mr. Lalchand for appellants has asked for findings on three issues :—

(1) Was the plaint properly framed and properly presented in December 1909?

(2) Was the suit barred by limitation?

(3) Is the suit bad for misjoinder?

The case is a complicated one, we will endeavour to clear it up step by step.

When, on the 5th January 1904, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold the petty Karkhana and its assets to defendants Nos. 3 to 6, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiffs, the petty partnership carrying on the branch shop was thereby dissolved. For defendants Nos. 3 to 6 had withdrawn from it [see Contract Act, section 253(7)], and the whole business had been bodily transferred to another firm. This was the position deliberately taken up by plaintiffs when the order of 18th April 1910 was passed.

Now, this petty partnership was thus constituted at the time of its dissolution :—

The Tharri firm of Udhomal Gaganmal	... 6	shares.
Gulrajmal	... 2½	,,
Popatmal Menghomal	... 2	,,

But the Tharri firm of Udhomal Gaganmal consisted of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Plaintiffs desired two things : they wanted the accounts of the branch shop to be settled up and anything due to the Tharri firm of Udhomal Gaganmal to be paid, and they wanted also for it to be declared that the transfer of the assets of the petty Karkhana to defendants Nos. 3 to 6 was fraudulent and that the latter should be compelled to either make restitution or give compensation. They endeavoured to combine these two perfectly different causes of action in one suit, notwithstanding that the plaintiffs and defendants in each case were necessarily different. The attempt to accomplish the impossible has led to serious complications.

In the amended plaint of the 15th January, plaintiffs confined themselves to the second cause of action and asked for a declaration that the assets which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had fraudulently and collusively purported to transfer were still the property of the firm of Udhomal Gaganmal; no accounts of the petty Karkhana were asked for, no winding-up order.

It has been argued that this plaint was not properly presented inasmuch as it was signed only by plaintiff No. 3 ; but the plaintiffs were in fact the Radhan firm of Udhomal Gaganmal and could sue as a firm. The confusion arose from the fact that the Tharri firm, consisting of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, was also known as Udhomal Gaganmal, and it was this Tharri firm which in the original plaint was treated as one unit in the partnerships which it was sought to wind up.

But plaintiffs very quickly resiled from the restricted position taken up in the plaint of the 15th January. In their amended plaint of the 27th January 1910 they asked for an ordinary winding-up order, seeking no declaration at all as to the assets said to have been fraudulently transferred, and asking for no relief as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5. The cause of action was completely changed. In the plaint of the 28th April, they again concentrated their attention on the first cause of action, the taking of accounts of the petty partnership; but as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5, they included a prayer which was so vague that it could, at convenience, be treated either as negligible or as a prayer for substantive and effective relief.

Defendants were not served with a summons until after the amendment of 27th January, and they immediately raised the objection of limitation.

Now, as regards the claim for winding-up the partnerships the cause of action arose on the 5th January 1904 and, even excluding the period from 22nd March 1906 to 1st April 1909 (3 years and 9 days), the suit would have been barred on the 15th January 1910.

On the 27th January, when the amended plaint was presented it was certainly open to the Court to refuse it on the ground of limitation. But the Court accepted the plaint so amended and held that the suit as for winding-up was not time-barred.

Under Order IV, rule 17, the Court may, at any stage of the proceeding, allow either party to amend the pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. This rule has two obvious limitations: Firstly, no injustice may be done to another party; no legal right must be violated by the amendment and the Court cannot, under cover of enforcing a rule of adjectival law, deprive a party of substantive rights or re-confer on a party substantive rights of which the law has already finally deprived him. Generally speaking, no amendment should be allowed which includes a claim which could not, under the law of limitation, be made the subject of a fresh suit. Secondly, the fresh questions which can be introduced into a suit by amendment must be questions which come reasonably and fairly within the scope of the plaint as originally presented. Generally speaking, therefore, no amendment should be allowed which introduces a completely new cause of action.

The amendment with which we are now dealing offends against both these rules and should not, in my opinion, have been allowed. Though, after the amendment was once allowed, the question of limitation was properly considered in the general issue—Is the suit within time? and that issue was properly determined by a reference to the date of the original plaint in accordance with the rule laid down in Patel Mafatlal Narandas v. Bai Parson (1), we can nevertheless deal with the order permitting amendment under the provisions of section 105 (1) Civil Procedure Code. In my opinion that order was wrong and should be set aside.

In New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company Ltd. v. Kessowji Naik (2), a case decided in 1885 by a single Judge on a reference under section 617, Civil Procedure Code, there is a dictum which suggests that, if an amendment has once been admitted by the original Court, it must be accepted even by the Appellate Court as part of the original plaint and as counting from the institution of the suit, even though such amendment includes a new cause of action which at date of amendment was barred by limitation. But this dictum has never been embodied in any reported decision, and we consider that it should not be regarded as a fixed rule of law.

Mr. Mathradas, at a late stage, pleads that plaintiffs should be allowed to exclude the time between the date of the award and the date of the order making the award a decree of the Court, on the ground that plaintiffs were, by fraud of defendants, kept ignorant of the award and of the dissolution of partnership. But no such fraud was originally alleged in the plaint, and it certainly should have been alleged, had it been relied on. It is impossible to deal with the allegation until the pleadings have been amended, the fraud duly defined, and a fresh issue drawn. No such amendment can be allowed at this stage.

If the amendment of the plaint be disregarded, we have nothing left but a vague prayer for relief as against defendants Nos. 4 and 5. But for relief as against them the suit is not properly instituted. The proper plaintiffs would be the present plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6 or a Receiver appointed in a suit for winding-up.

(1) 19 B. 320
(2) 9 B. 373 at p. 402.

The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

HAYWARD, J. C.—The plaintiffs' suit for the settlement of the main Karkhana at Tharri Mahbut has been decided in First Appeal No. 19 of 1911. The plaintiffs' suit for settlement of the branch Karkhana at Tharri Mahbut is the subject of this appeal. The plaintiffs were directed on the 1st April 1909, to bring separate suits with regard to the main Karkhana described as A and with regard to the branch Karkhana described as B in the decision of this Court reported as Parchomal Vasandmal v. Pamandas Alamchand (3). The plaintiffs accordingly on the 20th December 1909 brought this suit for the declaration that the main Karkhana A included the branch Karkhana B and that the sale of the branch Karkhana B was fraudulent to another set of people described as the Karkhana C in the decision published in Parchomal Vasandmal v. Pamandas Alamchand (3). The plaintiffs, on the 15th January 1910, amended their plaint, as it had been returned to them to show how their suit was in time. The amendment showed that they claimed a period of three years and nine days owing to the previous litigation and dated their cause of action as the date of the sale award decree of the branch Karkhana B, alleged to have been fraudulently made in favour of the Karkhana C and they supported their amendment by reference to section 14 of the Limitation Act. The plaintiffs again amended their plaint on the 27th January 1910, as it had been returned to them for the purpose of adding consequential relief. Their amendment proceeded in a direction entirely different from their claim, and instead of asking that the Karkhana A might be ordered to recover the Karkhana B asked that there should be winding-up order for the Karkhana B, and at the same time left standing all the allegations that the sale of the Karkhana B had been made fraudulently in favour of the Karkhana C. The plaintiffs again amended their plaint on the 28th April 1910 as it had been returned to them for signature of all instead of their Manager only and for stating expressly that no relief was claimed as regards the alleged fraudulent sale award decree against any members of the Karkhana C. The plaintiffs had distinctly stated that they did not want any such relief against any members of the Karkhana C, but, nevertheless, by their amendment they expressly claimed to recover the Karkhana B from certain members of the Karkhana C. This apparent misjoinder of causes of action was disposed of by the remark that notwithstanding the words as finally amended, no relief was really asked for against any members of the Karkhana C. It was at the same time remarked that there was only one cause of action for winding-up the Karkhana B and for the expulsion of the trespassers, namely, the members of the Karkhana C. It is difficult to understand what exactly was meant by the lower Court. Eventually, however, a preliminary decree directing the winding-up of the Karkhana B and declaring as trespassers certain members of the Karkhana C was passed by the lower Court.

The appellants appeal against this preliminary decree and have raised two main points—one relating to the date of the cause of action and the other to the actual date of suing—which bear upon the question of limitation. With regard to the date of cause of action, it would appear to me prima facie to have been on the 5th January 1904, the date of dissolution of the Karkhana B by the sale award under which the selling partners practically withdrew from the partnership within the meaning of section 253, sub-sections (6) and (7), of the Contract Act.

The selling partners were prima facie bound by the sale award and their relations with their purchasers would have to be decided upon that sale award even without any formal filing of the award as a decree in Court. The sale award could have been sued on. The sale award, when filed on the 27th January 1904, could have been executed as a decree of the Court. But the relations of the parties could have been the same whether the sale award was given effect to by suit or by execution through the Court. The period of limitation would, therefore, ordinarily have expired on the 5th January 1907 i.e., three years from the dissolution as provided by Article 106 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. But in this particular case the period of limitation would be extended to 14th January 1910, if the three years and nine days claimed on account of previous litigation should be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act. It would no doubt have been possible for them to have claimed further time by showing that the dissolution effected by the sale award was not known to them and had been kept secret from them by the fraud of the parties concerned in that sale award. But that plea was never raised and would depend upon evidence very probably no longer available. It would, therefore, be too late to allow such a plea to be raised now under section 18 of the Limitation Act.

With regard to the date of suing, the question is whether it should be taken to have been either on the 20th December 1909 or the 15th January 1910, when the plaintiffs sought the declarations that the main Karkhana A included the branch Karkhana B and that the sale of the branch Karkhana B had been made fraudulently to the Karkhana C, or either on the 27th January 1910 or 28th April 1910 when the plaintiffs sought the winding-up of the Karkhana B and the declaration that the sale of the Karkhana B had been made fraudulently to the Karkhana C. There is no doubt that the date of the suit ordinarily would have been taken as the date when the original plaint was filed regardless of the dates of the subsequent amendments. But then no amendments would be permissible which would have the effect of entirely changing, as in this case, the nature of the suit, more especially when the change would be to a suit already time-barred at the date of the amendment. The amendments affecting that change in this suit were allowed ex parte, but were objected to by the other side on the first opportunity when they claimed that the suit as amended was time-barred. No appeal would lie against the order allowing amendments under section 104 and Order XLIII of the Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. The objection as to amendments could, however, properly be raised in appeal under section 105, Civil Procedure Code. Such objection has apparently been raised in this case by paragraphs 1 and 3 to 5 of the memorandum of appeal and it is, therefore, open to us to consider those amendments and to decide that they ought never to have been allowed. The proper course would have been to dismiss the declaratory suit for want of proper amendment ordered, namely, by adding the proper consequential relief, which would have been recovery of the Karkhana B from the members of the Karkhana C. It was altogether improper and irregular to allow an entirely different amendment from that which was ordered and which had the effect of changing the nature of the suit from one for the recovery of partnership property to one for winding-up of the partnership. Those amendments must, therefore, in my opinion, be regarded as disallowed and the suit for mere declarations as dismissed for want of proper amendment. The amendments eventually made could at most be regarded as new suits for winding-up the partnership and for declaring fraudulent the alienation of certain property of the partnership. But those new suits would obviously be time-barred from the dates already given, whether instituted on the 27th January 1910 or the 28th April 1910, and must be dismissed. It does not matter, therefore, whether the amended plaint of the 27th January 1910 was or was not properly signed by the Manager. But it seems to me at the same time that no objection could properly be taken to such signature as the Manager represented one unit against two other units, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the three units together forming the Karkhana B. There seems no reason why the one unit should not be properly represented by its Manager, though where members of one unit are arrayed on different sides the members of the unit could not on either side properly be represented by the Manager of the whole unit under Order XXX, Schedule I, of the Civil Procedure Code, It would appear, therefore, that the amended plaint of the 27th January 1910 was properly signed by the Manager and that there was no need to return it for signature of all the members of the unit on the amended plaint of the 28th April 1910. It is also unnecessary in the above view to decide the question of misjoinder of causes of action, that is to say, whether the claim for winding up the Karkhana B could properly be combined with the claim for the declaration that the sale of Karkhana B was fraudulent to Karkhana C. But it may be as well to observe in this connection that there would appear no objection to a decree for winding-up Karkhana B including also a declaration that certain property belonged to the Karkhana B and not to other persons, namely, Karkhana C, provided that, as in this case, no decree be passed for the recovery of the property from those 3rd parties, the Karkhana C.

The fruitless result of this lengthy litigation is much to be regretted. But it is obviously due to the negligence of the parties or their Pleaders. There was considerable delay in re-commencing proceedings after the appellate decision published in Parchomal Vasandmal v. Pamandas Alamchand (3), and thereafter those responsible for the course of the litigation insisted in blundering blindly in their previous mistaken course, in order apparently to save a few rupees in Court-fees and absolutely refused to be guided by specific directions of the Appellate Bench, reported in Parchomal Vasandmal v. Pamandas Alamchand (3), and the rules as to precise pleadings contained in the new Civil Procedure Code. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Decree reversed.

A suit for the recovery by an inamdar of sums payable by a khatedar in respect of certain immoveable property held by him under the inamdar as his superior holder, is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. In such a suit the claim of the defendant to set off the stipend payable by the plaintiff to certain pujaris of a temple, of whom defendant was one, could not be allowed, as he was claiming in a different capacity, in a different category to that in which he held as tenant or khatedar of the plaintiff.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for the recovery by an inamdar of sums payable by a khatedar in respect of certain immoveable property held by him under the inamdar as his superior holder. It is contended that being for an amount less than Rs. 500, and cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, no second appeal will lie. The question is whether it is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. We have been referred, on the part of the appellant, to Article 13 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887, which excepts from the cognisance of a Court of Small Causes a suit to enforce payment of dues when the dues are payable to a person by reason of his interest in immoveable property. Now the sums payable by an inferior holder to a superior holder in the Bombay Presidency are in another Act of the Imperial Legislature characterised as dues [see Revenue Jurisdiction Act, X of 1876, section 5, clause (c)]. The moneys claimed, therefore, in this suit may appropriately be described as dues payable to the plaintiff by reason of his interest in immoveable property held by the defendant, and, therefore, Article 13 of the Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act applies, and this was a suit not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. We, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

The defendant does not contest the right of the plaintiff to payment of his dues as superior holder, but claims to be entitled to set off the stipend, payable by the plaintiff to certain pujaris of a temple, of whom defendant was one. That stipend was payable to the defendant and his bhaubands. He, therefore, claims a set-off in a different capacity in a different category to that in which he holds as tenant or khatedar of the plaintiff, and he cannot have the set-off, having regard to the provisions of Order VIII, rule 6. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court which allowed the set-off claimed by the defendant. The plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 41-4-10 (Rs. 39-6-8, the amount of his claim, plus Rs. 1-14-2, the amount of costs incurred in the Revenue Court), with further interest upon Rs. 41-4-10. We do not think that he is entitled to his costs because this suit appears to us to have been unnecessarily filed having regard to the fact that he had already obtained decree in assistance suits.

No order as to costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION NO. 20 OF 1914.

June 19, 1914.

KASARCHAND KESHAVJI AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPLICANTS

versus

LAKHAMSI RAISI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS — OPPONENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Summons not served—Sufficient time—Defendant, rights and liabilities of.

A defendant who has been duly served cannot get an ex parte decree set aside unless he can show that he acted diligently and was prevented from appearing at the adjourned hearing, and he is barred by Article 164 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, if he fail to make proper use of the 30 days following the decree. There is no justification for construing "duly served" in Article 164 as excluding a case where a summons was not served in sufficient time.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside an ex parte decree. For plaintiffs, Mr. Kimatrai raises the preliminary objection that the application is time-barred.

The suit was instituted on the 1st February 1913 against six defendants who were alleged to be members of a joint Hindu family The applicant Mulji was at the date of suit a student in the Wilson College, Bombay. He was personally served in Bombay on the 9th June, and signed an acknowledgment on the back of the original summons.

The applicant Kasar Chand was, at the date of suit, in the employment of the Junagarh State.

The summons was duly served on the 21st June, and due service was certified by the Administrator of the State. Mr. Kalumal contends that on the 21th June the summons was served on applicant's superior officer only and that applicant himself did not receive the summons until the 29th June, but there is no evidence of this on the record. The hearing was fixed for the 3rd July, but on that date, the summonses not being returned, the case was adjourned.

On the 27th June Mulji wrote to the Court from Bombay stating that he could not be able to leave College until November and asking for an adjournment until December. He asserted, and no doubt quite truly, that he was a boy at school when the liability was incurred and was completely ignorant of the facts of the case. He suggested that his personal appearance in Court was unnecessary, and stated that he was too poor to engage a Pleader. This letter was received on the 1st July and filed.

On the 29th June, Kasarchand wrote that he could not possibly reach Karachi by the 3rd July and asked for a posponment until December. He also alleged that he was a schoolboy when the account sued on was incurred and knew nothing whatever about it. This letter was received on the 8th July and filed. It is clear from the fact that a letter could travel from the place where Kasarchand was to Karachi in 8 days that he also could have done so.

From the letters of the applicants it may, firstly, be inferred that they had no intention of appearing to contest the suit and that no good purpose could have been served by their doing so.

On the 28th August 1913, an ex parte decree was passed against all the defendants.

The present application was filed on the 6th April 1914.

Under Article 164, such application is barred after 30 days running from the date of the decree, or, where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant had knowledge of the decree.

Now "duly served" means, in my opinion, "duly served" within the meaning of Order V, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code, and there can be no doubt that both applicants were so served. The application seems, therefore, prima facie to be barred.

Further, Under Order IX, rule 13, the Court can set aside the ex parte decree only if satisfied that the summons was not duly served, or that applicant was prevented by some sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. It is to be noted that the mere fact that applicant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing on the date mentioned in the summons does not avail: there must be evidence that he acted energetically and did his best to put in an appearance on the actual date of hearing. Both applicants had plenty of time to communicate with their friends and instruct a Pleader before the 28th August.

Mr. Kalumal points out that if, on the date of hearing, the defendant does not appear and the Court finds that the summons was not served in sufficient time to enable defendant to appear and answer on the day fixed in the summons, the Court is bound to postpone the hearing and give notice to defendants of the fresh date. But, even if the Court fail to perform its duty under this rule, a defendant who has been duly served cannot get an ex parte decree set aside unless he can show that he acted diligently and was prevented from appearing at the adjourned hearing, and he is barred by Article 164 if he fail to make proper use of the 30 days following the decree. There seems to me no justification for construing duly served in Article 164 as excluding a case where a summons was not served in sufficient time. The application must be rejected.

Application rejected.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 27th of January 1912.

The plaintiffs, as the executors of the Will of one Anandamoyee, brought the suit against the defendants to recover certain moveable and immoveable property. The property in question formerly belonged to one Digambar Ray who by his Will, dated the 14th Bhadra 1304, bequeathed all his properties absolutely to his wife, Anandamoyee. By her Will, dated the 29th of Bhadra 1314, Anandamoyee appointed the plaintiff and one Atul Behary Roy (since deceased) to be her executors and gave the whole of her property for the maintenance of the worship of an idol to be established after her death. Anandamoyee died on the 2nd Aswin 1314, corresponding with the 19th of September 1907, and after her death her Will was duly proved.

The defendants having dispossessed the plaintiffs of the property, they brought the present suit to recover the same. The defendants claimed as heirs of Digambar after the death of Anandamoyee. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part, but dismissed it with respect to certain jotes held with a right of occupancy by Digambar, holding that such jotes were not capable of being bequeathed by Will. Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Section 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, enacts: "If a raiyat dies intestate in respect of a right of occupancy, it shall, subject to any custom to the contrary, descend in the same manner as other immoveable property."

This section standing alone no doubt suggests that a right of occupancy is immoveable property and, if it be so, I should have thought that the holder would have the right to bequeath it by his Will.

For, by section 46 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865 (which is incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act), it is provided that "every person of sound mind and not a minor may dispose of his property by Will."

It has not been argued before us, nor could it be, that in no circumstances can a raiyat make a Will in respect of a right of occupancy. Section 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks of a raiyat dying "intestate" in respect of occupancy, and must, therefore, contemplate that in such cases a raiyat should die "testate" in respect of a right of occupancy. It has been urged, however, that an occupancy raiyat can only dispose of his right by Will when there is a special custom enabling him to do so. In support of this argument reference was made to sections 11 and 18 of the Act authorising a tenure-holder and a raiyat holding at fixed rates to dispose of their holdings by Will.

It is said, therefore, that as the Act is silent as to the power of an occupancy-raiyat to dispose of his holding by Will, the only power that an occupancy-raiyat has of disposing by Will of his holding under section 183 is in the event of there being a special custom in that respect. This principle of construction was applied by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Lakhan Narain Das v. Jainath Panday (1) with respect to the heritability of non-occupancy raiyats. In a recent case, Second Appeal No. 2740 of 1911 [Amulya Ratan Sarkar v. Tarini Nath Dey (2)], the judgment in which was given on the 30th of January 1914, Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., held that an occupancy-raiyat had no power to bequeath by Will his holding unless a special custom to do so was proved. This decision is binding on us, unless it has been affected by the recent decision of the Full Bench reported as Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhury (3). That decision, however, did not deal with the power of an occupancy-raiyat to bequeath his holding.

The case appears to me to be concluded by the authorities I have cited above. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—The law is admittedly in an unsatisfactory condition, the question of transferability of occupancy rights having been dealt with in the Bengal Tenancy Act rather by way of suggestion than by way of positive legislation.

I agree that on the authorities as they stand, occupancy rights are not capable of being made the subject of testamentary disposition.

Government grant free of payment of land revenue, sale of, in execution of a mortgage decree—Government refusing sale—Suit against Secretary of State, the judgment-debtor and the subsequent transferee, maintainability of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Hearing of case on merits, necessity of, before granting declaration.

The plaintiff-appellant obtained a mortgage decree entitling him to bring to sale certain lands held by the mortgagor under the terms of a Government grant free of payment of land revenue. In execution of the mortgage decree the plaintiff-appellant applied for sale of the land, but the Local Government refused sanction to the sale, on the ground that in view of the terms of the grant the property was inalienable. The plaintiff-appellant then instituted the present suit against the Secretary of State, the judgment-debtor and a subsequent transferee praying for a decree against the Secretary of State declaring that the right, title and interest of the other defendants in the land in question were liable to be sold in execution of his decree, and that the judgment-debtor had an alienable interest in the property. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of such a suit, that the suit was not maintainable and that he should not in the exercise of his discretion give such a declaration:

Held, that although the Local Government as an executive authority had an unfettered discretion to refuse sale in such a case, yet the declaration made by it in the same order as to the terms of the grant must be treated to have been made in its capacity of a grantor and could be challenged, and the suit was maintainable in respect thereof;

Held, further, that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit;

Held, also, that the question of discretion possessed by the Court in the matter of granting declarations could not be considered until the case had been heard upon its merits.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are simple. The plaintiff-appellant had obtained a mortgage decree entitling him to bring to sale, amongst other property, a certain area of land in the village of Faizullahganj, which is held by Mirza Muhammad Husain under the terms of a Government grant dated the 15th of January 1861 free of payment of land revenue. In execution of this mortgage decree the plaintiff-appellant applied for the sale of the land in question, and the decree was transferred for execution in the ordinary course of law to the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow as the property was ancestral property. After certain delays occasioned by circumstances immaterial to the merits of the present suit, the Local Government refused sanction to the sale of this property, on the ground that in view of the terms of the grant the property was inalienable. The plaintiff-appellant then instituted a suit against the Secretary of State, Mirza Muhammad Husain and a subsequent transferee, in which he requested that a decree should be passed against the first defendant declaring that the right, title and interest of the second and third defendants in the land in question was liable to be sold in execution of the decree for sale and that the second defendant had an alienable interest in the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed this suit upon two preliminary points, the first being that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of such a suit, and the second point being that the suit is not maintainable. The reasons guiding his decision are that, inasmuch as the Local Government has unfettered discretion in refusing permission to the sale of ancestral property under the provisions of section 20 of Act XVIII of 1876, the order refusing sanction for sale is final, and that the reasons guiding the Local Government in arriving at this decision are immaterial in view of the fact that the decision itself is final. He further decided that a declaratory decree of the nature desired could not be of any use to the plaintiff-appellant, that if he obtained such a decree he could not thereby compel the Local Government to alter its decision, and that he could gain no advantage of any kind if he obtained the decree which he desired. The learned Subordinate Judge further considered that he should not, in exercise of the discretion given to Courts in cases of this nature, give such a declaration.

AMAR CHAND PAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The learned Counsel, who appeared in support of the appeal, argued that the learned Subordinate Judge had misapprehended the attitude of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, according to his instructions, had not attempted to challenge the fact that the Local Government had an unfettered discretion to refuse sale in such a case. He agreed that, if the plaintiff's suit were successful, the Local Government could still refuse to sanction the sale without giving any reasons, and his obtaining such a decree would give him no legal right towards the alteration of the decision of the Local Government. But he argued that acceptance of this position did not affect the question as to whether the Court had or had not jurisdiction. The Local Government, according to his argument, was acting in two capacities. It was both grantor of the grant under which the property was held and the authority which could give or withhold sanction to a sale in exercise of an unfettered discretion. He urged that, if the Local Government in the same order made a declaration as to the terms of the grant which prejudiced the interests of his client and refused sanction in exercise of an unfettered discretion, it was open to his client to separate the two portions of the order and, while not attempting to challenge the validity of the latter portion, to ask for a declaration with regard to the former. He pointed out that it was possible that a declaration as to the non-alienability of the property could operate to the prejudice of his client as mortgagee, and that he might gain some advantage in obtaining the decision of a Court upon that point by using such decision, if favourable to him, in order to persuade the Local Government to alter its decision. With regard to the question of jurisdiction his case was that the mortgagee had a right to ask for a declaration as against the grantor, and that thus the Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has, in our opinion, been unable to meet these arguments. We consider that the Court has certainly jurisdiction to hear the suit. The next question that arises is with regard to the maintainability of the suit. Such a suit can, in our opinion, undoubtedly be brought and is maintainable under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. With regard to the point taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that a Court has discretion to give or refuse a declaration, we are of opinion that the question of discretion does not fall under the head of maintainability. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit without going into the merits. Before he can be in a position to know whether he should or should not exercise his discretion, it will be necessary for him to try the case upon its merits and to arrive at findings as to the alienability of the property. This is a case where a grantor has interpreted the terms of a grant in a manner which may be prejudicial to the interests of the transferee of the grantee. The transferee has a legal right to seek an opportunity of obtaining a judicial decision as to the correctness of the grantor's view, and he does not suggest that he has a legal right to compel the Local Government, not in its capacity of grantor, but in its capacity of supreme executive authority to do as he wishes. We do not say that the Court has no discretion to refuse to grant such a declaration, but before it can be in a position to exercise this discretion it is necessary for the Court to hear the case upon its merits. We, therefore, consider that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained and that the suit cannot be dismissed ab initio upon the preliminary objection raised. We, of course, express no opinion as to the merits.

The result is that we allow this appeal and reverse the decree upon a preliminary point, and direct under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23, that the suit be re-admitted under its original number in the register of civil suits and that the learned Subordinate Judge shall proceed to determine it upon its merits. The costs of this appeal will follow the result.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. A. Tuljapurkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The material facts are that in 1869 Appa, the original owner of this property, sold it to Ramchandra and Ramchandra passed a contemporaneous agreement, Exhibit 87 in the case, under which he agreed that if the vendor Appa paid him Rs. 100 every year for six years, he would re-convey the land. So matters stood till after the death of Ramchandra. His son Dattatraya was sued in 1883 by the representatives in interest of the original owner, Appa. The suit took the form of a redemption suit, because had it been upon the agreement, merely as an agreement, it is obvious that it would have been time-barred. Dattatraya resisted this suit. His written statement shows that he denied that the agreement had been complied with or could now be enforced, and at the same time alleged that the transaction was not a mortgage. The defence succeeded and the suit was dismissed.

In 1894 after the death of Dattatraya, Jankibai, who as widow of Ramchandra and mother of the last male-holder Dattatraya, was in life enjoyment of the estate, was again sued by the representatives-in-interest of Appa for the redemption of this mortgage. The suit again failed on the very obvious ground that the claim was res judicata.

Immediately after this the widow Jankibai appears to have entered into what is called a compromise before the Conciliator and allowed a consent decree against herself for the sale of this land to the representatives of Appa for the sum of Rs. 650. It is this transaction which the plaintiff, who is the reversioner of Dattatraya's estate, seeks to have set aside.

The learned Judge of first appeal, relying upon a current of authority, the effect of which simply is that a Hindu widow is under a pious obligation to pay her deceased husband's debts even though they may be time-barred, held, by what we suppose he meant to be a parity of reasoning, that the widow Jankibai here was under the pious obligation to do for the last holder of the estate what he had emphatically declined to do for himself. Now none of the authorities cited by the learned Judge in support of his proposition has the least bearing upon the facts we have to deal with; nor is there any true analogy between the principle underlying those cases and any principle which could be applied here. Put upon purely ethical, not legal, ground the reasoning of those cases is clear. The Courts have held that a widow is entitled to sell part of the ancestral immoveable property to discharge the just debts of her husband even though those debts might be time-barred, and this is based doubtless upon the moral duty of discharging the debts of her husband; and again on the assumption that had the husband lived he would, as a moral and upright man, have discharged them himself. In not one of those cases is to be found the slightest indication that the deceased husband had ever repudiated the debts before his death which the widow paid after his death.

The case here is, therefore, totally different upon moral principles as well as upon its own facts. There is no question of any debt here at all; nor could it be seriously contended that in acting, as she did, the widow was doing what the last male-holder would have done had he been alive, nor can we say that there was the least moral obligation upon the widow to restore this property to the representatives-in-interest of Appa upon payment of the sum for which it had been sold in the year 1869. That, as soon as the terms of the agreement were exhausted, has been held by the Courts to have been an out and out sale. That was the view which Dattatraya himself took of the transaction when he successfully resisted the attempt of the representatives-in-interest of Appa to redeem the property; and if that were so, we are unable to see that the bargain was originally an unfair one or that the last male-holder, Dattatraya, was acting in any way dishonestly in insisting upon adhering strictly to the conditions of the original bargain. So that we are unable to find here the slightest ground for applying the principle upon which alone the learned Judge below appears to have thought that this alienation by the widow was justifiable and ought to be sustained against the reversioner.

It has never been contended that there was any legal necessity for this sale in the ordinary sense of those words; and but for a general expression used in the case of Chinnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (1) that a widow may deal with the property finally, provided that she is dealing fairly by the expectant heirs, we do not think that the learned Judge would have been misled into the line of reasoning which he has finally adopted. A general expression of that kind can hardly take the place of the settled principles upon which the law governing this class of cases has long been established. Such terms as "dealing fairly by the expectant reversioners" are much too loose and general in our opinion to be made the ground of law governing the widow's powers of disposition, during her life-time, of ancestral immoveable property. The only solid ground upon which such alienations are justified and made good against reversioners will be found on analysis in every case to be what is known as legal necessity. Here there is nothing in the least like legal necessity. We are, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the learned Judge below who has, we think, written a very able and careful judgment, has nevertheless entirely misconceived the law, and has, therefore, misapplied it to the facts of the case before him.

We must, therefore, reverse his decision on issue No. 1 and remand the case to the learned Judge below to dispose of upon the remaining points awaiting his decision in the light of the foregoing remarks. In doing so we must observe that the case of the 6th defendant has not been dealt with in the Court of first appeal. The learned Judge should inquire into and decide upon the alleged legal necessity of the mortgage under which the defendant No. 6 claims to hold the property from the widow, Jankibai. Costs will abide the final result.

Decree reversed; Case remanded.

Therefore, a Hindu son is entitled to inherit the property of his father who was converted to Muhammadanism.

Though, under the Muhammadan Law, a son is prima facie entitled to a share yet the fact of his being a Hindu shifts the burden of proof on him to show that he is not excluded as a "kafir".

JUDGMENT.

BOYD, A. J. C.:—Plaintiff is and always has been a Hindu. His father Murijmal became a Muhammadan in 1891. About that time there was a family partition, one result of which was that Murijmal took away with him his separate share in the family property. About this share the present dispute arose when Murijmal died in 1907. Plaintiff claims to inherit 2/9ths of it. His claim is denied by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the other sons of Murijmal. They also became Muhammadans with their father.

These defendants first attack plaintiff's claim on the ground that he cannot inherit under Muhammadan Law, being an infidel. The learned Judicial Commissioner has dealt with this point in a separate judgment; and I entirely agree with him that the ordinary Muhammadan Law would exclude plaintiff from inheritance but for the operation of Act of 1850.

The learned Assistant Judge in first appeal has held that plaintiff cannot benefit by that Act, which applies, he thinks, only to the convert (or apostate) himself and not to his unconverted son. He declines to follow the decision in Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1), partly because it is in apparent conflict with other decisions and partly because it does not directly cover the case of a Hindu claiming to inherit from a Muhammadan.

But it is clear that the principle underlying the judgment of Sir John Edge applies exactly to the present case. The one simple question is, whether the words "any right of inheritance" in the Act refer to any right of inheritance accruing to any person or whether they should be limited to the right of the convert (or apostate) himself. The learned Chief Justice, finding the words of the Act slightly ambiguous, interpreted them with the aid of the preamble. The result was that he found that the convert's son must be put in the position in which he would have been if his father had not changed his religion. According to this view of the law, plaintiff must succeed; for as a Hindu son he is entitled to a 2/8th share of what his father left. As it happens, he only claims a 2/9th share; and so he will not get more than he claims.

Regarding the effect of the Act it is unnecessary for us to say much, as we have arrived at the conclusion that we ought to follow the above decision, and we adopt in toto the reasoning on which it is based, to which we have nothing to add. The Chief Justice's reasons are easy to understand; and the judgment contains a transcription of the whole Act and its preamble. We think one of the objects of the Act is that a man's change of religion should not affect the right of inheritance either of himself or of anyone else. We fully realise that a Court's business is not to legislate, but to interpret Statutes. But where the language of the operative portion of an Act is ambiguous, it is allowable to consult the preamble, vide Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Ed., page 69, and a number of cases cited in Chapter II, section 3, of a book on the Interpretation of Indian Statutes, by Ghose and Ghosh, Edition 1904.

Speaking for myself, I do not see any ambiguity about the wording of the operative part of the Act. I see no reason to limit the words "any right of inheritance" to the right of the particular person referred to in the 3rd line of the section. Prima facie the words "any right" mean "any right of any person." I

It is true that a contrary opinion has been expressed by Ameer Ali in his volume 2, page 103, 3rd Edition. But the opinion of a commentator, however eminent, is not an authority which a Court is bound to follow. And it may be observed that on the present point another most distinguished jurist disagreed, taking the view which we adopt, vide Wilson, page 295, 3rd Edition.

While granting that the reductio ad absurdum is not always a good argument in cases governed by personal and religious laws, I cannot refrain from pushing it in this case, not as a basis of our decision, but to show its justice. It is obviously unfair that one should lose anything by his father's change of religion. The unfairness is not so great in a case like this, of a converted Hindu. But take the case of a Christian or Buddhist whose father becomes a Muhammadan. The son has in him no vested rights (like a Hindu) in any part of the family estate and will lose everything if he cannot inherit from his father; and that would be the result, if the defence argument in the present case is right. It would be a cruel injustice—more than the most fanatical convert would desire. In such a case can it be supposed that the same Government, which framed Act of 1850, intended the unconverted child to starve? I think clearly not.

Both sides have discussed the judgment of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (2). But that decision, though most instructive, does not seem to be relevant in the present case. In that case there was no question whether Daulat should succeed Ratan Singh, whom he predeceased. The plaintiffs, who claimed through Daulat, said that Ratan Singh by becoming a Muhammadan had lost all his rights in his Hindu family property. And their Lordships held that it was not so, in view of section 9 of Bengal Regulation VII of 1832. The ultimate decision of the case was based upon a compromise between the various parties interested. There was no dispute between Ratan Singh's Muhammadan heirs on one side and his Hindu heirs on the other side. He had no Muhammadan heirs. The dispute was between his grandson and Daulat's daughters. All were Hindus. It was unnecessary to go into the question which has arisen in the present case. And their Lordships did not go into it and did not notice the decision in Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1).

It is true that in Subbaraya v. Ramasami Pillai (3) the learned Judges do seem to have taken a view different to the Allahabad decision, which however they did not mention. It is unnecessary to discuss the Madras case in detail. The decision was almost entirely based on other grounds; and, though the head-note says the present point was decided, I find nothing clear or definite about it in the judgment. In that case the defendant was bound to fail; for the woman Virayi had lost her right of inheritance, not because of her expulsion from caste but in consequence of her adultery, which disqualified her under the ordinary Hindu Law. I refer to the penultimate paragraph of the judgment. It was unnecessary to discuss Act of 1850 in any detail; and the few remarks at the foot of page 176 of the report throw no light on the question now before us.

In the earlier Madras decisions and in In the goods of Kamineymoney Bewah (4) the Act did not come into play at all. So those cases do not help us.

It is brought to our notice that plaintiff first sued as a Hindu son and then later contended that he could inherit under Muhammadan Law Now he claims to inherit either under Hindu or Muhammadan Law, whichever may be held applicable, though (as already said) he only demands a 2/9ths share. The plaint was never amended; and it would be unduly technical, in my opinion, to hold that he cannot succeed because the wrong arguments were put forward for him in the lower Courts.

I would reverse the decree of the District Court and record a finding that plaintiff is entitled to succeed to 2/9ths of the intestate property left by Murijmal alias Sheikh Ahmed.

(2) 10 Ind. Cas. 477; 33 A. 356; 15 C. W. N. 545 (P. C.); 8 A. L. J. 552; 13 Bom. L. R. 427; 13 C. L. J. 575; 10 M. L. T. 25; 21 M. L. J. 645; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 432; 38 I. A. 87.

(3) 23 M. 171.
(4) 21 C. 697.

We cannot go further and decide what that property is, as the District Judge has not recorded a finding on his second issue. So I would propose to remand the suit for decision making defendant No. 1 pay all costs of this appeal: other costs to be costs in the cause.

In arriving at a final conclusion, the District Judge will have to remember that the property of Murijmal was under the management of the Manager, Sind Encumbered Estates, and was after some time restored to him by the Manager.

It will be necessary to inquire how much property was acquired by Murijmal after that restoration and of property so acquired how much was gifted to defendant No. 1.

FAWCETT, J. C.—The admitted facts in this case are as follows. Murijmal, father of all the parties, was originally a Hindu zemindar. In 1891 he became a convert to Muhammadanism, taking the name of Sheikh Ahmed. Thereupon one of his sons, Gurmukhdas, filed a suit for his share in the family property, and a consent decree was passed whereby the property was partitioned and a 1/5th share was assigned to Sheikh Ahmed and each of his sons, Gurmukhdas and Hossomal, who remained Hindus, and Sheikh Ghulam and Mahomed Sidik, who embraced Muhammadanism with their father. Sheikh Ahmed and Sheikh Ghulam continued to hold the lands assigned to them jointly, but the District Judge states that the evidence shows that they separated in 1901. Sheikh Ahmed died in 1907. Hassomal then in 1909 filed the suit out of which the present appeal arises. In the plaint he first of all claimed a one-fourth share in his father's property, i.e., his share under Hindu Law as one of the four sons of the deceased. Subsequently, however, he abandoned this position and claimed the share to which he would be entitled under Muhammadan Law, if not excluded by that law. The other sons and a daughter, Chatibai, were joined as parties and also claimed shares. The defendant, Sheikh Ghulam, denied plaintiff's right to inherit and denied also that his father had left the property specified, alleging that the greater part of it had been given to the defendant. The Subordinate Judge held that Hassomal was entitled to inherit and awarded him a 2/9th share in what he found to be the property left by Sheikh Ahmed, viz., the property specified in the plaint minus the property acquired by Sheikh Ghulam in the partition of 1901. No order was made as to the claims of other sons and daughter as they had not paid Court-fees. Sheikh Ghulam appealed to the District Court, which held that the plaintiff Hassomal was not entitled to succeed to a share of the property of Sheikh Ahmed as one of his heirs. Hassomal now appeals from this decision.

The two main questions in this case are those dealt with in the lower Court's judgment. The first is whether the plaintiff is or is not excluded from inheritance under Muhammadan Law by virtue of his being a Hindu and therefore a kafir. On this point no evidence has been adduced, but the Sub-Judge held that, as Hinduism in Sind is purely monotheistic "with full regard for the sublime mission of every prophet whoever opened his sacred lips for the spiritual guidance of fallen humanity," the plaintiff was not beyond the pale of Islam for the purpose of succession. The learned Assistant Judge, after giving reasons for holding that Mr. Ameer Ali in the later edition of his Muhammadan Law does not give any support to this view, says: "But in any case, Hassomal describes himself in the plaint as a Hindu and, if he intended to claim the property as a Muhammadan, it was clearly incumbent on him to show that, notwithstanding his Hinduism, he belives in the cardinal principles of the Muhammadan faith. All we know about him is that he is a Hindu. There is no evidence whatever as to his religious beliefs. The presumption, therefore, is that he is a kafir and the appellant was not (as the learned Sub-Judge appears to think) under any obligation to put him in the witness-box or to produce any evidence on the point."

For appellant it is contended that this wrongly places the burden of proof on the plaintiff to show that he is not a kafir. Mr. Rupchand argues that, as the plaintiff is a son, he is, according to the first principles of Muhammadan Law, included as an heir and that the burden of proving he falls under the subsequent exception as to a kafir rests on the other side. But the Muhammadan Law cannot properly be dealt with in watertight compartments in this way. The fact that a kafir is excluded is as much an integral part of that law as the fact that a son is a sharer in the rules of inheritance. Though, therefore, plaintiff is prima facie entitled to a share as a son, yet the fact of his being a Hindu shifts the burden of proof on to him to show that he is not excluded as a kafir. For there can be no reasonable doubt that this term in its ordinary sense covers a follower of an antagonistic religion like Hinduism. To adopt the expression used in Bhaiya Sher Bahadur v. Bhaiya Ganga Bakhsh Singh (5), the popular idolatrous form of Hinduism is directly antagonistic to the cardinal principles upon which the religion of Islam is founded. If it be true, as suggested by the learned Sub-Judge, that the Hinduism of plaintiff and other persons in Sind is of a kind which differs from ordinary Hinduism and is not so antagonistic to Muhammadanism as to make him a kafir, then the burden of proving this clearly lies on him. I see, therefore, no reason to differ from the view taken by the lower Court on this point.

The second main question is, whether Act XXI of 1850 covers a case like the present where a convert and his son (a non-covert) claim a right of inheritance. On this point, I think, for the reasons given in the judgment of my learned brother, the ruling in Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (1) should be followed. The words "in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance" are so wide that they clearly admit of the construction thus put on them in that case and as pointed out in the judgment of Sir John Edge, they would be unnecessary if they were intended to be restricted to the protection of the right of inheritance of the persons renouncing their religion or being excluded from caste. No doubt the learned Assistant Judge is right in his view, that the terms of Act XXI of 1850 cannot possibly be construed so as to cover a right of inheritance claimed by the plaintiff under Muhammadan Law—that being a right which is not in any way impaired or affected by his father's conversion, but actually created by such conversion. But as the plaint actually claims a share according to Hindu Law and was never formally amended, the mere fact that plaintiff's Pleader in the lower Appellate Court abandoned that claim and admitted that his right under Hindu Law was entirely extinguished, should not debar him from obtaining the share under Hindu Law to which we hold he is entitled, at any rate to the extent of 2/9ths which he claims. Plaintiff is not bound by the erroneous admission on a point of law made by his Pleader in the Lower Court, cf. Krishanji v. Rajmal (6).

The lower Appellate Court's decree is, therefore, reversed and the case remanded to the lower Court for a finding on the second issue raised in that Court. Respondent No. 1 to bear appellant's and respondent No. 2's costs of this appeal. Other costs (including those of the lower Appellate Court) to be costs in the cause.

Decree reversed; Case remanded.

Raja RAJESWARA DORAI, alias MUTHURAMALINGA SETHUPATHI AVERGAL, RAJAH OF RAMNAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Reversionary lease, whether can be granted—Trustee of devastanam granting lease at low rental—Right of tenant—Improvement, right of tenant to claim compensation for.

The grant of a reversionary lease is always objectionable and can be justified only in exceptional cases.

Where a trustee of a devastanam, just before his retirement from office, granted a lease for the long period of 40 years, at a time when nine years of the previous lease for the like period had still to run, at an advance of only Rs. 25 a year in spite of the fact that there had been materially a very great increase in the price of produce since the date when the previous lease was granted:

Held, that, having regard to the prevailing conditions, the lease must be deemed to have been granted at an under-value and the tenant was not entitled to compensation for such improvements as he was bound to do under the terms of the previous lease.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 146 of 1910.

FACTS.—The former Rajah of Ramnad was also the Manager of Ramnad Devastanams. After divesting himself of the semindari and being about to do the same with respect to the Devastanams under his charge, he granted a lease of the suit properties which appertained to the Devastanams to the defendants for a term of forty years at a rent of Rs. 285 a year.

There was a prior lease of these properties in favour of these very defendants, nine years of which had still to run, at Rs. 260 at a year. The suit out of which the appeal arose was instituted by the present Rajah of Ramnad for a declaration that the new lease was invalid and for recovery of possession of the suit properties. The temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad held that there had been a materially great increase in the price of paddy since the grant of the prior lease and that having regard to present conditions, the lease must be considered to have been granted at an undervalue. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendants appealed.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar (with Mr. A. Subbarama Iyer), for the Appellants:—It was quite competent to the former Rajah to grant the lease. There was an increase of Rs. 25 in the rent reserved. At any rate the appellants are entitled to the value of improvements.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Iyengar and A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondent:—A reversionary lease is always objectionable and can be justified only by exceptional circumstances. Attorney-General v. Kerr (1). No such circumstances exist in the present case. Between the dates of the old and the new lease there has been a material increase in the price of paddy. It is not shown that any difficulty is experienced in collecting rent. The appellants are not entitled to any relief even as regards improvements, as under the old lease they were bound to execute the same at their expense.

JUDGMENT.—The lease was granted by the plaintiff's father at a time when he was about to divest himself of the management of the Ramnad Devastanams, having already divested himself of the semindari itself some years before. It was granted for the long period of 40 years, at a time when nine years of the previous lease for the like period had still to run, at an advance of only Rs. 25 a year on a rental of Rs. 260, in spite of the fact that there had materially been a very great increase in the price of paddy since the date when the previous lease was granted. The grant of a reversionary lease is always objectionable and can only be justified in exceptional cases [Attorney-General v. Kerr (1)]. It is not shown that there had been any difficulty in collecting the rent before the new lease was granted. We also agree with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that having regard to present conditions, it must be considered to have been granted at an undervalue. The appellant is not entitled to compensation for improvements, as he was bound under the terms of the previous lease to effect the repairs for which he now claims compensation.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 9, 43, 118 (g)—Endorsee from payee of hundi—Holder in due course—Presumption—Consideration, failure of.

An endorsee from the payee of a hundi must be presumed until the contrary is proved to be a holder in due course within the meaning of section 9 by reason of section 118 (g) of the Negotiable Instrumens Act and is unaffected by the failure of the consideration as between the drawer and the payee.

Civil application under Extraordinary Jurisdiction, from the decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Poona, in Suit No. 4783 of 1912.

Mr. J. Y. Abhyankar, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. B. Gharpure, for Opponent No. 1.

Mr. M. M. Kotashane, for Opponent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued as an endorsee of a hundi drawn by the 1st defendant in favour of one Magan. The 1st defendant pleaded that no consideration for the hundi had been received from Magan, and an issue was raised whether there had been consideration as between defendant No. 1 and Magan. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Poona, did not decide whether there had been consideration as between the plaintiff and Magan, but dismissed the suit on the issue mentioned, holding that there had been no consideration as between the 1st defendant and Magan.

The plaintiff has now sought to have the decision set aside in extraordinary jurisdiction, on the ground that his suit as endorsee from Magan was not necessarily barred by the fact that there had been no consideration as between defendant No. 1, the drawer, and Magan, the payee. It appears to us that the plaintiff's position has been misapprehended and that his contention must be allowed. He must as endorsee be presumed, until the contrary is proved, to have been a holder in due course, that is to say, a holder for consideration from Magan within the meaning of section 9 by reason of section 118 (g) of the Negotiable Instruments Act. He would, therefore, (unless the contrary should be proved) be unaffected by the failure of consideration as between defendant No. 1, the drawer, and Magan, the payee, under the provisions of section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, which provides that:—"A negotiable instrument made, drawn, accepted, indorsed, or transferred without consideration, or for a consideration which fails, creates no obligation of payment between the parties to the transaction. But if any such party has transferred the instrument with or without indorsement to a holder for consideration, such holder, and every subsequent holder deriving title from him, may recover the amount due on such instrument from the transferor for consideration or any prior party thereto." There is, therefore, this material issue remaining for decision, namely, whether the plaintiff was a holder in due course from Magan for consideration, that is to say, whether he had accepted the hundi from Magan for consideration. The decree of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Poona, must, therefore, be set aside and the case remanded for a fresh decision in the light of the above remarks, after determining the issue:—

Whether the plaintiff was a holder in due course for consideration from Magan within the meaning of sections 9 and 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, having regard to the provisions of section 118 (g) of the Act?

MUHAMMAD MAHMUD AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree, questions relating to—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 58, sub-rule (3), applicability of—Decree, objection to attachment of, in execution.

The appellant obtained a decree against two persons I H and A H I H and A H along with two other persons held a decree against M M and M Z. The appellant applied for execution of his decree by attachment of the interest of I H and A H in the decree which they along with two other persons held against M M and M Z. This application was refused.

Held, that, M M and M Z being no parties to the appellant's decree, the questions arising between them and the appellant could not be taken as questions relating to the execution of the decree held by the appellant. The order refusing the application did not, therefore, fall under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and was not appealable.

PIARE LAL v. MUHAMMAD MAHMUD.

Held, further, that the provisions of Order XXI, rule 53, sub-rule (3), refer to the stage at which execution of the attached decree is being sought and not to a case where the application for attachment of the decree has been disallowed.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated 27th March 1914, dismissing an appeal from an order of the Munsif, Bilgram, dated 13th December 1913.

Babu Rajeshwari Parshad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in the execution department. The point raised is that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that no appeal lay to it. The facts of the case are shortly as follows: One Piare Lal obtained a decree against two persons, named Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak. It appears that Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak along with two other persons held at this time a decree against two men named Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din. Piare Lal applied to the Court of execution of his decree against Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak by attachment of their interest in the decree, which they along with the two other persons held against Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din. This application for attachment in execution of the decree against Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak was refused by the Munsif on the 13th December 1913. An appeal was taken to the Court of the District Judge. In his opinion no appeal lay. It was sought to be argued before the Judge that the appeal lay, as being an appeal against an order passed in execution proceedings under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judge refused to allow this contention. He pointed out that the case was one falling under Order XXI, rule 58, and that under rule 63 the order of the first Court was final, subject to the result of any suit which might be brought by the party against whom the case was decided. It is again contended here that an appeal lay, because the order passed by the Munsif was under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. I am unable to accept this contention. It appears to me that the proceedings were execution proceedings relating to a decree obtained by Piare Lal against Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak. Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din were not parties to that decree, so any question arising between these two last-named persons and Piare Lal could not be taken as a question relating to the execution of the decree which had been passed in Piare Lal's favour. It is pointed out that the objection raised by Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din was that inasmuch as the decree which Piare Lal sought to attach was a decree not only in favour of Ikbal Husain and Abdul Hak, but in favour of two other persons as well, the decree-holder here, Piare Lal could not be allowed to take out execution as against them. However, as I have already said the proceedings between these parties cannot, in my opinion, be treated as proceedings under section 47, because Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din were no parties to the decree execution of which was being sought. The learned Counsel for the appellant relies upon the provisions of Order XXI, rule 53, sub-rule (3). That sub-rule, however, does not appear to me to apply to this case. It provides that the holder of the decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof. This sub-rule clearly indicates a different stage of proceedings, namely, the stage at which execution of the attached decree is being sought. That stage, however, has not been reached here, for the effect of the Munsif's order is to disallow the application by which Piare Lal sought to attach the decree which had been obtained against Mohammad Mahmud and Mohammad Zahir-ud-din. I think the decision of the Court below was perfectly right.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 602—Mortgage created by security bond—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67—Execution—Decree for costs—Application against surety—Sale on claim arising under mortgage—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 4—Personal liability of surety.

Where an application for execution of a decree for costs obtained in the Privy Council against a surety and the properties which he had charged as security under section 602 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, was resisted on the ground that the security could not be realised without a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act:

Held, (1) that the claim of the decree-holder was based entirely on the security bond which created a mortgage in her favour and the claim against the surety was thus a claim arising under the mortgage, within the meaning of Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and the properties could not be sold without a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882;

(2) but that the security bond also created a personal liability, and the decree-holder could realise the amount of costs covered by the security bond from the person and other properties of the surety under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 15th of November 1912.

Babu Kulwant Sahay, for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray and Moulvi Khurshed Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant obtained a decree for costs in Privy Council and she applied for the execution of the said decree against the surety and the properties he had charged as security, given under section 602 of the old Civil Procedure Code. It was objected that she could not realise the security without a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. In support of this contention of the respondent reliance was placed on the judgment of this Court in Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (1). The Court below gave effect to this contention, and hence this appeal.

(1) 32 C. 494; 9 C. W. N. 372; 1 C. L. J. 118.

It is urged that Tokhan Singh's case (1) was decided under section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is no longer law, and Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the present Civil Porcedure Code, Act V of 1908 which stands in its place, is not applicable to the present case. Section 99 of the Transfer of the Property Act provided that where a mortgagee, in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67, etc. Order XXXIV, rule 14, is "where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale, etc."

The main alteration seems to be the deletion of the words or not, and the prohibition now applies only to cases of decrees for payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. The question, therefore, is whether the decree of the appellant is one within the meaning of this rule. The decree is not against the surety. The claim against him is based entirely on the security bond which creates the mortgage. The claim against the surety is a claim arising under the mortgage, and if the decree obtained by the appellant can be treated as a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of such a claim, the rule does apply, and the mortgaged property cannot be sold except under a decree under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. If it is not such a decree, still the mortgaged property cannot be sold as such without a decree in a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. So far as this point is concerned, the reason seems to be that the equity of redemption may have been dealt with in the meantime, and it would lead to multiplicity of suits and other loss to the mortgagor to sell the property subject to unascertained claims.

It is contended, however, that the appellant can realise the personal security under section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question would depend upon the construction of the security bond. The bond is in accordance with the rules of the Court and is set out at page 10 of the paper-book. It sets out that the surety is bound in the sum of Rs. 4,000 to the appellant and to the Registrar of the Court to be paid to them, etc. It then goes on to say that the said surety shall pay the costs up to Rs. 4,000, and, on such payment, the bond will become void, and, in default, the mortgaged properties will be sold. We think that this does create a personal liability, and, if the appellant gives up his rights as mortgagee and does not seek to sell the mortgaged properties as such, he can realise the amount of costs up to Rs. 4,000 from the person and other properties of the surety. The application made by the appellant was for recovery of the costs from the person and property of the surety, and so far she was within her rights. She, however, wanted to sell the mortgaged properties and described them as such, and did not expressly indicate her election to abandon her rights as a mortgagee under the security bond. In this view of the case, we think that the order of the lower Court was so far wrong as it did not allow her to proceed as upon a personal bond. The application, however, was misleading, and we allow the appeal with the qualification stated above, but without costs in either Court. The application for execution will proceed subject to the amendment suggested.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL REVISION APPLICATION No. 53 OF 1911.

July 3, 1914.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25, scope of—Findings of fact—Interference in revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

The powers conferred by section 25 of Act IX of 1887 are wider than those conferred by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where a Small Cause Court decree is based on a finding which is clearly opposed to the evidence, resulting in grave injustice to the defendant, the High Court is not merely justified in exercising, but acts reasonably in the exercise of, its revisional jurisdiction.

Application against the decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Sukkur.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for Opponent No. 1 (c).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision, under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, of a decree for Rs. 219 odd passed against the applicant by the Small Cause Court, Sukkur. The suit was brought against him for recovery of money due in respect of certain tins of butter supplied to the defendant-applicant at Quetta, namely, on the 8th November 1907, 4th December 1907, 5th December 1907 and 2nd June 1909. The defendant alleged that there had been a partnership between him and the plaintiff regarding the sale of butter, in respect of which he had brought a suit for accounts in 1909 at Quetta, and that in that suit the plaintiff had already been allowed a set-off of Rs. 62-2-0 for butter supplied by the plaintiff and that no more was due to him on that account. He pleaded that the claim was res judicata by reason of this suit of 1909. The Judge of the Small Cause Court on this contention raised the issue: "Did plaintiff claim value of butter in respect of Suit No 24 of 1909 of Quetta Court as defendant and did he get Rs. 62-2-0 as set-off?" On this issue he has decided in the negative, and he has accordingly held that it is unnecessary to decide whether the plaintiff's suit is barred as res judicata. The applicant contends inter alia that this decision is erroneous and entirely against the documentary evidence on record.

The learned Judge has recorded no reasons for his decision, nor was he bound to do so under Order XX, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. The grounds for his decision are not, therefore, before us. But it is clear from the record that the only basis on which this decision can be founded is that he believed the statement of the plaintiff that the butter, in respect of which plaintiff obtained this set-off of Rs. 62-2-0, was different from the butter supplied in November and December 1907, in respect of which he brought this present suit. In his deposition the plaintiff says that the butter, in respect of which he obtained this set-off, was sent on three occasions under three separate orders from the defendant and that, though written orders were sent, those have been lost by him. He can show no entry in any book about them and his statement, that the butter now in suit was different from the butter on account of which he obtained this set-off, is entirely uncorroborated, though he says that some of it (namely that in respect of which he claims the sum of Rs. 65-2-0) was given to the defendant in the presence of three other persons. On the other hand, it is clearly shown by the judgment in the Queta suit that this set-off of Rs. 62-2-0 was in respect of butter supplied to the defendant in November and December 1907; and, as the plaintiff admits that this was supplied on three occasions, there is a strong presumption that it was identical with the butter in suit, which is alleged in the plaint to have been supplied on three separate occasions in those two months. It is also noticeable that the value claimed for this butter by the defendant in the Quetta suit namely, Rs. 87-10-0, corresponds very closely with value claimed for the butter in this suit, namely, Rs. 83-10-0. There was dispute in the Quetta suit as to whether this butter was supplied on the partnership account or on a separate account. But, although the Judge appears to have left this point undecided, it is clear from a comparison of paragraph 7 of plaintiff's written statement in that suit, the Commissioners' report therein and the judgment, that this set-off of Rs. 62-2-0 was in respect of butter, the price of which the plaintiff stated then to be Rs. 87-10-0 but in respect of which he was only allowed the amount of Rs. 62-2-0 shown in the plaintiff's accounts. In these circumstances it is, I think, clear that the burden lies strongly on the plaintiff to show that the butter of November and December 1907 included in the present suit was different from the butter of the same months in respect of which he was allowed a set-off. This burden he has clearly not discharged. In his evidence he admits that he has made a mistake regarding the date on which the 4th item of butter was supplied, and that it was really in June 1903 instead of June 1909, as stated in the plaint. Again he contradicts himself as to where the butter for which he claims Rs. 65-2 in the Quetta suit was supplied: first of all he says that it was sent to defendant at Quetta from Sukkur, while afterwards he says that it was given to Rupchand at Sukkur in the presence of three other persons. Again, though he says that the butter of November and December of 1907 in suit was sent to the defendant on orders sent direct by defendant to plaintiff at Sukkur, yet the written order of 8th November 1907 by the defendant to Jiatmal, which was produced by plaintiff himself, is addressed to plaintiff's son, Jiatmal, as Manager of the Edward Dairy at Quetta, and Jiatmal says he can offer no explanation on this point. Finally, the plaintiff has given no explanation as to why the 4th item, in respect of which he claims Rs. 110-4, was not referred to in his written statement in Quetta suit, though the amount had (according to the plaintiff's evidence in Court) been then due for nearly one year. This omission to do so might, according to the ruling in Nawbut Pattak v. Mohesh Narayun Lal (1), be held to debar the present claim in respect of this item, but without going so far as this, it is clear that this omission to mention it, when he was dealing with the question of what was due to him by the defendant, raises a strong presumption against its being really due. In any case, it is impossible to hold that the plaintiff is a trustworthy witness in respect of his claim, and I am strongly of opinion that his uncorroborated word is absolutely insufficient to discharge all the inferences to the contrary arising from the documentary evidence, so as to justify any Court in holding it proved that the butter of November and December 1907 sued for was in fact different from the butter of the same months, in respect of which plaintiff was given the set-off of Rs. 62-2. It is also, in my opinion, clearly unjustifiable to credit the testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses as to the delivery to the defendant of the 4th item of butter, in view of plaintiff's uncertainty as to the time when it was supplied, his omission to mention it in his written statement in the former suit and his non-production of any documentary evidence regarding it, although he and his witnesses Pamandas and Nurmahomed say that a receipt for this butter was actually passed by Rupchand. It is, to say the least, very strange and suspicious that plaintiff should have lost all the documents regarding this item and the alleged three different items for which he got a set-off, though he has kept the documents Exhibits 79 and 81, in respect of the first three items in his plaint. Those documents clearly support defendant's contention that the butter was really obtained from Jiatmal and, as I have already pointed out, the presumption is that this was the same butter in respect of which plaintiff got his set-off in the Quetta suit.

It is no doubt open to question whether a Revisional Court can under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act interfere, merely because it disagrees with a finding of fact by the lower Court. Under that section this Court has power to interfere, if it is not satisfied that the decree was "according to law." In the case of Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha (2) this point was touched on, but left undecided, although (as admitted at page 340 of the report of that case) the real ground for interference was that a finding of fact by the Small Cause Court Judge was held to be entirely unjustified and capricious. In that case the Judge had omitted to give the points for determination and his decision thereon in his judgment, and it was held that this error of law of itself gave the High Court jurisdiction to interfere. In this case there is no such omission, so this technical ground for interference is absent. But it would be absurd to say that in Bai Jasoda's case (2), the Court would not have had good ground for interference, even though the Judge had framed an issue, "Are the khatas in suits proved?" and found this in the negative, instead of merely saying "claim not proved." It would be a reductio ad absurdum to hold the contrary; and I think, having regard to the wide discretionary power vested in a High Court under section 25, it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature that its powers to interfere should be limited entirely to cases where there has been some error of law (strictly so called) of the kind which is required to justify interference in revision under the Civil Procedure Code. It has been held in Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (3), Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha (2), McCarron v. Welti (4) and Turner v. Jagmohan Singh (5), that the powers conferred by section 25 of Act IX of 1887 are wider than those conferred by section 622 of the old Code of the Civil Procedure (corresponding to section 115 of the present Code); and as said in the case of Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (3): "It is undesirable and would be improper for us to attempt, when a power is discretionary, to define the limits within which such power should be exercised. That must depend upon the facts of each individual case." The cardinal principle adopted is that a High Court should only interfere to remedy injustice. No doubt as an ordinary rule, a finding of fact by a Small Cause Court Judge should not be interfered with; but there is, in my opinion, no justification for saying that it should never be interfered with. In my opinion the present decree cannot be said to be one "according to law," if it is based on a finding which is clearly opposed to the evidence, at any rate in a case like this where the appreciation of evidence depends, not on a mere conflict of testimony between certain witnesses, whose demeanour the Judge had an opportunity of observing and whose evidence he is, therefore, in a better position to appreciate than a Revisional Court, but almost entirely on the proper inferences to be drawn from a proved or admitted state of facts. The inferences from the documentary evidence in this case are so dead against the statement of the plaintiff and his evidence was otherwise so unsatisfactory, that the Judge was not legally justified in relying on his uncorroborated assertions regarding the first three items of the butter in suit not being the same as that for which the set-off of Rs. 62-2-0 was allowed in the Quetta suit, or the oral testimony of himself and his witnesses as to the 4th item of butter. It is to my mind a case where the finding clearly results in injustice to the defendant, and in which there are substantial grounds for the interference of the Court with the finding. As a somewhat similar case, I may refer to Turner v. Jagmohan Singh (5), where it is remarked: "The learned Advocate for the respondent in the course of his argument submitted that we should not in revision lightly disturb a finding of fact of the lower Court. We are at one with him in this. But the evidence given for the defence in this case is not controverted, and, if accepted, as it has been by the Court below, furnished a complete answer to the suit. The power of interfering in revision conferred by the Small Cause Courts Act is wide—wider than the power conferred by section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if substantial grounds are shown for the interference of the Court, the Court is not merely justified in exercising, but acts reasonably in the exercise of, its revisional powers. In the present case we are of opinion that a grave injustice would be done if the decree of the Court below were allowed to stand."

For the above reasons, I would reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs. Opponent No. 1 must also bear applicant's costs.

Decree reversed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Partition suit—Agreement appointing trustees to hold plaintiff's share, whether reference to arbitration and adjustment of suit.

An agreement appointing trustees to represent the plaintiff in taking an account from, and effecting partition with, defendant and, thereafter, to hold plaintiff's share in trust for him, does not give the trustees the powers of arbitrator in the matter, and even if it did, it would be a mere agreement to refer to arbitration a matter pending before a Court and would not amount to an adjustment of the dispute within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodharam, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the first Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur, (Chandiram Kotumal) refusing to record an alleged compromise of a suit under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. Plaintiff sued for partition, and among other issues the following were raised:—

4. Has defendant No. 2 any interest in the property of the suit? If so, how much and in what property?

5. What property and how much (property) was left by Khan Bahadur Kadirdad Khan?

6. Has defendant No. 1 incurred any expenses? If so, to what extent, and what effect have those expenses on this suit?

7. Who is liable for costs of the suit?

8. What decree should be passed?

On the 3rd June 1914, the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 signed a document of which the following is a translation:—

The parties beg to state that in the above suit they have effected the following compromise and the Court may be pleased to pass a decree accordingly:

1. On behalf of the plaintiff, Mr. Mahomed Ibrahim Khan, Vazir, Khairpur State, Sind, and Hon'ble Mr. Gulam Mahomed Khan Burgri, Barrister, are appointed trustees. Both these trustees will take account from the defendant re the property in suit and will deposit the amount received towards the share of the plaintiff in Bombay Bank through themselves.

2. The plaintiff will go to England before October 1914. Expenses, etc., thereof will be paid to the plaintiff by the above trustees. When the plaintiff returns from England after passing, examination he will take his moveable and immoveable property and the amount of his share from the trustees and keep the same into his possession.

3. Defendant No. 1 also agrees to and accepts the above arrangements.

4. Each party may bear its own costs of the suit.

5. Defendant No. 2 is given up in this suit.

(Sd.) Agha Ghulam Dastagir Khan.

(Sd.) Ghulam Hussein Kadirdad Khan.

The suit was fixed for hearing on the 4th June, and on that date this document was put in by defendant No. 1's Pleader as a compromise of the suit, which should be acted on by the Court under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff, however, objected to it and asked that the case should go on in Court.

In his examination regarding the agreement, which he admits signing, he says that he understood that the proposed trustees, Mr. Mahomed Ibrahim and Mr. Burgri, as well as the defendent No. 1 would be under Court's control in giving an account, and that, had he known they would not be so, he would not have signed the document. The learned Sub-Judge has held that the document in question is not an adjustment of the case under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, by means of a lawful compromise, and has refused to enforce it and pass a decree in accordance with its terms.

The main question which arises is, whether the suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by this agreement, so as to come within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3. It is quite clear that so far as regards the main issues in the suit, Nos. 5 and 6, and as to the determination of the property which should be awarded to the plaintiff as his share, the agreement in itself makes no actual settlement, but merely appoints two gentlemen as trustees to represent the plaintiff in taking an account from, and effecting partition with, defendant and thereafter to hold plaintiff's share in trust for him until his return from England. It does not give the trustees the powers of arbitrators in the matter and, even if it did, it would be a mere agreement to refer to arbitration a matter pending before a Court, which cannot be treated as an adjustment of the dispute under Order XXIII, rule 3, though an award, or at any rate the acceptance of an award consequent on the arbitration, may be so treated. On this point, we agree with the view taken by Maclean, C.J., in Tincowry Dey v. Fakirchand Dey (1), which has been followed by the Madras High Court in Venkatachellam Reddi v. Rungiah Reddi (2) and by Beaman, J., in Rukhanbai v. Adamji Shaik Rajbhai (3). The same view has also been adopted by Pratt, Judicial Commissioner, in the case of Seumal v. Pursomal (4). As pointed out by the Sub-Judge in his order appealed against, a decree based on such a compromise could not state what relief plaintiff got in respect of his admitted right to a share and would be mere waste paper in regard to the main question at issue. The only matters in dispute which the agreement really settles are issues 4 and 7, which are covered by paragraphs 4 and 5 of the agreement: but these provisions are clearly conditional on the arrangement stated in paragraphs 2 and 3 being accepted and acted on and must fall with that arrangement.

Accordingly the agreement cannot be accepted as adjusting the suit even "in part," viz., in regard to issues 4 and 7.

It is contended by Mr. Wadhumal that the agreement was one by plaintiff to withdraw the suit, which can be inforced under Order XXIII, rule 3, even though he subsequently changed his mind. But the agreement itself says nothing about the suit being withdrawn, and on the contrary asks the Court to pass a decree according to the so-called 'compromise.' And, even supposing there was an agreement to withdraw the suit, this would be a matter falling under Order XXIII, rule 1, and not Order XXIII, rule 3, unless there was some definite compromise which could be embodied in the Court's decree. In this case, as already shown, there is no such compromise.

Accordingly we see no reason to interfere with the lower Court's order and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

KALIANBARTHI—APPLICANT

versus

ROCHANBAI, wife of ISARBARTHI—OPPONENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 158—Application to set aside award—Commencement of period of limitation—Material irregularity—Erroneous decision on point of law.

The period of limitation prescribed by Article 158, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act, 1908, for an application to set aside an award commences to run from the date of submission of the award to the Court, and not from the date of service of the notice.

To give an erroneous decision on a point of law is not necessarily to act illegally or with material irregularity.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Applicant.

Mr. Eupchand Bilaram, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—This application purports to be one to revise an order passed by Fawcett, Additional Judicial Commissioner, ordering an award to be filed. As a matter of fact, no such order was passed by the learned Judge, the procedure laid down by clause 16 of the second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, having been strictly followed. Judgment was given in terms of the award and a decree followed thereon. Mr. Isardas who has appeared for applicant has argued the case as if it were one to revise an order refusing to set aside an award, and we will deal with it as such. Admittedly no appeal lies against such an order, but it is conceivable that there might be a case in which the High Court would be justified in interfering by way of revision and even setting aside the decree. We must, however, be convinced that the lower Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity. Prima facie there seems no case whatever for interference; the error, if there be any, was merely an erroneous decision on a point of law, but Judges have jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as to decide rightly, and to do so is not necessarily to act illegally or with material irregularity; but we have been asked to give a decision on the point of law involved, as being one that frequently arises and on which this Court on its appellate side has not yet given a decision.

The order of reference was passed on the 16th March 1912 and the award was due on the 18th May. On the 15th May, the arbitrators applied for an extension, and the time for filing the award was extended to the 30th June. No notice was given of this extension to the other side; it is not the practice to give such notice. The award was filed in Court on the 30th June during vacation. Notice was ordered to be served on the parties and notice was served on applicant's Pleader on the 13th July. An application for a copy of the award was immediately put in and the copy was delivered on the 15th. The vacation ended on the 15th. On the 18th July, applicant filed what was in clear terms an application to set aside the award on the ground of the arbitrator's misconduct. As it was filed after the period of ten days limited by Article 158 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, it was prima facie the duty of the Court to refuse it; the Court did so, holding it to be time-barred.

Mr. Isardas contends that Article 158, literally construed and strictly applied, operates so harshly and so unjustly that a more generous construction must be sought as the correct one. He points out that the Court is bound to give notice of the filing; such notice must be for the purpose of giving the parties opportunity to file objections; that if the 10 days expire before the notice is actually served, the very object of the notice is defeated; that if we read Article 158 of the Limitation Act with the provisions of clause 10 of the second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, and construe them together as meaning that the period of 10 days is to run from the date of the notice being served, we get a reasonable and fair rule of law. This last contention receives support from a ruling by the Sind Sadar Court in 1897 [Buli widow of Hasari v. Gianchand (1)] and thus demands serious attention.

Under the provisions of the second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, clauses 12-15, the Court has power:—

(1) (1897) Varialsing's Sind Sadar Court Reports 1.

(i) To modify or correct an award.
(ii) To pass orders as to costs.
(iii) To remit the award.
(iv) To set aside an award.

Now an award can be set aside only on the ground either of the corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator, as defined in clause 15 (1) (a) and (c), or that one of the parties has been guilty of specified acts of fraud. And it is clear from the terms of clause 16 that an award cannot be set aside unless an application be made that such be done; for, if the Court sees no cause to remit the award for re-consideration, and no application has been made to set it aside, or the Court has refused such application, then the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award.

While thus the Court has power to modify or correct an award without any restriction as to time, it has no power to set aside an award unless a specific application has been put in within ten days of submitting the award. The words of Article 158 are clear and unmistakable. Even if we were to adopt Mr. Isardas' suggestion to its extreme and were to read the whole of clauses 10 and 16 of the second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code, with Article 158, even then it would, in my opinion, be equally clear that no application to set aside an award could be admitted after the expiration of ten days from the filing of the award.

If we trace back the history of the provisions, we find that there is no reason whatever to suppose that the Legislature has been guilty of saying something that it did not mean. The Indian rules as to arbitration have been copied closely from those obtaining in England; and under the English procedure a notice of motion to set aside an award must be given before the last day of the sittings next after the award has been made; whereas no time is prescribed within which an application to remit an award must be made.

The earliest provisions as to arbitration in India were contained in the Code of Civil Procedure Act VIII of 1859 and in sections 322, 323, 324, a distinction was drawn between modifying, correcting and remitting an award on the one hand, and setting it aside on the other. The second sentence of section 324 provides that "any application to set aside an award shall be made within ten days after the same has been submitted to the Court." Section 320 runs thus:—

"When an award in a suit shall be made either by the arbitrator or arbitrators, or by the umpire, it shall be submitted to the Court under the signature of the person or persons by whom it may be made, together with all proceedings, depositions and exhibits in the case."

By the Limitation Act IX of 1871, the second sentence in section 324 of Act VIII of 1859 was repealed and for it was substituted Article 155:

155. Under the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside an award.	Ten days.	When the award is submitted to the Court, and notice of the submission has been given to the persons and in manner prescribed by the High Court.

The last 19 words of the third column present some difficulty. It is evident that they referred to a special rule of one or more of the High Courts In a note to Article 158 in Starling's Limitation Act, 1877, there is a reference to an old rule, No. 155 of the Bombay High Court, whereunder either party might, on notice to the other, submit the award to a Judge in Chambers. Considerable difficulty arose in the application of this rule in view of Article 155 for "submitted to the Court" meant "handed in to the Registrar," while "notice of submission" had reference to a later proceeding before a Judge in Chambers. As the last 19 words of Article 155 were not repeated in Article 158 of the Limitation Act of 1877 and never had any application to Sind, it is unnecessary for us to attempt to discover what they meant.

Sections 516 and 522 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), which came into force on the 1st October 1877, run thus:—

"516. When an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them; and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties."

"522. If the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for re-consideration in manner aforesaid, and if no application has been made to set aside the award, or if the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to give judgment according to the award, etc., etc."

On the same date, the 1st October 1877, the Limitation Act XV of 1877 came into force and Article 158 was as follows:—

158. Under the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside an award (Civil Procedure Code, section 522.)	Ten days.	When the award is submitted to the Court.

Now to file a paper on the part of a party is to place it in the official custody of the Clerk of the Court. To file on the part of the clerk is to duly place among the records of the Court with all proper endorsements, entries in registers, etc. To "file an award" "to cause an award to be filed," "to submit an award to the Court" and "to present an award to the Court" are all synonymous terms. In the Indian Arbitration Act, the word "file" is used indifferently to mean either the act of the arbitrator or party or the act of the Court staff.

It would be difficult to devise expressions which would declare more clearly the intention of the Legislature that the period of limitation was to run from the date of submission of the award to the Court, and not from the date of service of the notice. The suggestion that the last 19 words of the old Article 155 were transferred to section 516, Civil Procedure Code, has no foundation. "Notice of the filing" in section 516 was quite different thing from "notice of the submission" in Article 155.

Nor has any case of "hardship" been made out. If parties choose to withdraw a suit from the Court and submit it to a private tribunal, they must be presumed to have satisfied themselves that the arbitrators selected are thoroughly trustworthy and that the other side can be relied on to conduct their case honourably and with reasonable expedition, though free from the discipline of the Court. The cases in which misconduct on the part of the arbitrator or of one of the parties such as to invalidate the award actually occurs, are in practice rare and it may be fairly assumed that when such misconduct occurs, the aggrieved party is stimulated to a high degree of watchfulness and no award can be filed without his being immediately aware of it. Where no such attitude of watchfulness is maintained, it may fairly be inferred that the grievance is merely technical. Section 18 of the Limitation Act adequately protects an aggrieved party from the fraudulent concealment of any misconduct entitling him to relief. But where there is no fraudulent concealment, vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt.

If we look at the matter from the point of view of the arbitrator, the limitation imposed appears wholly reasonable. It would be most unfair to the arbitrator, and most inexpedient in the interests of arbitration, to expose an arbitrator to the risk of being called on to answer to a charge of misconduct, which may seriously affect his reputation as a competent and honourable man of business, weeks or perhaps months after he had destroyed his notes and dismissed the matter from his memory, by leaving the period of limitation extensible indefinitely by the slackness of one party or the deliberate evasion of service by the other. If a charge is to be brought at all, it must be brought with the utmost promptness: the period of limitation of the arbitrator's liability must be absolutely definite and brief.

As no case has been made out for our interference by way of revision, we dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

chase goods—Failure to take delivery—Breach of contract—Re-sale—Ascertainment of goods—Damages, principle of assessing—Pleadings in mofussil—Practice.

The High Court sitting in second appeal and dealing with pleadings in the mofussil will not be so strict as it would be in cases from the original side of the High Court Angullia v. Sassoon & Co, 13 Ind. Cas. 705; 39 C. 568; 16 C. W. N. 593, referred to.

The defendant at Chittagong agreed by a written contract to purchase from the plaintiffs a certain quantity of Cocoanada chillies Ex. S.S. Lawada at a specified rate. The contract, after reciting the terms for payment of price, provided that on failure to fulfil the above terms, the difference of market-value would be recoverable by the sellers on a week's notice. There was a note also to the effect that re-sale was to be at the option of the sellers. The chillies arrived at Chittagong on the steamer Kotaria, having been transhipped at Calcutta from the steamer Lawada. The defendant was given notice to take delivery, which he failed to do. The plaintiffs sued for damages for breach of contract:

Held (1) that section 107 of the Contract Act applied;

(2) that the plaintiffs acquired their right of re-sale by the contract itself and, therefore, had no need to invoke section 107;

(3) that the principle of assessing damages laid down by section 107 and by the Allahabad High Court in Prag Narain v. Mul Chand, 19 A. 535 at p. 541, must be kept in view in this case;

(4) that the fact that the quantity of chillies brought to Chittagong formed part of a large consignment of chillies Ex. S.S. Lawada, did not affect the quantity which reached Chittagong, Ex. S.S. Lawada on another steamer and which, the notices said, was set apart and appropriated to the defendant's use Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated 22nd March 1911, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, second Court, Chittagong, dated 31st August 1910.

FACTS.—The material facts of the case were these: The defendant in suit by a written contract, dated 14th July 1909, bought 302 maunds of Cocoanada chillies at Rs. 17-4 per maund from the plaintiffs. The contract was in this form:—

AGREEMENT.

Dated Chittagong, 14th July 1909.

Sellers.—Ebrahim Soleman Salehji and Company.

Buyers.—Kaji Arabar Rahaman and Company of Feni.

Goods.—Cocoanada chillies Ex. S.S. Lawada, voyage 160.

Quantity.—(302) three hundred and two maunds.

Rate.—Rs. 17-4. Rupees seventeen, annas four only per maund.

Earnest money—(if any)—Rs. 302, three hundred and two only.

TERMS.

1. Goods deliverable Ex—godown within 2 days from steamer's arrival at Chittagong.

2. Price to be paid before delivery in all cases in cash. In special cases of credit, the price to bear interest at...per month.

3. On failure to fulfil the above terms, difference of market value to be recoverable by the sellers on a week's notice.

N. B.—Re-sale to be at the option of the sellers.

On 19th July chillies arrived at Chittagong on the steamer Katoria having been transhipped at Calcutta from the steamer Lawada. On 21st July the plaintiffs sent a letter to the defendant stating "that chillies you purchased from us arrived here per S.S. Katoria, voyage 284," and asking him to take delivery.

The defendant did not take delivery and the plaintiffs instituted this suit to recover damages for breach of contract.

Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiffs' suit in a modified form and the defendant appealed to the High Court. On the hearing of this appeal, it was pressed on the Court that the plaintiffs should have been held bound to their allegations made in the plaint and not allowed a decree on their right of re-sale as contained in the contract above set forth. This point was not taken in any of the grounds of appeal on behalf of the defendant-appellant and was the occasion for the first observation made by the Court in the course of their judgment.

Babu Ramdayal De, for the Appellant.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Chittagong who, agreeing with the Court of first instance, has held that the defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 450 as damages for breach of contract. He also dismissed the plaintiffs' cross-appeal in respect of the set-off of Rs. 302 but about this there is no further appeal here.

The contract on which the suit is based appears at page 14 of the paper-book, and the questions which arise upon that contract are, firstly, whether upon the plaint the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for any relief except that by re-sale. Many other questions have been raised by the learned Vakil who has appeared for the appellant, some of which do not appear in his grounds of appeal.

It is sufficient for us to say, in the first place, that we cannot be so strict sitting here in second appeal and dealing with pleadings in the moffusil as the learned Judges in the case cited in Angulia v. Sassoon & Co. (1) held it their duty to be in a case from the original side of this Court. But the plaint was apparently based on the right of re-sale and the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation on the same principles as it was given in the case of Prag Narain v. Mul Chand (2).

With reference to the other contentions we will briefly give our opinion. We find that section 107 applies to this case. We think that the plaintiffs did not rescind the contract by the notices, Exhibit 4 and Exhibit 26. No doubt, as was held by the Full Bench in the case of Moll Schutte & Co. v. Luchmi Chand (3), the plaintiffs acquired their right of re-sale by the contract itself and, therefore, had no need to invoke section 107. But the principle of assessing damage laid down by that section and by the Allahabad Court in the case we have above referred to must be kept in view in this case, as the lower Courts have not imposed the full penalty prescribed by the contract, but going on the principles of equity have fixed as the reasonable date a date earlier than that on which the plaintiffs actually re-sold the goods.

It is sought to bring this case within the rule in Angulia v. Sassoon & Co. (1). But apart from what we have alreadyheld as to pleadings in the moffussil, we are unable to hold on the materials before us that the goods were not ascertained or set apart for the defendant's use. The fact that 302 maunds of chillies originally formed part of a larger consignment of chillies Ex. steamship Lawada does not affect the 302 maunds which reached Chittagong Ex. steamship Lawada on another steamer and which the notices say were set apart and appropriated to the defendant's use. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court found this on the facts of the case. He says: "Exhibit 3" (which is not before us), "clearly specified that the chillies purchased by the defendant had arrived, and I think that this was a sufficient notice to the defendant of their arrival," and we may add of their being at his disposal. The grounds of appeal do not in any way raise this question of ascertained goods, and as it is a question which depends largely on facts and was dealt with as we have seen in the lower Appellate Court, we cannot take it any further than we have indicated.

The difference in the identity of the steamer, on which such stress is laid in the written statement and in the grounds of appeal is wholly irrelevant, and we are glad to find that during the very prolonged course of argument this point has not been pressed upon us. The chillies were those shipped in the Lawada, and the particular parcel was transhipped to the steamship Katoria for conveyance to the plaintiffs in Chittagong. We think that the case has been dealt with according to law in the lower Court and a just and proper decision has been arrived at.

Damages have been fixed on the ascertained fall of price as shown by the notice of the 19th August. This is a concession to the defendant against which no cross-objection has been taken.

As regards the order to set-off one decree against the other, we can find no authority that this cannot be done. It is perhaps irregular and should have been left to subsequent execution. But this is a matter of form and not a matter of substance. The appellant can gain no possible advantage, as under Order XXI, rule 18, he is precluded from executing his smaller decree in face of the plaintiff's larger decree and he can only set it off. Then the executing Courts are admittedly the same and the decreeing Courts are only technically different by reason of section 33 of the Small Cause Courts Act, and there is indication in several Bombay rulings that the Small Cause Court would have had jurisdiction to deal with a claim of set-off beyond its own pecuniary jurisdiction.

(3) 25 C. 505, 2 C. W. N. 283.

As regards the alleged error in the decree for costs, the facts are not clearly stated either in the printed book or by the learned Vakil who argued this appeal. We leave it to the lower Court to look into the matter and settle it.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Nattukkottai Chetties—Family property and trade assets, whether distinct.

In the case of Nattukkottai Chetties, their family property should be treated as trade assets, and no distinction should be made between the family property and the trade assets.

Appeal from an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad, at Madura, dated the 8th December 1913, in Execution Application No. 892 of 1913, in Execution Petition No. 95 of 1913 (in Civil Suit No. 154 of 1911 on the file of the Chief Court of Lower Burma).

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge's order cannot be supported. Rule 50 of the Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure relied on by the Subordinate Judge has no application, as no property of the minor defendants not involved in the family trade was sought to be attached or sold.

As regards the contention (accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge) that the family property in Pallateen must be proved to be the assets of the Rangoon Firm (which is not different from the family Firm known as K. P. Firm, it being only a branch of the K. P. Firm), we follow the rulings in Chidambaram Chetty v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) and Appeal Suit No. 169 of 1913 that "in the case of Nathukottai Chetties, their family property should be treated as trade assets" and that no distinction should be made between the family property and the trade assets.

The Subordinate Judge's order is set aside and the Petition No. 892 of 1913 in Execution Application No. 95 of 1913 will stand dismissed with costs in this and in the lower Court, the attachment order being revived.

The execution proceedings are transferred to the file of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga.

Order set aside.

VISHUNATH KUAR v. GAURI SHANKAR.

Babu Puttoo Lal, for the Appellants.
Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Gaya Bakhsh was the owner of a 6-biswas share in several villages. His shares in villages Parsanda and Mahauna were sold by auction in execution of a decree and were purchased by Raghubar Sahai and Dwarka Prasad respectively. At the time of the auction-sale he was holding some sir land in the said villages, in regard to which he entered into an agreement with the auction-purchasers on the 16th Janurry 1899, whereby he limited his possession and enjoyment of the said land to his life-time and agreed that it would revert after his death to the auction-purchasers in consideration of the purchasers allowing him to hold the same rent-free for his life. His shares in the other villages were sold by him to Sheodat Singh on the 13th January 1897. In regard to the sir plots standing in those villages, a similar agreement was executed on the 16th January 1897 whereby Gaya Bakhsh was allowed to hold the same free of rent for his life. Gaya Bakhsh died in March 1910 leaving a nephew Brij Bhukhan Ram. The present suit was filed by the plaintiffs, who are the successors-in-interest of Raghubar Sahai, Dwarka Prasad and Sheodat Singh, for possession of the land granted rent-free to Gaya Bakhsh for his lifetime and for damages, on the allegation that Brij Bhukhan had no right to retain possession of the same. The validity of the above agreements forms one of the important questions at issue in this case.

The sale took place when section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act was in force, by which a right of occupancy was granted to an ex-proprietor in respect of so much of the land in his cultivating occupancy at the time of the sale as the Deputy Commissioner might determine, subject to the payment of rent for land so determined at the rate fixed by the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act. The section did not contain any prohibition against alienation, transfer, or relinquishment of the right of occupancy. But by section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act it was provided that tenants who had lost all proprietary right, whether superior or subordinate, in the lands which they held or cultivated within 30 years next before the thirteenth day of February 1856, would be deemed to possess a heritable, but not a transferable, right of occupancy in the land so held or cultivated on the 24th day of August 1886. Nothing contained in that section, however, affected the terms of an agreement in writing entered into between the landlord and the tenant after the date on which the first Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868) came into force. There was no provision at that time in the Oudh Rent Act that a tenant with a right of occupancy of the kind created by section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act was subject to the same disability as that imposed on certain classes of tenants having a right of occupancy under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act. Section 7A of the Act was added by section 2 of Act IV of 1901 to make it clear that a tenant with a right of occupancy of the kind referred to in section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act was subject to the same disability as tenants having rights of occupancy under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act. An agreement entered into between Gaya Bakhsh and the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs prior to the enactment of section 7A, clause (4), of the Oudh Rent Act cannot, therefore, be regarded as invalid or forbidden by law. A voluntary relinquishment by an ex-proprietary tenant of his right of occupancy in favour of the landlord or the sale of an occupancy tenure by a tenant in favour of his landlord has been held to be vaild and not forbidden by law—Gaya Singh v. Udit Singh (1), Binda Prasad v. Rajendra Prasad (2), Mithan Kunwar v. Musammat Behsa (3), and Hirday Behari v. Prag Tiwari (4)—though a suit to enforce such an agreement to relinquish or sell may not be maintainable.—Bhikham v. Ghasi Ram (5), and Raghubans Sahai v. Brijnandan Lal (6).

In this case Gaya Bakhsh voluntarily relinquished his ex-proprietary rights on the date of the agreement and converted himself into a rent-free grantee, holding for his life under the terms of the agreement. The defendant-appellant, Musammat Vishunath Kuar, and her son, Brij Bhukhan, who died during the pendency of the suit, had no right to take possession of the land after the death of Gaya Bakhsh Singh and must, therefore, be treated as trespassers liable to ejectment through the Civil Court. The other defendants denied that they were in possession of the property in dispute and also opposed the plaintiffs' claim on the grounds urged by Brij Bhukhan. It is admitted that the names of the other defendants are not entered in the revenue papers in respect of the land in suit and it is not shown that they are colluding with Brij Bhukhan and are in possession of the land on his behalf. They cannot, therefore, be made liable for damages or costs.

The appeal of appellants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 is allowed in so far that they will be exempted from the decree. The appeal of appellant No. 1 is dismissed with costs.

MOHAMAD MOHIUDDIN KHAN—AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal to Privy Council—Connected appeals—One appeal allowed, another dismissed—Leave to appeal granted in appeal which was allowed—Other appeal, whether fit case for leave to appeal to be granted.

Two connected first appeals arising out of the same suit were disposed of by the High Court. In one of the appeals the High Court confirmed the decision of the lower Court and in the other reversed it. The same question was involved in both the appeals. Leave for appeal to the Privy Council was given in the one in which the High Court had reversed the judgment of the Court below.

Held, that under the circumstances the other case also was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. Abdur Raoof, for the Applicant:—The connected Appeal No. 29 of 1913 raises the same grounds as this appeal. We are entitled to get a certificate in it as it satisfies the requirements of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. In this appeal, although this Court upheld the decree of the lower Court, a questions of law is involved. This Court in effect decided that we are estopped from raising certain question on account of an award as regards other properties, and I submit that we are thus entitled to appeal.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—It is not enough that the question should be one of law, it is necessary that it must be a substantial question of law.]

Moreover, as we are entitled to appeal in the connected appeal, which is based on the same grounds and in which the same questions will have to be decided, we should be allowed to appeal in this matter also.

Order XLV, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, indicates the general policy of the law. There two suits are allowed to be consolidated for the purposes of appeal if the decision in the two suits is based on the same grounds and raises practically the same questions. Our case is stronger. The appeals in this Court arose out of the same suit and our appeals to the Privy Council raise substantially the same questions in both. The result of not allowing us to appeal in one case will be that on practically the same matters there may be two conflicting decisions one of the Privy Council and one of this Hon'ble Court.

Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Respondents:—In order to entitle the appellant to appeal to the Privy Council, the requirements of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, must be fulfilled. There must be some substantial question of law involved in this appeal, as this Court affirmed the lower Court's decree. The Privy Council may give special leave to appeal, as it is not bound by any such rules, but the powers of this Court as regards certifying are limited to the powers conferred by section 110, Civil Procedure Code.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—Are we not empowered under Order XLV, rule 8, taken together with section 109, clause (c), to certify in cases like the present?]

The scope under which leave to appeal can be granted was indicated by the Privy Council in Motichand v. Ganga Pershad Singh (1). They held that there must be some question of public importance or substantial question of law involved. I submit that the same test should be applied here.

(1) 24 A. 174; 4 Bom. L. R. 159; 6 C. W. N. 362; 29, I. A. 40 (P. C.).

JUDGMENT.—The value of the subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal arises and of the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council exceeds Rs. 10,000, but this Court affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. We have, therefore, to see whether the case fulfills the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The question which is involved in appeal No. 29 is involved in the proposed appeal. Both appeals arise out of the same suit. To a large extent at least the decree of this Court will be wrong in the event of their Lordships of the Privy Council differing from the view taken by this Court in Appeal No. 29. We think, therefore, under the special circumstances of this case that we are justified in certifying that the case is "otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council," and we so certify.

Leave granted.

Hindu Law—Maintenance, agreement embodied in decree or order, effect of—Compromise affecting immoveable property neither registered nor incorporated in decree, value of—Agreement creating future interest in favour of unborn persons, whether valid

A compromise affecting immoveable property cannot be given effect to, if it is neither registered nor incorporated in a decree or order of a Court.

An amount provided as maintenance for a member of a family does not lose its character of being increased or decreased under a change of circumstances as a maintenance allowance by being embodied in an instrument or a decree.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The first defendant in these suits is the present zemindar of Kalahasti, an impartible estate. The 1st plaintiff in Original Suit No. 9 of 1910 and the sole plaintiff in Original Suit No. 17 of 1910 are brothers of the 1st defendant. The 2nd plaintiff in Original Suit No. 9 of 1910 is the minor adopted son of the 1st plaintiff. They brought these suits for a declaration of their rights to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 650 per mensem and for recovery of the same with arrears and interest as a charge upon the estate. They also claimed priority over the mortgage rights of certain mortgagees, who where made parties to the suit, and thus raised questions which need not now be considered as they are not pressed in these appeals. The 1st defendant acknowledged that the plaintiffs were entitled to be maintained out of the estate; but pleaded that the financial condition of the estate was such that he could not afford to give his brothers more than Rs. 400 per mensem, which was in fact the amount that they were receiving during the period when the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards. The lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 400 per mensem during their joint and several lives for the maintenance of their branches of the family and directed that the sums due on account of past and future maintenance at this rate should be recoverable as a charge upon the estate. From this the plaintiffs appeal on the ground that the amount awarded should not have been less than Rs. 650.

The position taken for the appellants is this. The present 1st defendant brought a suit, Original Suit No. 12 of 1890, for partition against the then zemindar Muthu Venkatappa, to which all the brothers were made parties. It ended in a compromise in which the estate was declared to be impartible and the succession to it was declared to be governed by rules of primogeniture. Simultaneously it was agreed that the zemindar's brothers, including the present plaintiffs and the 1st defendant, and their male descendants should be entitled to a maintenance allowance from the income of the estate of Rs. 600 per mensem for the first ten years and of Rs. 700 per mensem thereafter. The District Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise, but on appeal the High Court held in Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim(1) that the stipulations which were outside the scope of the suit should not have been embodied in the decree, and these included the stipulations as to allowances, so they were excluded.

After the death of Muthu Venkatappa, Akkappa succeeded to the zemindari and during his time two of the brothers of Muthu Venkatappa viz., the present 4th defendant and the father of the 6th defendant, brought suits against Akkappa in respect of their maintenance allowances and obtained consent decrees for Rs. 650 per mensem. The other brothers, viz., the 1st plaintiff in Original Suit No. 9 of 1910 and the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 17 of 1910 and the present zemindar, got registered agreements executed (Exhibits A, C and I) with Akkappa in similar terms of Rs. 650 per mensem. On the death of Akkappa the 1st defendant became zemindar.

(1) 18 M. 410.

Now it is urged that the appellants have by virtue of Exhibits A and C, become creditors of the estate and not mere maintenance holders, that the agreements are binding on all the successors of the zemindar who executed them and that, therefore, no less sum than what was agreed upon therein can now be given as maintenance. Further it is argued that the compromise, having been entered into as a settlement of certain claims to portions of the estate, is binding on all who took part in it and their representatives, and creates vested rights in favour of those whose rights are declared in it.

Lastly, it is contended on the evidence that the amount claimed was not excessive and that the estate could well afford it.

On the last point I agree with the Subordinate Judge's opinion that nothing more than Rs. 400 is proper and reasonable for the reasons given in paragraph 10 of his judgment.

As for the other points now taken in the appeals, it is noticeable that Exhibit A, though purporting to have been executed in pursuance of the rasinamah in Original Suit No. 12 of 1890, contains terms very different from the compromise petition (Exhibit D). Not only is the amount of maintenance different in the two documents, as I have already stated, but the periodical instalments in which payments are to be made are different, and Exhibit D states the source to be the income of the zemindari whereas Exhibits A and C provide for recovery of the allowance from the estate as well as its incomes. Exhibits A and C are three years later than Exhibit D.

It is thus impossible to treat Exhibits A and C as having the same force and binding character as a decree in a suit terminating litigation and compromising a bona fide claim to property. Nor can the appellants rely on those terms of the compromise (Exhibit D) which have not passed into a decree or order of Court so far as they affect the immoveable property comprised in the document, as the agreement of compromise was not registered (Vide Ravula Parti Chelamanna v. Ravula Parti Rama Row(2). Exhibits A and C are registeredand purport to be agreements relating to the payment of maintenance allowances, as is distinctly stated in the first clause of the documents.

An amount provided as maintenance for a member of a family does not lose its character as a maintenance allowance by being embodied in an instrument or decree, the character, I mean, of being liable to be increased or decreased under a change of circumstances [Vide Gopikabai v. Dattatraya (3), Subramaniam Pattar v. Vembammal (4), and Maharajah Grees Chund Roy v. Sambhoo-Chand Roy(5)]. For these reasons alone I consider that the Subordinate Judge had power to direct the 1st defendant to pay maintenance at a lower rate than Rs. 650. But as reliance is placed on the binding character of the registered documents under which it is claimed that plaintiffs and their male heirs have acquired a right to an hereditary annuity for all time, I may observe that in so far as Exhibits A and C provide that Seshachalapati and Venkatappa and their male descendants have a vested right to recover the fixed allowances through the present zemindar and after him through the rightful owners of the zemindari or their heirs, assignees, executors, administrators, trustees, etc., from the estate and its incomes by declaring a recurring charge on the Kalahasti estate, these documents create a future interest in immoveable property in favour of persons unborn, and thus impose a restraint upon alienation which is contrary to the principles of Hindu Law. In excluding females and collaterals they provide for a line of succession not according to law, and they are, therefore, invalid. [vide Mukhopadhyay's Law of Perpetuities in British India, pp. 123 to 128 and the Privy Council decision in Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (6)].

I would, therefore, dismiss these appeals with costs.

The 3rd respondent in Appeal No. 216, who got a consent decree in Original Suit No. 33 of 1895 (Exhibit E) on 22nd April 1896 for maintenance allowance of Rs. 650 per mensem, has filed a memorandum of objections claiming priority over the appellant's right, on the ground of his decree being prior in point of time to Exhibit C which is dated 17th November 1896.

In these suits it is unnecessary to determine questions of priority between the various maintenance holders inter se, seeing that their right to receive maintenance rests in the first instance not on their decrees or agreements but on their relationship to the owner of the zemindari.

The objection memorandum in Appeal No. 216 of 1911 is for this reason dismissed with costs. That in Appeal No. 217 is out of time and is also dismissed with costs.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—I agree. I think that considering the income of the zemindari, Rs. 400 is a fair rate of maintenance.

The terms of the compromise in Original Suit No. 12 of 1890 relating to maintenance were not embodied in the decree. It is not those terms that are now sought to be enforced. The subsequent registered agreement of 1896 is so, far as the rate is concerned, only binding on the zemindar who executed it. It is not shown that it was executed under the circumstances which would make it binding on the succeeding zemindars who take the property in their own right.

It was not contended, nor could it be successfully contended, that the maintenance formed such a charge on the zemindari as would preclude the zemindar for the time being from alienating portions of it for necessary purposes. It would be unreasonable to hold in the circumstances that the maintenance is a fixed unvarying amount.

Appeals dismissed.

—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 24—Marriage of minors—Court's duty.

TULSHA DEI v. MAHABIR.

It is no part of a Court's duty under the Guardians and Wards Act to assume direct responsibility for the marriage of a minor of whose person a guardian has been appointed. It would be better if the Court simply declines to either sanction or prohibit the marriage of the minor to a particular person and leaves the parties concerned to settle their disputes among themselves.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 18th of March 1913.

Lala Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this curious dispute are as follow. Rattan Lal Bania died in 1911, leaving a daughter named Chambeli, aged about 16. Sham Lal, brother-in-law of Rattan Lal, applied to be made guardian of her person and was so appointed on 10th October 1912, this Court declining to interfere on 3rd December 1912.

In the meanwhile one Lal Singh, now appellant, came on the scene, alleging that Rattan Lal had betrothed Chambeli to his son some three years before, while Sham Lal wished her to marry a man named Ghisa, who appears to be aged 23 (not 36 as stated in the present appeal). The Court did not go into the question of the previous betrothal, but after getting Ghisa medically examined had up all the parties, Chambeli included, on the 18th March 1913 and allowed her to make her choice. She selected Ghisa, and the Court thereon sanctioned marriage to him, while to satisfy Lal Singh Rs. 125 was deposited in Court by Sham Lal, as being the sum which Lal Singh said he had expended on betrothal ceremonies. The order as to this sum was that Lal Singh could draw it for himself at any time up to a year.

Lal Singh, not unnaturally, appealed against this very summary order of 18th March 1913, and on the 15th May this Court prohibited marriage to Ghisa till further orders. It now transpires that Chambeli had been in fact married to Ghisa on 27th April 1913. She has been since living with Ghisa and, it is said, with the usual result, though this cannot be verified.

The District Judge evidently acted in good faith for what he considered to be the best interests of the girl, but it is no part of a Court's duty under the Guardians and Wards Act to assume direct responsibility of the kind, and it would have been better if the District Judge had simply declined to either sanction or prohibit the marriage to Ghisa, leaving the parties concerned to settle their dispute among themselves. Reference may be made to section 24 of the Act and to the ruling in Bai Diwali v. Moti Karson (1).

However now that the marriage has taken place I decline to still further complicate matters by interference, and the appeal is accordingly rejected. If the sum of Rs. 125 is still in deposit in Court, I think that the District Judge should make it over to Lal Singh, notwithstanding the fact that the prescribed limit of a year has been exceeded. Lal Singh obviously could not prejudice his claim in appeal by applying for the money till that appeal was decided.

With that explanation I leave the lower Court to dispose of the Rs. 125 at its discretion. The appeal is dismissed. No order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Estoppel—Holdings, separate, treated as one—Landlord, action of—Ejectment, notice of, cannot be for part of holding.

Where a landlord has once treated the separate holdings of a tenant as one, by including all of them in one and the same suit for arrears of rent, he is estopped from subsequently issuing a notice of ejectment in respect of some only of those holdings.

In Oudh a notice of ejectment cannot be for a part of a holding.

Karamat Ali v Bihari Lal, 1 Select Decision 1887, distinguished from.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 14th October 1913, reversing the order of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 29th April 1913.

FACTS.—The plaintiff tenant had been holding plot No. 570 since 1305 Fasli at a certain specified amount of rent, and in 1311

Fasli he took from the defendant landlord another plot, No. 623, under a separate agreement. Subsequently the landlord treated the two plots as one holding by instituting a single suit for arrears of rent due in respect of both the plots and by filing a single application under section 61 of the Oudh Rent Act for ejectment of the tenant from both the plots. The tenant, however, satisfied the decree passed against him for arrear of rent and continued to occupy the two plots. The landlord then issued against the tenant a notice of ejectment for 1321 Fasli in respect of plot No. 570 only. The tenant contested the notice, on the ground that it was invalid inasmuch as it was only for a part of his holding. The Court of first instance upheld the notice, while the Commissioner on appeal cancelled it, on the ground that the landlord was by his own action estopped from pleading that the two plots constituted two separate holdings. The matter came up for decision in appeal before the Board of Revenue.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Hem Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to disagree with the Commissioner. The appellant clearly treated the two fields as one holding when he sued for the rent of both in a lump sum setting off collections against the total demand. It is accepted law in Oudh that the notice cannot be for a part of a holding. Selected Decision, File No. 1552 of 1886 [Karamat Ali v. Bihari Lal (1)], does not apply to Oudh law under which the addition of a field to a holding gives a new period.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 6 (1), 8—Holding sold in rent auction—Ryot in possession on date Act came into force, whether still ryot—Kudivaram interest, right to, whether affected by s. 6—Landlord purchasing Kudivaram interest, right of.

A person in possession of ryoti land professing to hold it as a ryot on the date of the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act, gets a permanent right of occupancy.

Therefore, a ryot whose holding was sold away in a rent auction before the Madras Estates Land Act came into force but who continued in possession of such land at the commencement of the Act, obtained a permanent right of occupancy in the holding under section 6, clause (1), of the Act.

The rights to the kudivaram interest as between the rival claimants thereto (other than the landlord who is debarred by section 8 from claiming such interest) are not affected by section 6, clause (1).

Second appeal from the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 71 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvellore, in Original Suit No. 649 of 1906.

Mr. K. N. Aiya, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants are the appellants. They were the tenants of the plaintiff, who is the zemindar of the Egathoor zemin. The plaintiff purchased not only the zemindari from the former zemindar, but he also purchased the kudivaram right in the plaint ryoti lands which the former zemindar had purchased in rent auction-sale of 1900. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen as the purchaser of the kudivaram right from the rent auction purchaser for ejecting the defendants.

This suit was brought in the District Munsif's Court of Tiruvellore about the end of 1906 before the Estates Land Act came into force. The suit was first dismissed by the District Munsif and by the District Judge on appeal. The High Court, on second appeal, held that the decision of the lower Courts against the plaintiff on the fifth issue was wrong and set aside the decree of the lower Courts and remanded the suit for disposal on its merits. The judgment of the High Court is dated 22nd August 1911 after the Estates Land Act came into force. When the case went back to the District Munsif, the defendants raised a fresh contention, namely, that the Madras Act I of 1908 has conferred on them occupancy rights in the land and that the suit ought to be dismissed on that ground. Thereupon two new issues were raised by the District Munsif and they are as follows:

6th issue:—"Whether the defendants are entitled to occupancy rights under Madras Act I of 1908."

7th issue:—"Whether this plea can be raised now."

The learned District Munsif decided the issues in the defendants' favour and dismissed the plaintiff's suit without costs. On appeal, the learned District Judge held on the 6th issue that section 6 of the Estates Land Act protects only those ryots who were in possession on the date of the passing of the Act by reason of their holding over (after the expiry of the period of lease, having never had occupancy right before), that a ryot whose holding had been sold away in rent auction before the Act came into force but who continued in possession is not "a ryot in possession" within the meaning of section 6, clause 1, but is only a trespasser in occupation of ryoti land, and that the word "possession" means "lawful possession" and not merely holding over whilst proceedings for ejectment are in progress. Upon this view, the learned District Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

In Gorakala Kanakaiya v. Janardha Padhai (1), the Full Bench decided that even after a decree in ejectment had been passed against the ryot in favour of the landlord, if the decree had not become final owing to an appeal having been preferred against it and if the said appeal is pending on the date when the Madras Estates Land Act came into force, the ryot is entitled to rely on section 6 and the suit must be decided in his favour against the landlord. In the order of reference to the Full Bench in that case the learned Judges of the Division Bench made the following remarks:—

"The contention that the possession of the defendant ceases in law by a decree for possession against him is a confounding of possession with title and is not worthy of serious notice."

The explanation to section 6 added by section 3 of Act IV of 1909 is as follows:—"For the purpose of this sub-section, the expression 'every ryot now in possession' shall include every person who, having held land as a ryot, continues in possession of such land at the commencement of this Act." It seems to me that the defendants in this case were ryots in possession of ryoti land not being old waste, and continued in possession of such land at the commencement of the Act and that, therefore, according to the plain wording of section 6, clause 1, they obtained a permanent right of occupancy in the holding of which they so continued in possession. Under section 8, clause 1, the landholder who has purchased the kudivaram right in a rent-auction sale has no right to hold it as a royt. Even if he had taken possession as soon as he had purchased it in 1902, the land could not cease to be ryoti land: section 8, clause 3, clearly says that the purchase of the occupancy right by the landholder shall not have the effect of converting ryoti land into private land (see also section 185 of the Act which has, among other provisions, placed stringent restrictions on the conversion of ryoti land into private land). The land being thus ryoti land and the defendants holding the land for the purpose of agriculture (without repudiating their liability to pay rent for the benefit of such occupation, though they may not have had title to occupy it till the passing of the Estates Land Act as against the landholder owing to their kudivaram right having been sold away), the defendants do come under the definition of "ryot" in section 3, clause 15, and can, therefore, claim the benefit of section 6, clause (1). In the case of Markapuli Reddiar v. Thandava Kone (2) Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., held that, "where the landlord bought the tenants' interest at a rent sale held in 1878, the land continued to be ryoti land under section 8 of the Estates Land Act and a person in possession at the time the new Act was passed, acquired occupancy rights under section 6 of the Act." It is contended by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar that that case might have been decided on the ground that the defendant therein had been recognised as tenant by the landholder after the landholder purchased the holding in rent auction (though the defendant was let in only as a Pannai tenant), and hence the defendant in that case was entitled to the benefit of section 6.

But the learned Judges do not base their decision on that narrow ground, but on the broader ground that a person in possession of ryoti land professing to hold it as a ryot on the date of the passing of the Act gets a permanent right of occupancy. Next it is contended that if section 6 be so literally interpreted, it will give the permanent occupancy right to a person in possession, not only against the landlord but also against persons entitled to claim the kudivaram right as against the persons in possession; for instance, a trespasser who had dispossessed the ryot lawfully in possession, say a week before the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act, would acquire a right of occupancy in the land as against the true owner of kudivaram right. I think, however, that though the words "as against the landlord" do not appear in section 6, clause 1, the use of the words "permanent right of occupancy" and the references to the claims of a landlord in several places in that long section clearly indicate that the rights to the kudivaram interest as between rival claimants thereto (other than the landlord who is debarred by section 8 from claiming such interest) were not intended to be affected by section 6, clause 1. It is then said that the landholder in this case sues in ejectment not as landholder, but as purchaser of the kudivaram interest. But if section 8, clause 1, prevents the landholder from setting up a right to hold the land, which he has purchased in rent auction, as a ryot, that is, if it prevents him from getting rid of his status as landholder in respect of the land whose kudivaram right he has purchased in rent auction, his said purchase cannot avail him against the ryot in possession just as it would avail in favour of a third person. I think that this is the principle of the decision in Markappali Reddiar v. Thandava Kone (2) and I am prepared to follow it.

In the result the lower Appellate Court's decree will be reversed and the District Munsif's decree will be restored. There will be no order as to costs under the circumstances of this case.

SPECIAL MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, UMRAEGAON ESTATE, BARA BANKI DISTRICT—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 33—Enhancement of rent, claim for—Construction of document—"Ziada sitani," meaning of—Landlord and tenant, agreement between, interpretation of—Occupancy tenant liable to all incidences attaching to him as such.

Where a landlord enters into an agreement with a tenant binding himself not to commit "ziada sitani," it simply means that there will be no unreasonable enhancement of rent, and not that no enhancement at all shall be made, and thus does not bar an enhancement warranted by the express provisions of the law.

A person declared to be an occupancy tenant must accept the incidences attaching to that tenure.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 13th November 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated 29th May 1913.

FACTS.—At the time of the First Regular Settlement there was a litigation between one Sital Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff, and one Durga Brahmin, the former zemindar and the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants, in which a compromise was ultimately arrived at between the parties, the material portion of which being translated runs as follows:—"I, Sital Singh, agree to give the land entered above at a rent of Rs. 175 per annum to the plaintiff, Durga Brahmin, for ever on condition of payment of rent. I will neither commit extortion (ziada sitani), nor will eject him." On the 21st of May 1870 a decree was, therefore, passed according to the terms given in the compromise. Subsequent to the passing of this decree, the successors-in-interest of Sital Singh attempted on several occasions to eject by notice the successors-in-interest of Durga Brahmin, but on each occasion the notices were cancelled on the ground that the latter were not ordinary tenants but were holding under the compromise above referred to, under the terms of which they could not be ejected. Another notice was issued but cancelled, and the relevant portion of the judgment passed in that case on the 8th of July 1885 by the Extra Assistant Commissioner was as follows:—"As the fields in question are covered by the sulahnama of 21st May 1870, under which the plaintiff has a right of occupancy in them, I cancel the notice of ejectment." The last case of the series was decided by the Commissioner on the 20th of July 1910, in which he cancelled the notice of ejectment on the ground that the present defendants held as occupancy tenants. Nevertheless, the defendants and their predecessors were recorded as ordinary tenants in the khasras of the Recent Regular Settlement of 1301 Fasli and of the First Regular Settlement.

The plaintiff, contenting himself with the result of the long course of the litigation above referred to, treated the defendants as occupancy tenants and brought the present suit under section 33 of the Oudh Rent Act for enhancement of rent, on the ground that the rate of rent paid by them was below that paid by ordinary tenants after allowing the deduction of 12½ per cent. The defence was that section 33 of the Oudh Rent Act was not applicable to the case, inasmuch as the defendants were not occupancy tenants but were holding under a compromise and a decree of the Court dated the 21st of May 1870, as their ancestor had accepted the compromise in consideration of his giving up his proprietary right in land, as they were liable neither to ejectment nor to enhancemet of to rent and as the subsequent decisions of 1885 and 1910 did not create any new right and interfere with those created by the sulahnama.

The Court of first instance found that the defendants were tenants under a special agreement, that both the conditions contained in the sulahnama must hold good, that the Extra Assistant Commissioner's decision of 1885 could not be interpreted as one declaring occupancy rights under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act, and relying upon the decision in the case of Bindal Singh v. Musammat Ilahi Khanam (1) dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The Commissioner, on appeal, held that the decision of 1885 operated as res judicata in the present case, that although it was not clear by that decision as to whether the defendants could be said to be holding as tenants under a special agreement or as occupancy tenants under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act, still the compromise could not be interpreted as one entitling Durga's heirs to hold land for ever at a rent of Rs. 175 per annum, and that, therefore, section 33 of the Oudh Rent Act did apply to the case and the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed. The matter went up further in appeal for decision by the Board of Revenue.

Mr. Fakhar-ud-din Hasan, for the Appellants.

Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I must agree with the Commissioner that the words 'mula sitani' do not necessarily imply that there should be no enhancement whatsoever of the appellant's rent. To my mind it means that there should be no unreasonable enhancement, that the zemindar should make no unfair demand. I do not think that this agreement bars enhancement under the law. Appellant has been found to be an occupancy tenant and must, as the Commissoner says, accept the incidences attaching to that tenure.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 13—Foreign judgment, when suit on, competent in British Courts—

PEBURI VISVANATHA v. KRYMER.

—Decision on merits, when not—Competent jurisdiction, Court of.

A case in which the written statement of the defendant is struck out for his failure to answer interrogatories and he is not permitted to go into the merits at the trial, cannot be said to have been decided on the merits.

Therefore, a plaintiff is not entitled to sue in the Courts in India on a foreign judgment thus obtained.

Quære:—Whether a judgment passed in the exercise of jurisdiction conferred on the High Court in England pursuant to an Act of the Imperial Parliament is the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction for the purpose of section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908?

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 8th September 1914, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court and made in Civil Suit No. 291 of 1913.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Mr. V. Manilamani Pillai), for the Appellant.

Mr. D. Chamier, instructed by Messrs. King and Partridge, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of Bakewell, J., on the original side giving judgment for the plaintiff in a suit on a foreign judgment obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant in the High Court in England. The defendant pleaded among other things that the English Court had no jurisdiction, and that the case was not decided by the English Court on the merits. Bakewell, J., overruled both the defences and gave the plaintiff a decree on the judgment sued on.

It appears from the certified copy of the English judgment filed by the plaintiff that the defendant was ordered to answer interrogatories and failed to do so, and that, therefore, it was ordered that his defence should be struck out and that he should be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and that the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign judgment against him for £425-17*s*.-2*d*. the amount claimed and costs and that judgment was signed accordingly.

Now in this state of things the first question that arises is whether a judgment obtained in this manner was a judgment not given on the merits of the case, within the meaning of section 13 (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which case it is not to be conclusive upon the parties in a subsequent suit. Bakewell, J., has held that it must, in the circumstances, be taken to have been given on the merits, but with great respect we are unable to agree with him. We cannot see how a case, in which the defence or, to use our phraseology, the written statement of the defendant was struck out and he was not permitted to go into the merits at the trial can be said to have been decided on the merits. In The Delta (1) Sir Robert Phillimore overruled a plea of res judicata by reason of a foreign judgment on two grounds, one, that the foreign judgment had not been pronounced when the English suit was instituted and that it was, therefore, merely a case of lis alibi pendens and the second, that the foreign judgment "not having been given on the merits of the case but on matter of form only" could not be set up as a bar to a decision on the merits. A foreign judgment passed in default of appearance was there treated as not being a decree on the merits, as also by Gorell Barnes, J., in Challenge and the Duc d'Aumale (2). It does not seem to us to make any difference whether the default was to enter appearance or to answer interrogatories, when the result of not answering them was to put the defendant in the same position as if he had never entered appearance. There is, however, even more direct authority. In Haigh v. Haigh (3), in refusing to set aside a judgment signed, as the judgment sued on was, after the defence had been struck out for failure to answer interrogatories, Parson, J., said that he had the strongest disinclination that any case should be decided otherwise than upon its merits, but that in the circumstances he could not set aside the judgment. And in Farden v. Richter (4), the Master and the Judge at Chambers set aside a judgment obtained in this way on the default of the defendant to answer interrogatories, and the Court of Appeal restored the judgment on the ground that the affidavit of the defendant in support of the motion to set aside the judgment did not show that he had a defence on the merits. These cases, which apparently were not cited before the learned Judge, appear to us to show that a judgment obtained in such circumstances as the present judgment cannot be considered to have been decided upon the merits.

It has next to be considered how this finding affects the present case. This is a suit on the foreign judgment and not on the original cause of action as appears both from the plaint and the issues; and it is now well settled that in such a suit the cause of action is the legal obligation to satisfy a foreign judgment which complies with the requisite conditions. This was so ruled by Phear and Bayley, JJ., in Heeramonee Dossee v. Promothonath Ghose (5), citing the judgment of Parke, B., in Williams v. Jones (6), and is in accordance with all the later authorities in England. Such a foreign judgment under the terms of our law is not conclusive unless the case be decided on the merits, and a judgment that is not conclusive for this reason cannot of itself constitute a cause of action. Even before the introduction of the statutory provision in the Code of 1877 that foreign judgments not given on the merits should be no bar to a fresh suit here, it had been ruled in Sreehuree Bukshee v. Gopal Chunder Samunt (7), citing Story's Conflict of Laws, that foreign judgments must, in order to be received, finally determine the points in dispute and must be adjudications on the merits. Whether or not this latter statement be in accordance with principle or with recent decisions in England, it has been accepted by the Legislature and embodied in the Code and we are bound to give effect to it. The provisions of the Code of 1877 expressly dealt only with foreign judgments as a bar to a suit, and not as constituting a fresh cause of action. It would, however, be anamolous that different rules as to the recognition of foreign judgment should apply according as it is set up as a bar to a fresh suit or as a fresh cause of action; and the provision, which was added to section 14 by Act VII of 1888, giving the Courts power to inquire into the merits of the case in suits brought on foreign judgments of certain specified Courts is a clear indication that the general provisions of section 14 were considered applicable to suits on foreign judgments as well as to foreign judgments set up in bar to a fresh suit. This question is very fully discussed in Mr. Hukim Chand's 'Res judicata,' where the same conclusion is come to. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue on the foreign judgment in this Court as it was not a decision on the merits.

In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider whether the judgment sued on was the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction for the purposes of section 13 of the Code by reason of its having been passed in the exercise of jurisdiction conferred on the High Court in England pursuant to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, Moazzim Hossein Khan v. Raphael Robinson (8). The utility of such a suit is no doubt much impaired by the decision we have come to, but this is not perhaps to be regretted, as but for the fact that the authority conferring jurisdiction on the High Court in England is the Imperial Parliament to which we are subject, no such suit would lie here for the reasons given by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkot (9). The precise point decided in Moazzim Hossein Khan v. Raphael Robinson (8) might come before the Courts in England if a defendant resident in England were sued there upon a judgment obtained in one of our High Courts under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, which are issued under an Imperial Statute, but no such case has yet arisen. In the result the appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the removal of the defendant from the trusteeship of certain endowed property, for the appointment of new trustees and for an order directing the defendant to file accounts of the trust-property for the years 1904 to 1911 during which he had been in possession.

The property in question was endowed by Muhammad Ali, the father of the plaintiffs and grandfather of the defendant, by a Will executed by him on the 10th October 1897 for certain religious and charitable purposes. The Will appointed Muhammad Ibrahim, the eldest son of the testator, mutawalli or manager of the trust on a salary of Rs. 100 per mensem, and directed that the mutawalli shall keep an account of the income and the expenditure of the entire profits arising out of the dedicated property, get the same checked and signed occasionally by reliable Muhammadans of the neighbourhood and carry on the purposes of the trust in accordance with the provisions of the Will. It further stated that if Muhammad Ibrahim failed to carry out the purposes of the trust or acted dishonestly in the discharge of his duties, he should be removed and any of the other sons of the testator by his second wife should be appointed in his place, if found suitable, or else some other reliable person of his other heirs or members of his brotherhood should be selected for the purposes.

Muhammad Ali died on the 18th October 1897 about a week after the execution of the Will. Muhammad Ibrahim took charge of the endowed property and acted as a mutawalli till his death in 1904. He left a son, Muhammad Nasim, then an infant, and a widow, Musammat Kaniz Sughra, who took charge of the property and administered it as a guardian of the minor till her death. Musammat Zaib-un-nisa, the maternal grandmother of the minor, thereafter stepped into the guardianship, but took no proper steps to carry out the purposes of the trust. The major portion of the income of the waqf property was to be devoted to the maintenance of an Arabic School, but it has been found that the school has a nominal existence and that the salaries of the staff are seldom paid. In fact, the waqf was repudiated in this case on behalf of the defendant. The learned District Judge found that a waqf was lawfully created. He further found that the defendant was a minor, about eight or nine years old, that no accounts of receipts and disbursements were filed by his guardian and that the defendant was disqualified by reason of his minority to act as a mutawalli of the trust. He, therefore, directed the removal of the defendant from the de facto trusteeship, which had been assumed on his behalf by his guardian on the death of Muhammad Ibrahim, the previous mutawalli, and appointed Abdul Karim, another son of Muhammad Ali, as a mutawalli in his place, with an advisory committee of two persons comprising Haji Qurban Ahmad, a Vakil of Bara Banki, and Rahat Husain, a maternal uncle of the minor defendant, to advise the mutawalli and supervise the administration of the trust-property, with power to report to the Court if any case of mismanagement was discovered. He further directed that on the defendant attaining majority he shall take the place of Rahat Husain on the said committee.

The only ground urged on behalf of the defendant in this appeal is that the suit for the removal of a person who is not a mutawalli of the trust-property, is not maintainable under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant had, by his assumption of the management of the trust-property through his guardian, become a de facto trustee of the endowed property. On 10th October 1911 his guardian, Musammat Zaib-un-nisa, filed an account in the Court of the District Judge, Fyzabad, in which Rs. 658 were shown as having been spent for charitable purposes appertaining to the trust. A de facto trustee or a trustee de son tort is subject to the same liabilities, while he is so acting, as a trustee nominated by the author of the trust or appointed in accordance with his directions, and, as held in Budree Das Mukin v. Ohooni Lal Johurry (1), a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure lies against a trustee of an express or constructive trust, whether such trustee be de jure or de son tort. Section 92 of the Code deals with cases where there has been an alleged breach of an express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature or where the direction of a Court is deemed necessary for the administration of such a trust. Where no trustee has been lawfully appointed and the administration of the trust requires that a scheme should be settled and trustees appointed for the administration of the trust, a suit will lie under this section against a person alleged to be in the position of a trustee de son tort. In Jugalkishore v. Lakshmandas Raghunath Das (2), where a certain person assumed the management of a temple to which certain property was attached on the death of a trustee, without having been appointed in the manner directed by the author of the trust, and some of the worshippers of the temple filed a suit with the sanction of the Advocate-General for his removal from the management of the temple on the ground of his misconduct and mismanagement of the trust-property, it was held that by taking charge of the endowment and purporting to manage it as temple property, he had made himself a constructive trustee or a trustee de son tort, liable to the beneficiaries in an action under section 539 of the old Code of Civil Procedure for any of the reliefs therein referred to. As observed by Candy and Fulton, JJ., in that case, "the public may tolerate for a time irregularities in the management of the endowment in which they are interested, but they do not thereby lose their rights, for the law expressly provides that whenever the direction of the Court is deemed necessary they may with proper sanction institute a suit."

In Bishen Chand Basarat v. Syed Nadir Hossein (3), Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee said:—"If there had been any objection that he (that is, the plaintiff) was illegally substituted as trustee, an application might have been made by any person interested in the performance of the trusts to have him removed, and a new trustee appointed by the Court under the Code of 1877." The Code of 1877 corresponded in this matter with the provisions contained in section 539 of the last Code of Civil Procedure and section 92 of the present Code. A suit for the appointment of a new trustee to a temple on the ground that the defendant was not a lawful trustee and that the trusteeship was, therefore, vacant was similarly held by Benson and Ayyangar, JJ., in Neti Rama Jogiah v. Venkatacharlu (4), to be a suit under section 539 of the old Code, being comprised in the words "whenever the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of such trust." The defendant is obviously unfitted by reason of his minority to be allowed to act as a trustee. According to the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, it is a condition to the validity of the appointment of a mutawalli that he should be adult and possessed of a capacity to administer the trust, and even when the office of a mutawalli devolves upon a minor by virtue of a provision in the deed of trust, for example, if the waqfnama provides that the tawliat should be confined to the male descendants of the waqf or the members of a particular family, and it happens that at some time the person on whom the office devolves by virtue of this provision is a minor, the Muhammadan Law requires the Qazi to appoint some person to do the work until the minor attains majority (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, Volume I, pages 445 and 446). A person who is not sui juris and requires a guardian to look after his property cannot be entrusted with the management of a trust. The learned District Judge, therefore, rightly removed the defendant and entrusted the management to Abdul Karim, one of the surviving sons af Muhammad Ali. The committee appointed to advise him in the management comprises an independent legal practitioner of Bara Banki and a maternal uncle of the minor, who will look after the interests of the beneficiaries. The interests of the defendant in the administration of the trust are in no way endangered and the right given to him to step into the committee on attaining majority in the place of his uncle, Rahat Hussain, secures him an opportunity to supervise the administration of the trust when he is of a fit age to do so. The other pleas have not been pressed.

In regard to the cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs-respondents, we see no reason to remove the name of Rahat Husain from the advisory committee. The costs of the plaintiffs ought, however, to have been allowed to them.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. The cross-objections are allowed in so far that the plaintiffs-respondents will be entitled to recover their costs here and below from the defendant-appellant, who will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883), ss 7, 12—Certificate—Suit for balance of loan—Charge on land for improvement of which advance made—Charge, enforceability of—Sale, validity of—Estoppel.

Section 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883) gives various means by which the Collector may, on behalf of the Government, recover the moneys that have been advanced. According to it the land for which the advance is made is a security to the Government for the purpose of securing the re-payment of the improvement charge.

Where the certificate executed by the Collector at the time of the granting of the loan, and registered under section 12 of Act XIX of 1883, stated that for the re-payment of the loan with interest, the immoveable property specified in the margin in addition to the land on which the improvement was to be made, was hypothecated to the Government, the Government obtained under the terms of the Statute read along with the certificate, a perfectly good charge on the land that was hypothecated by the certificate and was entitled to enforce that charge by sale in the ordinary manner.

It would be wrong to say that because the word mortgage was put in the plaint, the rights of the Government are gone.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 25th April 1911. The suit was brought by the plaintiff, the Secretary of State for India in Council, to recover out of certain lands the balance of certain improvement charges and interest remaining due to the plaintiff under the provisions of the Land Improvement Loans Act XIX of 1883. It is quite true that the person who drew up the plaint in this case on behalf of the plaintiff has used the word 'mortgage' in it and that seems to be the ground on which the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court thought that the plaintiff could not recover the money by the sale of the property, and that has been the point urged in the appeal before us. Such a view, I think, would, under money proceedings in this country, be absolutely abortive. The cause of action is to recover money out of the land, whether it is a mortgage or a charge or anything else. The question turns solely upon a construction of Act XIX of 1883. The advance made in this case was made on the 12th May 1896 to one Benode Behari Bose, and the amount advanced was Rs. 500 which was re-payable in instalments. Benode Behary subsequently mortgaged the property to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. They obtained a decree on their mortgage and brought the property to sale in execution and themselves purchased it. They are now the owners of the land, subject to the certificate. The seventh section of the Act (XIX of 1883) gives various means by which the Collector may on behalf of the Government recover the moneys that have been advanced. But I understand that, in a case in this Court on an Act in identically the same terms, namely, the case of Luchmi Narain Singh v. Nand Kishore Lal Das (1), the learned Judges suggested that provisions of this nature can only be enforced where the land is an estate or a tenure. I should certainly like to consider more carefully the provisions of the Act and the case we have been referred to, before I assented to that proposition. These provisions were put in deliberately to entitle the Government to recover the re-payment of the money paid and any view to the contrary would render these provisions in many cases unworkable. But section 7 is important to show that the land is a security to the Government for the purpose of securing the re-payment of the improvement charge. Take for instance, section 7, clause (d): the money may be recovered out of the property comprised in the collateral security. Collateral security suggests that there is another security and that is the principal security. Then, take section 7, clause (2), which deals with the case in which a surety is joined to guarantee the payment. If the surety is called upon by the Government to pay, the surety is entitled to get his money out of the land for the benefit of which the loan had been granted. The document in this case is what is called a certificate and that certificate was executed by the Collector at the time of the granting of the loan. According to the endorsement of the Collector, a copy of the certificate was duly forwarded to the Sub-Registrar for registration under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, that is, in accordance with section 12 of Act XIX of 1883. It seems, therefore, that the certificate has, in fact, been duly registered. This is a form approved of apparently by the Government. It is headed 'the Boards Miscellaneous Form No. 307,*' and under the provisions of section 10 of the Act, the local Government has power with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council to provide as to the nature of the security to be taken for the due application and repayment of the money. We must assume that this document coming from the custody of the Government is a document framed in accordance with section 10 of the Act, and clause 2 (d) of the certificate states that for the re-payment of the loans with interest, the immoveable property specified in the margin in addition to the land on which the improvement is to be made is hypothecated to the Government. There cannot be the slightest doubt that under the terms of the Statute read along with the certificate, the Government obtained a perfectly good charge on the land that was hypothecated by the certificate. It would be altogether wrong for us to say that because the word 'mortgage' is put in the plaint, the rights of the Government are gone. There cannot be a shadow of doubt as to those rights being enforcible. In my opinion, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court ought to be set aside and in lieu thereof, we should make a declaration that the plaintiff is, under and by virtue of Act XIX of 1883 and the certificate, Exhibit I, in the case, entitled to a charge on the land mentioned in the margin of the certificate and on the land on which the improvement has been made, and we should direct that that charge be enforced by sale in the ordinary manner. The respondents in this appeal must pay the costs of this appeal and the costs of the two lower Courts to the appellant.

The ceremonial adoption of Hindu Law and the customary appointment of heir distinguished from each other; and ancestral property defined and explained.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of Sialkot, dated 7th August 1911.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Mehra, who is appellant in this Court, for possession of a plot of land sold by his father, Jawala, to the defendants in 1898. Jawala had been appointed an heir by one Amir and obtained the land in dispute in his capacity as the latter's heir.

It is admitted that the plaintiff was born subsequent to the appointment of Jawala as heir of Amir. On these facts, the Courts below have held that the land in the hands of Jawala was not ancestral qua the plaintiff, and that the latter has no locus standi to impeach the alienation. The plaintiff, having been non-suited in the lower Courts, has preferred a further appeal to this Court and the sole question for our determination is whether the above finding as to the nature of the property is or is not correct.

The point is, so far as we are aware, a novel one and not covered by any direct authority of this Court. The only two judgments of this Court which have been referred to by the lower Court are Fatteh Singh v. Nihal Singh (1) and Tulsi v. Ram Rakha (2), and both of them are inapplicable to the present case.

In the first case, an alienation was effected by an appointed heir and the person contesting it was an agnate of the appointer. As the property had descended from the common ancestor of the appointer and of the plaintiff in that case, the latter was rightly found entitled to attack the alienation which injured his reversionary rights. That case is clearly no authority for the proposition that a son of the appointed heir is similarly entitled to contest an alienation by his father.

The law is clear that in the event of the appointed heir dying childless and leaving no widow, the estate which he inherited from the appointer passes to the male collaterals of the appointer's family if it consists of property over which the appointer had only a restricted power. The judgment in Tulsi v. Ram Rakha (2) lays down the rule that the son of the appointed heir born prior to the appointment has no right to contest an alienation by his father of property received from the appointer.

In the case before us, the plaintiff was, as mentioned above, born after the appointment and the ruling has, therefore, no direct application. But for the reasons set out below we are of opinion that that fact should not make any difference and that the son of an appointee, whether born before or after the appointment of his father, is incompetent to contest an alienation by the latter of the property received from the appointer.

The point being res integra, we have to decide it in accordance with the general principles of customary law. It must be remembered that we are not here dealing with a ceremonial adoption of Hindu Law, in which the adopted son is completely transferred from his natural family and becomes a part and parcel of the adoptive family in the same way as if he were a natural born son. But in the case of the customary appointment of heir, it has been repeatedly held that it does not involve the transplanting of a person from one family to another. The tie of kinship with the natural family is not dissolved and the fiction of blood relationship with the members of the new family has no application to the appointed heir. The relationship established between the appointer and the appointee is a purely personal one and does not extend beyond the contracting parties on either side [vide, inter alia, Vasira v. Kahna (3)].

It follows that the appointer or his male lineal ascendant cannot be called an ancestor of the appointee's son.

As regards the appointee's right to property, it is clear that he does not ordinarily lose his right of succession in his natural family and any property which he inherits from his natural father or any other male lineal ascendant would, undoubtedly, be ancestral qua his sons, and the latter are entitled to set aside an improper alienation of that property made by their father. But the same thing cannot be predicated with respect to the estate which the appointed heir receives from the appointer. If the estate consists of the self-acquired property of the latter, then the appointee becomes an absolute owner of it and has plenary power of disposal over it. If, on the other hand, the estate consists of property over which the appointer had only a restricted power, then the appointed heir takes it subject to the residuary interest which resides in the appointer's reversioners. The property having descended from a common ancestor of the appointer and his reversioners, the latter have the same right of objecting to an alienation made by the appointee as they possessed with respect to an alienation by the appointer. As regards them the property continues to be ancestral and they can protect their reversionary rights by vetoing an improper alienation: vide, Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (4).

(1) 25 P. R. 1901; 28 P. L. R. 1901.
(2) 66 P. R. 1906; 110 P. W. R. 1908.
(3) 111 P. R. 1893

But we do not think that property, whether ancestral or self-acquired, of the appointer, received by the appointed heir, can be regarded as ancestral qua the latter's sons. As regards sons, ancestral property has been defined to mean property inherited from a direct male ancestor, and the point which we have to decide is whether the property in question fulfils the requirements of this definition.

It has already been pointed out that the appointer or his ascendant, who originally held the land, is not an ancestor of the appointee's son and it, therefore, follows that the property originally held by the former cannot be called ancestral property of the latter. If it once descends to, or comes into the hands of the appointee's son, then it would be ancestral qua the grandson, for the very simple reason that it would be inherited from the appointee who is the common ancestor of the son and the grandson. The same remark does not apply to the property in the hands of the appointee.
